A woman who is fond of an afternoon nap was awakened three times by a tinkling sound which she thought was her door bell. Going to the door several times she found no one there, and attributed her annoyance to the mischievous boys of the neighborhood. The third time she carried a pitcher of water and sent its contents—splash!—into the face of—her preacher.

THE ENGLISH SPARROW.

If the Eng'ish sparrow were not such a hardy little rascal, so well able to take care of himself and thrive and multiply, how our pity would go out toward him! Especially might we now allow our generous feelings to flow, when the department of agriculture has just issued a farmer's bulletin in which it has nothing really good to say about this dweller everywhere and offers various means for getting rid of him. But the English sparrow needs no pity, says Rochester Democrat and Chronicle. He will live by grace or without it, and we may expect that, notwithstanding the bulletins, we shall continue always to have him with us, hardy, prolific, bold, cunning, self-reliant and unwashed. The bulletin—and it is sadly in accord with popular experience—represents this active neighbor of human kind as a dyed-in-the-wool criminal among birds. He attacks, it seems, almost every sort of vegetation useful for food, preys on his own kind by destroying their eggs and driving them from gardens and parks and has no melodious pean to offer after his victories. He should be treated as vermin, and reduced in number, even if he cannot be exterminated. To be sure, the bulletin does not offer one forlorn hope. Mr. Dearborn of the biological survey says that he ought to be eaten.

The propositions emanating from the United States, looking to the creation of an international peace court and to the neutralization of the railroads in Manchuria as a step to harmony of all interests in that quarter, have made a profound impression and are regarded as measures of world politics of the highest significance and pointing to most beneficent results. That is the best and noblest of diplomacy, and again illustrates the lead which the United States is taking in seeking to promote good understanding and to safeguard peace among the nations. Aspirations to such "world power" as this, which means the welfare of all mankind, must be approved by even the most stubborn "anti."

According to the later details the one failure at the aviation meet in Los Angeles was that of a government dirigible balloon, which it was found could not hold gas and therefore could not be used in flying. This hints at a weak spot in this class of airships and may strengthen the cause of the aeroplanists, who contend that the heavier-than-air machine, properly constructed and operated, is the real thing. Anyway, it must be admitted that this class of air craft won most of the distinction at the California show.

Mexico reports that its agricultural products last year were worth $330,000,000. That is a very creditable showing, though it looks small alongside of the $8,000,000,000 output of the United States. But, added to the increasing value of the products of Mexican industries of various kinds, it is gratifying as indicating the growth and prosperity of our southern neighbor.

The plea of meaning no harm is one often advanced as an excuse for wrongdoing. A man of average intelligence who intends no wrong will keep within due limits and not take chances of wrong resulting. Many are too often satisfied with this vague and unmeaning excuse to their conscience, but it has little weight either in reason or law.

Figures for the calendar year 1909 show that the trade between the United States and Canada was the largest ever known for an equal period. Moreover, the figures prove that the business done by the countries with each other has doubled in ten years. That does not indicate that either side is barring out the other.

Burbank, the plant wizard, has developed a spineless cactus as a substitute for meat. It is going greatly to simplify matters if one can simply go out in one's garden or back yard and pull one's roast or joint fresh from its growing.

A railroad president puts the blame for the high price of food on women's extravagance. This is such a common excuse for everything wrong in the universe that the wonder of it is no one thought of bringing it forward before.

Thieves in Philadelphia successfully accomplished a robbery by telling admiring police onlookers that they were posing for moving pictures. Childlike trust in one's fellow-creatures is charming, but sometimes most unprofessional.

A few aeroplanes cannot put the Nicaraguans any more in the air than they are now.

The cost of walking is also to go up, according to the shoe manufacturers.

100,000 MEN STRIKE

RIOTS BREAK OUT AT ONCE

Governor Tells Mayor Troops Will Be Ordered to City Whenever Necessary—Serious Trouble Is Anticipated—Two Men Are Shot.

Philadelphia.—A general strike of all the labor unionists in this city, in sympathy with the street car men who have been out for two weeks, was ordered at 12 o'clock Friday night. Just how many men will be out of work as a result could not then be told as there are but very few union or non-union men at work at that hour.

But already the riots of last week had been resumed. Scarcely had the news of "no peace possible" reached the Kensington district from which the State Constabulary has been withdrawn than there was a pitched battle between a mob of sympathizers of the car men strikers. A squad of 60 policemen charged the mob, which numbered about 5,000 mill workers. First the shots were fired over the heads of the mob; but when this did not scare off the rioters a volley was fired directly at the crowd in the street. William Drexel, one of the mill workers, was fatally shot through the abdomen. Another man, Robert Modell, several blocks away, was dangerously wounded in a row.

The Central Labor union declared at the midnight hour that 100,000 places would be vacant. The Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company and other anti-unionists predicted that there would not be more than 40,000 or 50,000 idle men on the streets.

At the same time, though, this word went out from Mayor Reyburn and his under police officers at the city hall:

"To Gov. Stuart, Harrisburg: Please be ready to send troops of National Guard here at an instant's notice."

"To all N. G. P. commands in the state: Please be ready to start for Philadelphia upon moment's notice from governor."

Replies received from the governor and the commanders of the various companion of National Guardsmen indicated that both wires were to be obeyed. The governor answered that he would issue the order for the troops to proceed here whenever it would be necessary. Captains and colonels said they had their men waiting to start at any minute.

As men assembled on street corners and in the neighborhood saloons, the first mutterings of what is feared will be a tumultuous week were heard.

There will certainly be a boycott against the cars and against any tradesmen doing business with the transit company or its strikebreakers and there will be very probably violence worse than that of the early days of last week.

Most of the "locals" of the unions held meetings at which the members pledged that neither they nor any members of their families would ride in cars manned by strikebreakers. They would not deal, they declared, with tradesmen who sold supplies to the companies or the strikebreakers, or who even rode on the non-union cars.

BALLINGER INQUIRY LAGS

Pinchot Again Accuses Secretary with Having Made Misstatements and Deceived Taft.

Washington.—Interest in the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation continued to lag Friday as the cross-examination of Mr. Pinchot by Mr. Vertrees developed little which was not gone over in the evidence.

There was much quibbling between counsel and the witness as to the meaning and interpretation of certain statements Mr. Pinchot had made and opinions as to the understanding of various letters and documents. Mr. Pinchot again accused Secretary Ballinger of having made misstatements.

With reference to his claim that Mr. Ballinger had deceived the president concerning a decision of the comptroller of the treasury, Mr. Pinchot admitted that Mr. Ballinger's written statement to the president was "pretty fair, from Mr. Ballinger's point of view," and that the documents that he submitted were all that properly bore on the case. He insisted, however, there was the "unavoidable inference" that Mr. Ballinger had communicated in some other way with the president.

Mr. Ballinger's lawyer brought out that the co-operative agreement with the forest service, which Mr. Ballinger discontinued, was not the usual arrangement whereby one department lends its employes temporarily to another, but provided that employes of the interior department should be under the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the forester.

Boston Bank Teller Accused.

Boston.—John H. Cullen, teller of the Union Institution for Savings, was arrested Friday at his home in Dorchester charged with a shortage of $1,200 in the accounts of the bank. Cullen was suspended three days ago.

60 PERISH IN A MINE BLAST

EXPLOSION OF POWDER BLOWS MINERS TO FRAGMENTS.

Juneau, Alaska.—By the explosion of a powder magazine in the Mexican shaft of the Treadwell mines Thursday, 60 miners, caught like rats in a trap, at the 1,100-foot level, with no possible chance of escape, were blown to fragments and 100 others were seriously injured, many of whom it is feared may die.

The bodies of the dead were blown into unrecognizable masses of human flesh. The scene when a rescuing party descended to the level, was indescribable. The dead were lying around, piled one on the top of the other and the groans and screams of the injured were heartrending.

It is believed that more of the injured will succumb to their injuries. There is a deplorable lack of medical men and in the company hospitals, which are crowded to the limit, the mangled miners are suffering for want of medical attention.

The cause of the accident is not known at this time. It is believed, however, that the explosion is the result of a miner's lamp coming in contact with the powder magazine. Not a man in the portion of the mine where the explosion occurred escaped injury.

The scenes about the mouth of the mine are pitiful. The families of the miners are gathered about the entrance to the shaft and as the bodies are carried from the death trap, there is a wild rush to get near enough to make an effort at identification.

So badly are the bodies torn and mangled that the only possible means of identification in most cases has been by the clothing or property found in the pockets.

EXPOSES BIG OLEO FRAUDS

Witness Links Representative Moxley's Firm with Illicit Dealers Who Are Under Indictment.

Chicago.—Sensation after sensation broke out in the oleomargarine scandal Thursday. Chief of the disclosures consisted of a detailed account under oath by an employe of William Broadwell of the relations of William J. Moxley, Inc., manufacturer of butterine, with the illicit dealers now under indictment for coloring oleomargarine and selling the colored product without paying to the government the tax of ten cents a pound required by the federate statute.

The testimony implicating the Moxley house was given by William Bortz, who, with Samuel Driesbach, appeared before Judge Landis to plead guilty and receive sentence.

Bortz swore that the Moxley business concern sold to Broadwell the uncolored butterine, delivering it after seven o'clock at night, gave away with it the coloring matter in bottles, told Broadwell's employes how to use it, even to the point of telling them to cover up the holes of the store where it was mixed so no light could shine through, and also sold wrappers for one-pound packages stamped:

"Inspected and Passed by the Pure Food Department of the United States Government."

Witness also testified that Moxley's people delivered these wrappers after the evening closing hours.

INDICTED BEEF MAN PLEADS

Frederick W. Cooper Answers Not Guilty to New Jersey Indictment.

New York.—The first personal appearance of one of the indicted packing company officials occurred when Frederick B. Cooper, a director and eastern agent of Swift & Co. of Chicago, came into Judge Blair's court, accompanied by his attorneys, and pleaded not guilty. The plea was accompanied by reservation of the privilege of withdrawal for the purpose of demurring. Mr. Cooper's attorney said that his client appeared as an individual and not for Swift & Co. Judge Blair fixed bail at $2,500.

IN TRANCE FOR 56 HOURS

Youth at Saginaw, Placed Under Hypnotic Spell by Telephone, Cannot Be Aroused.

Saginaw, Mich.—A sensation was caused here when the police removed from the show window of a local music house David Anderson, a young man who had lain in trance for 56 hours under the hypnotic influence of a man styling himself Prof. Powers. The authorities are trying to arouse Anderson, but he is insensible to every device employed, and lies like one dead in a room in the Wesley hotel.

Anderson was put under the hypnotic spell Saturday evening by long distance telephone from Lansing.

WEALTH IS TO AID HUMANITY

ROCKEFELLER PLANS GREAT CORPORATION FOR HIS FORTUNE.

Bill Introduced in Congress Provides for an Organization Which Will Benefit Mankind.

Under the provision of a bill introduced in the Senate Wednesday by Senator Jacob H. Gallinger of New Hampshire the oil king seeks a federal incorporation act for his wealth, with a view to distributing it under proper supervision for the good of mankind. The object of the foundation is to provide for a general organization to conduct philanthropic work along all lines.

According to the bill the Rockefeller foundation is organized for these purposes: To promote the well-being and advance the civilization of the people of the United States and its possessions in foreign lands; for the acquisition and dissemination of knowledge; for the prevention of any and all of the elements of human knowledge.

These men are authorized to select associates not to exceed 25, and it is provided that there shall not be at any time fewer than five.

Headquarters of the foundation are to be in Washington.

"It is the evident intention of Mr. Rockefeller to provide a means of expending his wealth to the best advantage of the largest number of people," said Senator Gallinger.

It was stated by the senator that Mr. Rockefeller already had given away $52,000,000.

The proposed foundation is to be organized along lines similar to the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

CANNON DINES WITH TAFT

Speaker Is Entertained at White House for First Time in Many Years.

Washington.—President Taft gave a dinner last night at the White House in honor of Speaker Cannon. Socially and politically the affair marked something of an epoch, for not before in many years has a president entertained in honor of the speaker of the house of representatives.

Speaker Cannon was never entertained at the White House with an exclusive official function during all of the seven years of President Roosevelt's occupancy, and no previous affair has been given in his honor by President Taft.

Washington.—President Taft gave Representative Bartholdt of Missouri, chairman of the house committee on public buildings and grounds, his approval of a public-building bill carrying not more than $12,000,000 to be passed at this session of congress. The president was given to understand that the measure would provide only for projects which are urgently necessary.

100 DEAD IN SLIDE HORROR

Seattle, Wash.—Horror is added to horror as the details of the Wellington avalanche disaster unfold with the disclosure of an increasing death list. The dead doubtless will number 100.

Forty bodies have been recovered, 14 of which have been identified. The Great Northern's Seattle management, following the checking and summary of its latest telegram reports from Scenic Hot Springs with which point it has been continuously in communication, gave out the number of identified dead as 14, the number of injured 19, and with 70 missing.

The last message received by the Great Northern from its official at Scenic Hot Springs in giving the number of casualties, dead, injured and missing, significantly and sadly concluded with the words: "The missing may be regarded as dead."

In view of this significant statement coming from an official of the railway at the scene of the wreck, but little or no hope is held out as regards the missing by Great Northern officials.

None of the injured, it is believed, will die, though some of the employes were seriously hurt. The known surviving passengers escaped with but slight injuries. About half of the missing are employes of the road and the remainder were train passengers.

ORIENTAL LIMITED WRECKED

Great Northern Train Plunges Down 50-Foot Embankment—Fireman Killed—Several Persons Hurt.

Spokane, Wash.—Crashing into two ton of rock bowlders, the Oriental Limited No. 2, the crack east-bound train of the Great Northern railroad, plunged down a 50-foot embankment 22 miles east of Spokane, carrying with it five burning cars, killing Fireman Ed Miller of Hillyard, seriously injured the engineer and several passengers and precipitating the entire train except three coaches in a burning mass 50 feet below.

The accident occurred just two and a half miles west of Milan, a station on the main line, as the train was turning a treacherous curve. Rock bowlders were part of the landslipe which, it is believed, was started by the rumble of the approaching train.

STOMACH CENTER OF HUMAN LIFE—ALL ELSE SECONDARY

The immense success which has followed L. T. Cooper during the past year with his new preparation has exceeded anything of the kind ever before witnessed in most of the leading cities where the young man has introduced the medicine. Cooper has a novel theory. He believes that the human stomach is directly responsible for most disease. To quote his own words from an interview upon his arrival in an eastern city: "The average man or woman cannot be sick if the stomach is working properly. To be sure, there are diseases of a virulent nature, such as cancer, tuberculosis, diabetes, etc., which are organic, and are not traceable to the stomach, but even fevers can, in nine cases out of ten, be traced to something taken into the stomach. All of this half-sick, nervous exhaustion that is now so common, is caused by stomachic conditions, and it is because my remedy will and does regulate the stomach that I am meeting with such success.

"To sum the matter up—a sound digestive apparatus that is doing its full duty, getting every particle of vitality out of the food by transferring it to the bowels in a perfectly digested state—this above all else brings health."

Mr. A. C. Brock, chef of the Brock Restaurant, Market District, Boston, Mass., who is a staunch believer in Mr. Cooper's theory and medicine, has this to say: "I had chronic indigestion for over three years. I suffered terribly, and lost about thirty pounds. I was a physical wreck when I started this Cooper medicine, a month or so ago. To-day I am as well as I ever was in my life. I am no longer nervous, my food does not distress me in the least, and I have a splendid appetite. I am gaining flesh very rapidly—in fact, at the rate of a pound a day. I would not believe any medicine on earth could have done for me what this has done. It is a remarkable preparation, and Mr. Cooper deserves all his success."

DOUBLE REWARD OF VIRTUE

Love Story Written by Small Boy at Least Brought Things to a Happy Conclusion.

Apropos of love stories in general, Jerome S. McWade, the well-known Duluth connoisseur, said at a recent dinner:

"At the approach of Valentine day last year I offered a prize of five dollars to the little boys of my Sunday school class for the best short love story. I have one of the stories here, and I am going to read it to you."

Mr. McWade then read:

"A poor man fell in love with a lady whose mother was a rich toy dealer.

"The poor man could not marry the rich lady, because he had no money.

"A villain then offered him $50 if he would become a drunkard.

"The poor man wanted the money to get married with, so he agreed, but when he got to the beer saloon he said:

"'No, I will not become a drunkard, even for great riches.'

"On the way home he found a bag of gold. So the young lady married him. It was a splendid wedding, and the next day they had twins.

The farmer of today buys a much larger proportion of the food that goes on the table than he did ten years ago. It's a good thing that this is so because he has a great variety to select from.

He should, however, use great care in selecting for the best results in health and strength.

The widespread tendency in the city to increase the amount of Quaker Oats eaten is due very largely to the recent demonstrations by scientific men that the Quaker Oats fed man is the man with greatest physical endurance and greatest mental vigor.

Farmers should give this subject careful thought and should increase the quantity of Quaker Oats eaten by themselves, their children and the farm hands. 57

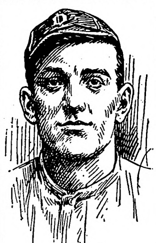
NOT A FAST MAN ON THE BASES, BUT ONE WHO STUDIES THE PITCHER.

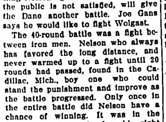
There are faster base runners than George Moriarty of the Detroit team, but mighty few fellows have a brain that moves more quickly. At least five times last year Moriarty pulled off the seemingly impossible feat of stealing home. In each instance he took a desperate chance and succeeded. He did not jump wildly at the deed, but used every ounce of gray matter to make his efforts possible. Strangely enough in each game the stealing of home proved the turning point in the contest, making a Tiger victory certain.

Moriarty always made a study of the pitcher when reaching first base. If he was slow in delivering the ball, he was quick to take advantage of the fact. Neither did Moriarty pass up the catchers in his base running. If he discovered that every now and then the receiver would just about toss the ball back to the pitcher, he would start the delayed steal. It's safe to say that the Tiger's thirdsacker pulled off the delayed steal as much if not more than any other man in the country.

The five thefts of home made by Moriarty were due to the big lead he secured and the long swing indulged in by the pitcher preparatory to delivering the ball. Just as soon as Moriarty discovered that the pitcher was indulging in a longer wind up than usual he would start to slowly edge up to the plate, allowing the pitcher to deliver sometimes as many as four or five balls before making the dash for home. The Detroit third sacker isn't slow on the paths by any means, but the celerity of his brain makes him a more dangerous man on the bases than players with much greater speed. Any time he reached third last year the umpire behind the plate set himself for a decision at the plate, as he looked for Moriarty to take the chance.



George Moriarty.



Ad Wolgast, new champion lightweight pugilist of the world says he will defend the title he won from Battling Nelson against all comers and if the public is not satisfied, will give the Dane another battle. Joe Gans says he would like to fight Wolgast.

The 40-round battle was a fight between iron men. Nelson who always has favored the long distance, and never warmed up to a fight until 20 rounds had passed, found in the Cadillac, Mich., boy one who could stand the punishment and improve as the battle progressed. Only once in the entire battle did Nelson have a chance of winning. It was in the twenty-second round when his right found Wolgast's chin and he sent the Michigan lad to his knees. Again he shook him up with a hard smash and it looked as if the Dane would win. Wolgast came back for more, however, and when the twenty-third round came, it was seen that the Battler had shot his bolt. There never has been a harder or more vicious fight in the American ring. It was a foul battle, both using their heads in butting.

Nelson wants another fight and says he will reverse the decision next time. He has been fighting nearly 14 years, and Wolgast has been in the ring about four. It would seem a wise thing for Nelson to give up the game now, as he has a fortune of more than $100,000. Nelson got $12,000, and one third interest in the fight pictures for being defeated, while Wolgast pulls down only $4,750 for his share. Nelson as champion dictated the terms. Now it is Wolgast who is in a position to take the lion's share next time. The pictures should bring Nelson $25,000 more. Each boy bet heavily on himself.

San Francisco will get the Jeffries-Johnson fight and I can say "I told you so." Gleason and Rickard, the promoters, have gotten together and have come to the conclusion that the Pacific coast metropolis is the only place for the battle. Salt Lake City is eliminated from further consideration and all that remains to be done is to select the site for the ring. Richmond, the site of the Nelson-Wolgast battle, is under consideration.

Jeffries is back on California soil about $60,000 better off after his long theatrical tour. The big fellow will go into training in a few days on his ranch near Los Angeles. He will do some hunting in the mountains and work principally for his wind. Jeff's old friends around Los Angeles expressed great surprise when they saw him after an absence of nearly a year. The huge abdomen that had come naturally from easy living had disappeared, his eye was clear and he looked as if he was ready to enter the ring right now, but of course he isn't, and won't be for months. Jeffries realizes that it is going to take lots of hard work to get into the proper trim to bring the championship title back to the white race, and he will overlook nothing in his efforts to do so. He is a glutton for work when in training and his assistants have rough sledding when they attempt to follow his pace.

Some interesting dope on the two battlers has been culled from the records of Jeffries and Johnson by a New York expert. You will see that Jeffries is a quicker winner over the knockout route than Johnson. Jeff averaged 5 14-15 rounds to the knockout, while the colored man figured 6 1-3 rounds.

DIAMOND GOSSIP

It was reported, but denied, that there was a threat to disrupt the National league and that this threat is what brought the adoption of the 154 game schedule at the New York meeting. According to the story, Pittsburg, Cincinnati and other clubs were going to jump to the American, which would have been reorganized into a 12 team league. Something of this kind is going to happen some of these days, for the rivalry between the two organizations is growing stronger each year, and the dissension in the National seems to indicate that it is the American that will benefit.

In a few days nearly all of the big league teams will be actively at practice. The New York Giants were first to don the uniform. McGraw has his squad at Marlin Springs, Tex., and believes the early start will be beneficial. The Chicago Sox have gone to California and soon the crack of the war club will be heard on the training fields of all the teams.

There will be seven teams in the big leagues this season with new managers as leaders, and the result of the changes will be watched with a great deal of interest.

Three new leaders will be found in the National league—Charles Dooin of the Phillies; "Bad Bill" Dahlen of Brooklyn, and Fred Lake of the Bostonians.

Four of the American league clubs will have new managers—"Pat" Donovan of the Boston Americans; Hugh Duffy of the Chicago White Sox, "Jack O'Connor of St. Louis, and J. McAleer of Washington.

American League—Athletics, Connie Mack; Boston, Pat Donovan; New York, George Stallings; Washington, J. McAleer; Cleveland, J. McGuire; St. Louis, Jack O'Connor; Detroit, H. Jennings; Chicago, H. Duffy.

The following is a list of the one-hit games that were pitched last year in the major leagues, with the added information regarding the men who kept the twirlers from getting into the Pitchers' Hall of Fame.

American League—April 14, Mullin of Detroit, against Chicago; lone hit made by Cravath. April 2, Coombs of Philadelphia, against Boston; lone hit made by Speaker. June 8, Joss of Cleveland, against Philadelphia; lone hit made by Murphy. June 20, Walsh of Chicago, against Cleveland; lone hit made by Turner. July 21, Burns of Chicago, against Washington; lone hit made by Clymer. August 28, Gray of Washington, against Chicago; lone hit made by Dougherty; Chicago won this game, 6 to 4, Gray issuing 11 passes to first base. September 11, Brockett of New York, against washington; lone hit made by Lelivelt after two strikes were recorded against him.

National League—April 25, Camnitz of Pittsburg, against Cincinnati; lone hit made by Mitchell. May 21, Overall of Chicago, against Boston; lone hit made by Sweeney. June 26, Ruelbach of Chicago, against Cincinnati; lone hit made by Mowrey, Ruelbach knocking down his liner, but being unable to field it to first in time to get the hitsmith. July 10, Fromme of Cincinnati, against Brooklyn; lone hit made by Alperman. July 12, Camnitz of Pittsburg, against New York; lone hit made by Marquard; Pirate infielders laid back, expecting the New York pitcher to hit the ball out and he bunted. July 28, Pastorious of Brooklyn, against Philadelphia; lone hit made by Martell, who batted for Titus in the ninth inning; this was the only game Lefty won for the Superbas during the year. July 31, Wiltse of New York, against Philadelphia; lone hit made by Wilson. August 1, Mordecai Brown of Chicago, against Philadelphia; lone hit made by Bransfield. September 14, Mordecai Brown of Chicago, against Cincinnati; lone hit made by Egan. September 18, Willis of Pittsburg, against Brooklyn; lone hit made by Wheat.

UMPIRES FOR THE NATIONAL

Brennan and Moran the New Members of President Lynch's Staff This Year.

The board of directors of the National league fined the Philadelphia club $250 for the forfeiture of the game with New York at the polo grounds on October 4, fined Capt. Doolan of the Phillies $100 for unseemly conduct in the same game, and approved the list of umpires selected by President Lynch.

The umpires for the coming year will include only two new men. Henry O'Day, Robert Emslie, James E. Johnstone, Charles Rigler, William J. Klem and Stephen J. Kane have been reappointed. The new men are William Brennan from the Wisconsin-Illinois league and Gus Moran, who last year umpired in the Southern league. The double umpire system will be employed throughout the season. Brennan was tried out last fall.

LESS DANGER IN ENGLAND

Statistics Show Only Two Persons Were Killed in Athletics in Britain Last Year.

When the small number of fatalities of all branches of sport in England is considered, America suffers by comparison. It is interesting to note in the recent statistics which have been given out at Oxford university, England, that only two deaths have been reported from participation in college athletics at the various institutions in England.

Dr. Brooks of Oxford, who made the inquiry, has tabulated his returns from those in charge of athletics at the various English colleges and numerous schools, and in the last 20 years there were only five deaths that could in any way be attributed to participation in athletics.

Donaldson Breaks World Record.

Donaldson, the South African sprinter, broke the world's professional record for 100 yards, defeating Arthur Postle, the world's professional champion, of Australia, and C. Holway, the American, in 9 3-8 seconds at Johannesburg, South Africa. Donaldson won by 2½ yards less than a yard separating second and third man. The previous record was held by Bethune and Johnson, who covered the distance in 9 4-5 seconds.

Sabine Rarebit Best Dog.

For the fourth successive year a smooth fox terrier has been judged the best dog regardless of age, breed or sex, at the annual bench show of the Westminster Kennel club in Madison Square Garden. The honor has been awarded this year to Sabine Rarebit, owned by F. H. Towler, of Orange, Tex.

Say McGovern Is Cured.

Terry McGovern, who has been confined in a sanitarium at central Islip for eight months, is out again, and has been pronounced as cured by the physicians of that institution. He looks in fine condition. The doctors claim that if he does not dissipate his head will never go back on him again.

Smith Coaches Notre Dame.

Eddie Smith, pitcher for the last two seasons in the South Bend team of the Central league, has been signed by Notre Dame to coach the varsity squad for the remainder of the season. Smith has played with St. Paul in the American association and the St. Louis Americans.

Keeler Welcomes the Youngsters.

"I'd like to see a lot of young players break in this spring," quoth Willie Keeler. "Why? Well, not only because it would help batting, but because these youngsters wouldn't know where to play for the batsmen and before they could get the secret learned there would be a lot of swatting done."

Jem Driscoll Pommels Hayes.

Jem Driscoll to-night defeated "Seaman" Hayes for the featherweight championship of England and a purse of $5,000 before the National Sporting club in London.

CONVINCING PROOF OF THE VIRTUE OF
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

What is the use of procrastinating in the face of such evidence as the following letters represent? If you are a sick woman or know one who is, what sensible reason have you for not giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial? For 30 years we have been publishing such testimonial letters as these—thousands of them —they are genuine and honest, too, every one of them.

Mrs. S. J. Barber says:
"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine in the world for women—and I feel it my duty to let others know the good it has done for me. Three years ago I had a tumor which the doctor said would have to be removed by an operation or I could not live more than a year, or two, at most. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for advice, and took 14 bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today the tumor is gone and I am a perfectly well woman. I hope my testimonial will be of benefit to others." — Mrs. S. J. BARBER, Scott, N. Y.

Mrs. George May says:
"No one knows what I have suffered from female troubles, neuralgia pains, and backache. My doctor said he could not give me anything to cure it. Through the advice of a friend I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and the pain soon disappeared. I continued its use and am now in perfect health. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a God-send to me as I believe I should have been in my grave if it had not been for Mrs. Pinkham's advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." —Mrs. GEORGE MAY, 86 4th Ave., Paterson, N. J.

Mrs. E. F. Hayes says:
"I was under the doctor's treatment for a fibroid tumor. I suffered with pain, soreness, bloating, and could not walk or stand on my feet any length of time. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, followed her directions and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. To-day I am a well woman, the tumor was expelled and my whole system strengthened. I advise all women who are afflicted with tumors or female troubles to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. E. F. HAYES, 1890 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Mrs. W. K. Housh says:
"I have been completely cured of a severe female trouble by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and want to recommend it to all suffering women." — Mrs. W. K. HOUSH, 7 Eastview Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, etc.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

"Mother is clean," said he, falteringly, "father is—cleaner—" Here he paused.

"Haven't you some other relative?" asked the teacher, smiling.

"Oh, yes," replied Freddie, "there's auntie—but I ain't sure about her!"

The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is as free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

Erickson For Reprasentative.

E. Erickson, of Bagley, county commissioner of Clearwater county, under certain conditions will be a candidate for the house of representatives from his county. He will run as an independant.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Under any conditions, and against any man in Clearwater county, no matter who he may be, Commissioner Erik Erickson, of Bagley would carry the county three to one. Because Mr. Erickson is a man of the people and for the people, having held about 20 differant official positions in his life time, and therefore is well versed in public matters, and would represent his diistrict and the state of Minnesota according to the wishes of the people regardless of the doings of the "intrests" in this or other counties.—Olberg Journal.

The above from the Oldberg Journal certainly gives Mr. Erickson a good send off. should he decide to start in the race for representative, from this district, as we would certaily consider a man living in Clearwater county to be about right if he is indorsed by that Olberg Journal, as its editor, Albert Anderson, has been seperating the wheat from the chaff in that county for a number of years, and he don't hesitate to use the flai when it is necessary to do it.

J. J. Opsahl is woking that old sugar beet game that was worn out by representative Simons, of Red Lake county severl years age. All he is working for is to try to "sugar beet" himself into the legislature, and that would end the sugar beet business. We will promptly hoist him and his sugar beet deal higher than Gil derovs kite, if he looms up as a candidate for the legislature.

Pensions From Napoleon.

Paris has a dozen old soldiers who draw pensions that come to them from the great Emperor Napoleon I. These are not heroes of his epoch, for the last of those died long years ago. But Napoleon by his will devised several millions of francs to his companions in arms, and this capital in default of heirs of the grand army was deposited in the public treasury. Today the revenue this fund produces is paid out in the form of pensions of 200 francs each to old soldiers in French territory, and Paris has twelve of these beneficiaries to whom at the first of the year these little pensions are remitted.—Paris Figaro.

A Versatile Garden.

The dwellers in a seaport town of Massachusetts are justly proud of their gardens. It remained for a visitor from a tiny village "way round the Cape" to say the first slightly disparaging word of these gardens. "Isn't this beautiful?" his hostess asked as she paused under a rose arbor and looked back over the stately ranks of larkspur, monk's hood, hollyhocks and many other favorites.

"It's a handsome gardin—of its kind," said the visitor dispassionately, "but it ain't quite up to the mark when you consider our gardins."

"Indeed!" and the lady looked at him, too amazed to be angry. "What sort of gardens have you, please?"

"Well," said her Cape visitor calmly, "what we call a good gardin is one where you can start out with two big baskets and a hoe, step through the flower gardin part, past the vegetables, down to the water; dig your clams fust, pick your sweet corn, lay your posies on top o' that and hand the whole lot over at the kitchen door. There's your shore dinner and trimmin's all from one gardin."—Youth's Companion.

The Wise Woodpecker.

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception. But he does not eat the acorn, for, as a rule, he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorns remain intact, but, becoming saturated, are predisposed to decay, when they are attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food. It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided at a time when, the ground being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.—Cleveland Leader.

SIR MARK'S HOTEL BILL.

Relic of an Early Nineteenth Century Election in Ireland.

During the time of a contested election in Meath, Ireland, in the early part of the last century, Sir Mark Somerville sent orders to the proprietor of the hotel in Trim to board and lodge all that should vote for him, for which he received the following bill, which he got framed, and it still hangs in Somerville House, County Meath:

April 16th, 1826.

MY BILL.

To eating sixteen more below stairs, and two more after supper, is to me	2	15	9
To eighteen horses and five mules about my yard all night at 13s every one of them, and for a man which was lost on the head of watching them all night, is to me	5	5	0
To six beds in one room, and four in another, at two guineas every bed, and not more than four in any bed at any time, cheap enough, God knows, is to me....	22	15	0
For breakfast on tay in the morning, for every one of them, and as many more as they brought in, as near as I can guess, is to me	4	12	0
To raw whisky and punch, without talking of pipes and tobacco, as well as for breaking a pot above stairs and other glasses and delph for the first day and night, I am not very sure, but for the three days and a half of the election as little as I can call it, and to be very exact, it is in all or thereabouts as near as I can guess, and not to be too particular, is to me at least.	79	15	9
For shaving and cropping off the heads of forth-nine freeholders for Sir Mark, at 13d for every head of them by my brother, who has a vote, is to me	2	13	1
For a womit and hurse for poor Tom Kernan, in the middle of the night, when he was not expected, is to me................... ten hogs, I don't talk of the piper for keeping him sober as long as he was sober, is to me........

his Mark X
Bryan and Geraghty's Mark X

You may say 111, so your honour Sir Mark send me this Eleven Hundred by Bryan himself, who and I prays for your success always in Trim, so no more at present.

The hotel keeper must have got weary as he neared the end of his long bill, for his account becomes as wabbly as some of his guests must have been when the crash of glass and delph accompanied their deep potation of raw whisky and punch.

NOTHING WAS LOST.

An Omission In a Wedding Ceremony That Didn't Count.

A distinguished officer of the United States navy once told this story on himself:

At the time of his marriage he had been through the civil war and had had many harrowing experiences aboard ship, through all of which he kept courage and remained as calm as a brave man should. As the time for the ceremony came on, however, his calmness gradually gave way. At the altar, amid the blaze of buttons and gold lace marking the naval wedding, the officer was almost stampeded, and what went on seemed very much mixed to him. Fearing the excitement of the moment would temporarily take him off his feet, the officer had learned the marriage ceremony letter perfect, as he thought, and he remembered repeating the words after the minister in a mechanical sort of way.

After the ceremony was over and all was serene again, including the officer's state of mind, the kindly clergyman came up to him and touched him on the shoulder.

"Look here, old man," he said; "you didn't endow your wife with any worldly goods."

"What's that?" asked the bridegroom with something of astonishment in his voice.

"Why, I repeated the sentence 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow' several times, and despite my efforts you would not say it after me."

The bridegroom seemed perturbed for a moment, and then a beaming light came into his face.

"Never mind, sir," he said. "She didn't lose a blessed thing by my failure."—Exchange.

Protracted.

"Hello, Barker!" said Smitkin, meeting his friend on the street. "How goes it?"

"All right, I guess," said Barker.

"Seen Bobbie Sponger lately?"

"Yes; Bobbie is down at my place at Westhampton now. I invited him down for the week end"—

"Why, I thought that was three weeks ago!"

"It was," said Barker, "but, you know, Bobbie is an expert at making both ends meet."—Harper's Weekly.

Damascus of Marvelous View.

The view of Damascus from the mountain where Mohammed made his great renunciation is one of the marvelous views of the world. Again and again I deserted the mosques, the bazaars, the marble baths, the courts of the fountains, the shadowy khans and the gardens by the streams for that bare height on which Abraham is said to have had the unity of God revealed to him.—Robert Hichens in Century.

Imitation.

"Why, Gladys, you are spoiling your dolly."

"No, mamma; I am painting its cheeks with the same color that you use."—Judge.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Make your applications to make final proof and for farm loans at this office.

J.W Vrolson has been looking after collections in this locality the past week.

Three hundred and sixty dry oak posts at Highlanding at 5 cts each. Inquire of Andrew Ellingson.

C L Clask was duly elected for constable at last Tuesdays election, but was "counted out" by the town board.

It will only take a few more days of this kind of weather to clean up the rest of the snow and break up the ice on the Red Lake River.

The author of a "Dismal Failure" got struck and run over by steam roller at that ditch meeting, propelled by Commissioner Johnson, and his man "Friday."

Walt McAndress took a load of feed down to Kratka yesterday to get ground, but the mill was out of gasoline, and then to Highlanding and found them out of wood.

We assure outsiders that there will be a fair count of the Highlanding ballots at the primary and general election, as it will be attended to by people that will see to it that we have a fair count.

There is to be a St Patrick ball on March 17th, at the Kratka hall, and one at the Koliska hall in Deer Park on the same date. This will be the last ball of the season at the Kolski hall.

The game of "counting out" was sprung to try to defeat Dannacker for town clerk, and if they had succeeded in doing so the election would have been contested, but as it is there was no harm done,

We extend our thanks to a number of our subscribers for the payment of subscription the past week, and assure them that they will get their moneys worth this year, as we are prepairing to take an active part in the campaign.

GOOD COUNTERS.

We was born in the state of New York. Our Forefathers fought in the war of the revolution. We came to Minnesota 26 years ago We have been a resident of this county and township for five years, and our town board threw out our vote at the last Tuesday election. Why? Because we voted a staight ticket. The tickets was printed after the notice of the election, and not a single candidate was on the ticket more than was to be voted for. There was 1 supvisor. 1 town clerk. 2 justices of the peace 2 constables 1 treasurer, and the name of P. C. Wold for assessor. Now Mr. Town board, did we not have a legal right to vote this ticket at that township election? If we did have a legal right to vote that ticket, what right had you to throw that vote and five others just like it out and not count them? Can we have a fair election and a fair count in the town of Highlanding, or have we degenerated to the old customs of the south, where they used to count the niggers out of office at the point of a shot gun?

TOWNSHIP ELECTIONS.

Owing to bad roads and lack of interest there was not a very large attendence at last Tuesdays election in Highlanding township and only 55 votes was cast, and the following ticket was elected. Supervisor, Alfred Hammersteen. Town Clerk, Anthony Dannacker. Justice's of the peace, T S Jacobson, Alex Laterneie. Constables, Martain Thoresen, John Hemme. About all the fight that was made was on Town Clerk, Anthony Dannacker winning out against the combine. It was voted to build a shed for the road grader in the center of the town. The usal town taxes were voted and $180 to pay interest on bonds. Road overseers were elected for the five road districts and two day pole tax voted There was six votes thrown out, because John Eastman had printed the tickets so th all that the judges could not see them, but a man with a microscope informs us that they were all for Dannacker for clerk and as he was elected it made no difference. The fight centered on him. for the reason that he indorsed Andrew Ellingson for post master at Highlanding. But if anyone asks you who is town clerk of Highlanding, just tell them it is Anthony Dannacker and six legal votes cast for him were thrown out, one of which was yours truly W.G-Hunt.

FROM DEER PARK

The following ticket was elected in Deer Park: For Supervisor Frank Lundeen. Town Clerk Edward Singer. Justice of the peace, E. A. Mostue. Treasurer O M. Mandt. Constable Oscar Nesland. 52 votes east.

His Lesson In Golf.

A prominent business man not long since became afflicted with a bad case of "golfitis"—that is, he joined the army of cranks at the game, wanted to play all the time, talk of nothing else, etc. As is the case with all "duffers," he had his troubles at the start, and the way he fired questions at his friends was a caution. His golf acquaintances accommodatingly replied with all sorts of remedies, until finally the bewildered one got his stenographer to jot them down. One friend's advice included three points: first, keeping the eye on the ball; second, the necessity of hitting the ball with an easy stroke, and, third, the use of a rocking horse to develop the stroke. The fact that the friend had a keen sense of humor did not occur to the tyro until later. He immediately purchased a large rocking horse and after business hours seated himself astride the fiery charger and swung at the ball, which was securely fastened to the floor by a strong cord. He has learned a thing or two since. The hobbyhorse is no more, and he has vowed to get square with "Mr. Joker" if it takes a thousand years.—New York Tribune.

Subduing a Bully.

A writer in a Vladivostok paper tells of an encounter he once witnessed on a Siberian train between a lady and a nobleman.

When the train pulled up at Tsitikar, in Manchuria, a Manchu noble who had bullied all his fellow passengers, alighted at the station restaurant after warning them that he would decapitate any of them who took his seat During his absence a smartly dressed young Russian lady entered the car and, despite the alarmed expostulations of its occupants, calmly appropriated the seat. When the noble returned he flew into a passion and advanced threateningly with his curved saber drawn. But the young woman coolly covered him with a shining revolver

"Do you take us for a pack of cowardly individuals?" she exclaimed, and then, pointing at her feet, she remarked: "Here is your place, my hero."

Hugo and the Barber.

When Victor Hugo lived in Paris in the Place Royale he used to be shaved by a barber named Brassier. A friend of the poet asked the barber one day if he was busy. "I hardly know which way to turn," was the reply. "We have to dress the hair of thirty ladies for soirees and balls." And M. Brassier showed the list to his friend A few days after the friend returned and inquired about the thirty ladies. "Ah, monsieur," said the barber sadly, "I was not able to attend half the number, and I have lost many good customers through M. Victor Hugo." It appears that the poet when about to be shaved was suddenly inspired and seized the first piece of paper he could find to write a poem. Hugo hastily left the shop with his unfinished verses, on the back of which were the names and addresses of the thirty ladies, many of whom waited in vain for their coiffeur.

Not Tending to Business.

A country doctor was recently called upon to visit a patient some way from his office. Driving to where the sick man lived, he tied his horse to a tree in front of the house and started to walk across the ground. It happened that work was in progress on a new well, of which the doctor knew nothing until he found himself sinking into the earth. He fell just far enough to be unable to get out of the hole unassisted and lustily yelled for help.

When he was finally pulled up the hired man remarked to him:

"I say, doc, you had no business down there?"

"No; I don't think I had," replied the doctor

"Don't you know," continued the hired man, "you ought leave the well alone and take care of the sick?"—Lippincott's

Inherited Dreams.

A medical scientist claims that many dreams are really hereditary that is to say, they come down to us from ancestors. Many persons have a dream which they dream over and over again. This and some others that are frequent, according to the authority referred to, are inherited. The doctor observed, for instance, that a child of six years after an attack of typhoid fever saw in its slumber a figure clad in black, which advanced to the foot of the bed and fixed upon him its shining eyes. It was found that the father of the child had frequently dreamed that dream, although he had never mentioned it to his child. The grandfather dreamed the same dream, although he had told no one about it. Evidently there is more than our philosophy can fathom in "the stuff that dreams are made of."

"But how in the world did the crooked lobster break the bars of the jail?"

The Smuggled Box.

A joker had some fun with the customs officials at New York some years ago. A servant had gone ashore from a German liner with a basket and was about to leave the pier when a passenger whispered to a customs officer that he had better see what the basket contained. Following the tip, the basket bearer was detained, and a wooden box was found among a lot of soiled linen. The box contained another and this still another box, the third securely fastened with screws. When these were removed a card was discovered on which was written in three languages, "This is the 1st of April Many happy returns of the day."

A Curious Stone.

A curious stone is the alexandrite. It is a dark green stone that is polished, cut and set, very like a fine topaz or amethyst, in large showy rings surrounded by diamonds. By the light of day the alexandrite has no special beauty save its fine luster, but directly a shaft of artificial light strikes the dull stone deep gleams of red flash out of the green, and under the gas or in the firelight one ignorant of this vagary would instantly pronounce it a ruby.

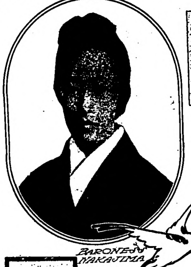
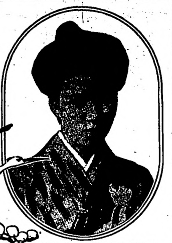
Literary Women in Japan

By JOSEPHINE CONGER-KANEKO



BARONESS NAKAJIMA



UTA IMAI, EDITOR "TWENTIETH CENTURY WOMAN"

AFTERNOON TEA IN JAPAN

WITH her tiny pigeon toes and her butterfly gown, her paint, her oiled hair and her soft, timid voice, the Japanese woman hardly suggests the possibility of memorizing thousands of Chinese characters that are necessary in the most ordinary reading, and much less would one believe her capable of evolving ideas and expressing them intelligently.

But she does both.

The Japanese woman of the old era was, like her entire nation, a shut-in. She was the pre-eminently exclusive member of an exclusive people. Her powers, her whole life, were wholly at the disposal of her family first, and afterward of her husband—or, more correctly speaking, her lord and master. In a book of the old Samurai is written the law for women: "Firstly, a woman has no lord to serve but her husband. She must obey and honor him as her lord and master. Be cautious. Never despise nor slight his words. A woman's first duty is obedience. She should be careful about the expression of her face and never show anger or excitement in her looks."

Subject to such restrictions, it was impossible for the stranger, in the past, to learn of the real possibilities of the Japanese woman. He could be guided only by the artist's conception of her and by whatever reports might come from the lips of men. While these portrayals were true in a way, they were misleading, because they did not express the whole truth. Was the Japanese woman shrinking and timid? Yes, because she was taught so from time immemorial. It was an art with her, a supreme accomplishment. As an indication of her real nature it meant nothing—save that she had the power and the good judgment to conform to the demands of custom. Probably her will was indomitable, her intellect clear and strong. In such case she reached more nearly to the ideal, because she could control herself. She believed in the customs of her land; she loved them. She was guided by them So it was a mistake to regard her soft voice, her well-learned timidity, as indicative of weakness, of flexibility.

Even in the long, musty past a woman came out now and then and gave to her people a sample of the possibilities of the feminine mind in fields other than the intimate home life. But such disclosures were naturally rare.

One of these was Murasakishikibu, a woman who lived about 1,500 years ago and wrote "Genjimonogatari," a realistic story of Genji, a prominent member of the nobility of that time. This novel has long been a classic in Japan and is studied in the modern schools. Parts of it have been translated into English.

Seishonagon, a famous poet and sketch writer, lived about the same time. She was a strong moralist and was noted for her high and excellent character.

Shiran Yanagawa, the Mrs. Browning of Japan, lived during the reign of Shogun Tokugawa, about 100 years ago, and, together with her husband, wrote many Chinese poems. At that time, as to-day, Chinese was the medium employed by the Japanese classic writer for the expression of his thoughts.

When the breath of western civilization blew across the picturesque little island of Japan it melted the chains of conservatism and prejudice for women as well as for men. And so we have to-day the peculiar spectacle of the new springing with almost startling zeal out of the very bosom of the old. Mothers who cling with fervent faith to the old school of training have daughters who go out and work as newspaper reporters!

There are those whose emancipation is so radical that it even jars upon the sensibilities of one so callous as a westerner. There are other women whose growth, though marked, is pleasing and graceful. To this class belongs Kashi Iwamoto. Mrs. Iwamoto was of that generation that helped to make Japan what she is to-day and she was herself a part of the new order. Born at the end of the old regime, and growing up amidst the fiercest struggle of transition, she imbibed that which was best of the old and at the same time caught the true spirit of the new. Her husband, Zenji Iwamoto, is a well-known literary man and founder of Meiji Jogakko, a prominent college for girls. In working with him Mrs. Iwamoto's views of life were broadened and she interested herself in all things pertaining to the welfare of her people. She not only learned English, but mastered it to a degree in which her style is not only correct, but has a distinct literary quality and a charm, partly due, perhaps, to a hint of foreign idiom, which gives freshness to the use of an acquired language. Mrs. Iwamoto first became known as as writer through her translations of Proctor's "Sailor Boy" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy" into the Japanese language. She also wrote a volume of essays in English. An extract from one of these, "Some Phases of the Japanese Home and Home Life," will give a hint of her style and of the process of her thought:

"Japan, like any other ancient country, has had a unique national life and history. She boasts of a civilization, a code of morals, a form of government and a system of education all peculiar to herself, and she cherishes these as heirlooms expressive of the wisdom and experience handed down through the whole line of her ancestors. . . . You all know that the old-time Japanese woman was trained according to rules of conduct that were most severe in their rigidity. She was assiduously taught to guard her personal virtue and the proud honor of her household. Death was the only alternative in case she swerved from her duties. . . . Place, on the one hand, this type of womanhood, serving in the house of her lord and master with singleness of purpose and with devotion strong in its simplicity and, on the other, an average girl of modern education, with a smattering of western knowledge, it is true, but without discretion and judgment to apply her newly found information, and, of course, the latter will appear at a disadvantage. . . . In the present home, where the old and the new elements combine, contrary streams of thought and action thwart the young wife at her every step, and, in spite of her resolution, many are the tears that she sheds unseen. . . . But she must learn to be just as cautious and deferential in one respect as it is her duty to be prompt and decisive in another. For herein lies the very test of her intrinsic worth and usefulness. . . . We deplore the many evils that have issued and still do issue from the ancient household system in Japan. . . . Yet we cannot help noting that this has been perhaps the most successful system of discipline ever extant—a discipline productive of the utmost diligence, circumspectness and self-sacrifice. We certainly owe it to this system that indolent, whimsical and selfish women have been set aside and the noble, self-sacrificing type of wives and mothers was preserved for the old-time Japanese homes and handed down as an heirloom to the present day."

Another woman of marked ability as a writer was the Baroness Nakajima. As a child she excelled in her studies and was allowed to go to a boys' school, there being no high schools for girls at that time. Her fame as a scholar became known at court and she was appointed as a teacher of learning to the empress. After retiring from this service she toured the country for special study and observation. It was an unusual thing for an unmarried woman to travel alone, giving lectures on political and scientific subjects and at one time the baroness—at that time Yoshiko Kishida—was arrested and imprisoned on the charge of plotting against the government. While in prison she wrote many poems in Chinese, giving vent to her feelings regarding the condition of her country. Later on she married a newspaper man, who was afterward made baron. He was the first president of the house of commons and also a minister to Italy. The young couple never ceased to interest themselves in the political affairs of their land and at one time were banished from the capital city, charged with disloyalty. Mental and physical overwork brought the baron to an early death and the wife, broken hearted, followed him within two years. The Baroness Nakajima was considered a very beautiful woman and the many experiences she underwent as student and reformer gave depth and strength to her character which speak plainly in her written works. Her essays and lectures are numerous and her last work, which is a daily record of her life, is very instructive and interesting. She wrote minutely of passing events and illustrated these details with fine drawings or comic sketches. This work she continued until within five days of her death.

Miss Ichiye Higuchi, who died at 23, had already attained fame as a writer of realistic fiction. Being of humble and poor parentage, she was obliged to leave school at ten years of age, a time when most children are merely beginning to learn to read. With her sister she helped to support her widowed mother, but gave all of her spare time to study and writing. She was forced to live with her family in the outskirts of the city, among the poorest and lowest people and it was there that she got the material for all of her stories, which are pathetic in the extreme. Notwithstanding the fact that her opportunities for learning were limited, her composition is without fault, her style chaste and expressive. It was not until after consumption, bred through poverty and overwork, had taken strong hold on her system that her genius was recognized. For a little time then she knew the luxury of friends and of admiration. "But I have never known what youth free from responsibilities means," she told a friend. The Japanese bow low in reverence to the memory of Miss Higuchi, who might well be styled the female Gorky of Japanese literature.

Miss Kaho Miyake, Mrs. Kajita and Mrs. Otsuke are all prominent writers of to-day.

Miss Uta Imai is a representative of the ultra modern Japanese woman. Miss Imai is the chief editor of Nijuseikinofujin, or Twentieth Century Woman and is one of the founders of the Hokkaido Woman's society. She is working toward that day when the Japanese women will rise as a unit in their declarations along certain lines of emancipation. She is hopeful, buoyant and unswerving in her purpose, and as she belongs to the newest generation of workers she believes she will see great changes in methods and principles before her sun is set.

The daughter of Kashi Iwamoto promises to be a prominent figure in the future literary world of Japan. She has been writing stories and translating from foreign tongues for several years.

The first woman to enter the regular newspaper field was Mrs. Takeyo Takegoshi, who, with her husband, joined the staff of the Kokumin-Shinbum, in Tokyo, some 15 years ago. After four or five years other women became interested in newspaper work and to-day many are employed as special writers, as reporters and as editors of departments for women.

These are but a few of the women writers of Japan. They are sufficient to illustrate, however, the fact that the Japanese woman is a creature of considerable reserve mental force and of intense feeling. Under the new regime only was it possible for her to make these facts known to the outside world, since the old teaching constrained her to keep hidden every feeling, every thought, that she might develop a more Spartan-like character, capable of enduring great sacrifice when sacrifice should come—as it did in the lives of many Japanese women. It was not an accident that the Japanese soldiers repulsed the larger men of the Russian army. They were the sons of mothers whose discipline through thousands of years had well nigh reached perfection, whose endurance was great and whose wits were sharpened by constant contact with domineering husbands and fractious mothers-in-law.

It is an unhappy fact that the Japanese literature loses its artistic beauty and its real strength when translated into foreign languages. This is probably due to the fact that the Japanese student is still struggling in the mazes of the foreign tongues and is not as yet capable of manipulating the new words so as to express the fine shades of meaning that he sees and appreciates in his own literature. The delicacy with which an artist attacks his subject in the Japanese is likely to become clumsy or inane and meaningless when he attempts to employ other languages as a medium of expression. This, perhaps, is the reason that westerners say that Japan "is a country without literature."

JAPAN'S ANCESTRAL GODS

One of the most marvelous manifestations of patriotic and religious enthusiasm in modern Japan was occasioned recently by the transference of the imperial shrines at Ise to their new tabernacle just completed, the London Standard says. This remarkable Shinto festival may be witnessed only every 21 years, when the temples of the ancestral gods are reconstructed and the sacred objects are removed to their new abode. The Ise temples have been thus renewed every score of years since A. D. 690 at least and for how long before that no one knows, the present occasion being the fifty-seventh rebuilding on record.

Such a periodic reconstruction will appear quite necessary when it is recollected that on these shrines no mortal hand is ever permitted to execute repairs. After they are built the gods of the nation take possession of them and thenceforward they are not touched till they go the way of all things.

The work of rebuilding the sacred shrines begins almost as soon as the last reconstruction is complete by the appointment of an imperial commission intrusted with the important enterprise. Every stage is marked by religious ceremonies, from the felling of the trees to the driving of the last nail. The completion is emphasized by a special festival of purification, after which the temples pass from the hands of the commissioners to the priestly custodians of the imperial shrines.

Finally comes the great festival of removing the ancestral gods and the sacred treasures and relics to the new "holy of holies," which took place recently. It is computed that no fewer than 40,000 persons were present on the night of the actual removal. Though the august spectacle takes place at night, the preparation for it appears to go on for two or three days previously, but the ceremonies of the notable day itself are the most interesting. The day opened with the appearance before the new temples of a specially chosen virgin, who went through a peculiar ceremony of burying in the ground before the shrine a jar containing offerings to the god of earth.

Later in the day began a long procession of priests in gorgeous robes of green and gold, chanting weird litanies and monotonous sutras to the strains of archaic instruments. It is affirmed that the service has in no respect been changed during the last thousand years. With the settling down of darkness came the great function of removal. A detachment of priests, led by a priestly representative of the imperial house, went into the soon to be abandoned shrines to examine the treasures and to measure the sacred fabrics. As the latter are reputed to be more than 330,000 feet in length, this was no small matter.

WANTED TO BE ON SAFE SIDE

Woman, Twice Deserted, Didn't Mean to Take Any Chances on Her Third Hubby.

The officers of the thumb print bureau were just wishing for something interesting to turn up when a telephone message offered timely diversion. A woman was speaking.

"Do you make prints of anybody's thumbs except criminals?" she asked.

The bureau did.

"Well," said the woman, "if I will come down there right away with a man will you make a print of his thumbs?"

The bureau would. The man and the woman came.

"We want his thumb prints for identification," said the woman. "We are going to be married to-morrow. He is my third husband. The other two ran away and I had the hardest kind of a time to find them because there was no sure way of identifying them. They say thumb prints can never change and that a man can be tracked by them to the ends of the earth. I hope I shall never have to use them, but it is just as well to be on the safe side. Will you make them?"

Little Helen during the three years of her life, had never been separated from her elder sister night or day for more than a few minutes at a time; but at last the time came when the sister went away for a whole day. The child tried every game and occupation that she knew of, and a new one or two suggested by her mother, but they all palled.

Finally she gave up and stood and looked sadly out of the window. Then she sighed deeply and said:

CHANGE THE VIBRATION

It Makes for Health.

A man tried leaving off meat, potatoes, coffee, and etc., and adopted a breakfast of fruit, Grape-Nuts with cream, some crisp toast and a cup of Postum.

His health began to improve at once for the reason that a meat eater will reach a place once in a while where his system seems to become clogged and the machinery doesn't work smoothly.

A change of this kind puts aside food of low nutritive value and takes up food and drink of the highest value, already partly digested and capable of being quickly changed into good, rich blood and strong tissue.

A most valuable feature of Grape-Nuts is the natural phosphate of potash grown in the grains from which it is made. This is the element which transforms albumen in the body into the soft gray substance which fills brain and nerve centers.

A few days' use of Grape-Nuts will give one a degree of nervous strength well worth the trial.

OPTION CONFERENCE

LEGISLATORS AND PROSPECTIVE GOVERNORS PRESENT AT ST. PAUL MEETING.

GOVERNOR KEEPS HANDS OFF

Address of Mr. Eberhart Is Listened To With Interest By Hundreds of Delegates.

St. Paul, March 3.—With the delegates all gathered in St. Paul for the county option demonstration, interest is in the probable action of the convention itself, and in the statement of position with Governor Eberhart made as to his position.

Will Keep Hands Off.

Before from 1,200 to 1,500 persons gathered in the St. Paul auditorium, Governor Eberhart set at rest any doubt there might be as to his position on the question of county option. He absolutely and positively refused to be forced into a position not of his own choosing. His remarks indicated a neutral stand.

The governor declared that he would not risk subjecting to possible embarrassment the party which had given the state all the temperance legislation it has by pledging the influence of his office to the option program.

The governor said with equal positiveness that if a county option bill were passed by the legislature, if he were governor, it would be signed and enforced.

Among the members of the legislature were Senators L. O. Thorpe, of Kandiyohi; E. H. Canfield, of Rock; C. A. Johnson, of St. Peter; V. L. Johnson, of Chisago; J. W. Wright, of Meeker and S. A. Nelson, of Fillmore.

Among the representatives were Wescott, of Dakota; Gates of Kenyon; Johnson, of Canby; Melby, of Lyon; Mattson, of Roseau; Saugstad, of Polk; Johnson, of Fergus Falls; Carlson, of Cloquet; Rines, of Kanabec; Conley, of Olmstead; Lee, of Glenwood; Rustad, of Fillmore; Davis, of Elk River; Holmberg, of Renville, and others.

The Democratic kitchen cabinet was represented by Bank Examiner J. B. Galerncoult and Charles Halvorsen, of the board of control.

The largest delegation to arrive was that from Kandiyohi county, headed by Senator L. O. Thorpe. There are about 135 in the delegation, but about half of them stopped off in Minneapolis.

Addresses were made by Prof. P. M. Magnuson, of the St. Cloud Normal school; State Senator Ole Sageng, of Dalton; Representative E. E. Lobeck, of Alexandria; Representative G. H. Mattson, of Roseau; Prof. Frank Nelson of the Minnesota college in Minneapolis; Prof. A. J. McGuire of the agricultural college at Grand Rapids, and F. N. Stacy, of the public examiner's office; Elias Rachie, legislative superintendent, and J. F. Jacobson.

The afternoon session was addressed by former Attorney General Young, on "County Option and Law Enforcement." Dr. Andrew Gillies of Minneapolis, pastor of the Hennepin Avenue M. E. church, spoke on "The Minister's Part in the Fight for County Option."

BIG MEET FOR HINCKLEY.

"Clover Belt Development Conference" For Next May.

Hinckley. — The Hinckley Commercial Club decided to hold in Hinckley a conference to develop the country lying between St. Paul and Duluth. This meeting will be held in the latter part of May. Invitations will be extended to all the counties lying between these two cities and to all commercial clubs and to all villages to send delegates. It is proposed to call the conference the "Clover Belt Development Conference." Its object will be not only to develop this section, but to work with other similar organizations.

Duluth. — Inspecting officers Lieutenant Colonel Gerlach and Captain Bugge inspected Company C of Duluth and complimented that body highly. There were seventy-two men in line, in command of Captain F. D. Knowlton. After the inspection, Colonel Gerlach said:

"I have seen some national guard companies as good as C of Duluth, but none better."

Captain Bugge said:

"I can see no opportunity for improvement for Company C, other than that which might be afforded in active field service."

He will be delivered on Sept. 1, at which time he will become the stable mate, traveling companion and racing partner of the word's two fastest and most famous horses, Dan Patch, 1:55, and Minor Heir, 1:59¼.

RAILROADS PAY UP TAXES.

Big Lines, Apparently, Will Not Reopen Case.

St. Paul.—The Great Northern and the Chicago Great Western railroads apparently will not make any efforts to reopen the gross earnings tax case which was decided against them in the federal supreme court a week ago, for both of the roads have paid in full 4 per cent tax upon their gross earnings for the year 1909. It is expected that they will pay the back taxes which were in dispute in the near future.

The gross earnings of the railroads in the state show an increase of about 17 percent over 1908. All the roads have now reported and paid their tax except the Burlington and a couple of switching roads, which will add about $20,000 to the $3,619,107.40 already paid into the state treasury. For the year 1908 the taxes were $3,155,027 but, of this, $149,855 was in dispute, the Great Northern asserting that it was obliged to pay only 3 per cent on part of its line and the Great Western 2 per cent. The gross earnings for 1909 were $90,477,686 in the state in addition to which there is about $400,000 not reported. The earnings in 1908 were $77,875,681.

These payments leave the state treasury in excellent condition. The statement prepared by the treasurer at the end of the month of February shows a total of $1,923,451 in the different funds, of which $555,174 was in the revenue fund and all temporary loans paid.

Road Checks Come In.

But after the books had been closed for the day a check of $865,843 was received from the Great Northern, a check of $564,863 from the Northern Pacific, three checks from the Soo line and its branches, amounting to $246,511, a check from the Great Western for $77,330 and one from the Illinois Central for $3,334. The Minneapolis, St. Paul and Suburban railway made its first report, showing a tax of $17,303 on $432,580 earned by the electric lines going to Minnetonka, Stillwater and South St. Paul.

FARMERS ON BOARD OF REGENTS

Milton M. Williams, of Little Falls, To Succeed Owens.

Minneapolis. — Governor Eberhart has appointed Milton M. Williams of Little Falls, member of the board of regents of the University of Minnesota to succeed the late Sidney M. Owen. This is the first appointment in filling the four vacancies on the board which the governor has made. He will fill the other vacancies soon.

Mr. Williams is a practical farmer. He is highly indorsed by the Little Falls Commercial club and by representative men from the northwestern part of the state which has just secured representation. Mr. Williams has been a member of the state forestry board and has been especially interseted in reforestation and other kindred subjects of conservation.

He is a live stock breeder of more than state wide reputation. During the past few years Mr. Williams has made several strips to Europe where he has made a special study of the live stock conditions and methods used there for the purpose of learning the best methods and applying them to Minnesota.

His appointment to the board of regents makes necessary his resignation from the state forestry board, leaving a vacancy in that body.

RELIEF FUND REPORT IS FILED.

Balance of $164 May Go For Work In Future.

St. Paul.—The final report of the Fire Sufferers' Relief Commission, appointed by Gov. John A. Johnson soon after the Chisholm fire, was filed with Governor Eberhart by Roland B. Haven, chairman of the commission.

The report shows a total subscription of $82,835.64, of which $48,475.49 was used in relief work. The sum of $34,197.28 was refunded to the subscribers. The balance now left in the committee's hands amounts to $164.87. This will probably be used as a nucleus for some future fund or will be turned over to some charitable organization.

REDS SPEED PETITION.

Opponents of Indian School On White Earth Reservation.

White Earth.—During the past ten days couriers have been sent to all parts of the reservation circulating a petition protesting against the Indian agricultural school measure recently introduced in congress by Representative Miller, of Duluth.

The measure has met with universal opposition, it is said, from the people of the reservation. A strong petition, the second of its kind, has been forwarded to the commissioner of Indian affairs. Careful inquiry fails to verify the statement that the measure was introduced by request of a portion of the reservation people.

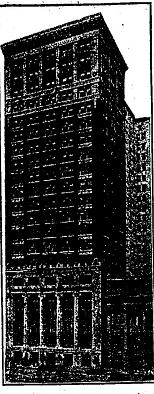
Ruckheim is perfectly willing to go to state prison for life.

NEW CHICAGO SKYSCRAPER

Harris Trust and Savings Bank to Erect 20-Story Building in Monroe Street.

Chicago.—"La Salle street" has for a long time meant the financial district of Chicago, as "Wall street" has meant that of New York. But the term has lost its significance within the last few years, for the big banking concerns of the western metropolis have been moving to Monroe street, one after another, until for several blocks that thoroughfare is occupied almost exclusively by financial institutions.



Harris Trust Building.

Several of them have erected skyscrapers, and others have put up handsome buildings for their sole use. The latest of these great bank buildings to be planned is for the Harris Trust and Savings bank, on the south side of Monroe street between Clark and La Salle. It will be 20 stories high, with foundations going down 110 feet to bed rock.

ARIZONA WOMEN WOULD VOTE

Miss Laura Gregg Is Moving Spirit in the Southwestern State's Suffrage Crusade.

Phoenix, Ariz.—A few weeks ago when the present session of congress opened, there was no woman suffrage organization in Arizona. The prospects of statehood, however, stirred to activity the women who do not relish the idea of being excluded from citizenship, and there are more than a thousand of them now enrolled under the votes for women banner. The moving spirit behind this campaign is Miss Laura Gregg, well known throughout the west for her advocacy of the woman's cause. It is safe to predict that Miss Gregg and her energetic army will make things lively in the Constitutional convention.

Feminine Dressing of the Hair.

The poet Ovid did not think it beneath him to study the art of hair dressing as an aid to feminine beauty, and his advice on the subject, given in elegant verse, is excellent. "Never let your hair be in disorder," he writes. "Nothing pleases us so much as neatness," and yet, he admits, "there are many women whom hair apparently in disorder suits; it might not have been dressed since yesterday; it has been arranged this very minute. Such was the beautiful disorder of Vole when Hercules saw her for the first time in a town taken by assault that he cried 'I love her.'"

Columbia university has been quick to recognize the general wave of interest in agriculture and is providing courses in scientific and economic farming. It has arranged for a course of 13 lectures on economic agriculture, to be given this winter by prominent men who can speak with authority on various phases of agriculture.

Modern Anglo-Saxon skill, care, cleanliness, superseding the primitive, unsanitary, unwholesome methods of handling that still prevail in all other Tea-growing countries, have made Ceylon Tea the standard of exellence throughout the Oriental as well as the Western World. "Salada" is for sale by all grocers, in sealed lead packets only.

Traveling Man Got Even.

A traveling man called on the manager of a large New York concern the other day and sent his card in by the boy at the outside gate. The boy sauntered back lazily and told the traveling man that the manager wouldn't see him.

"Well, you go and ask him for the card I sent in," said the caller.

In a few minutes the boy returned from his second trip. "Say," remarked the boy, "the boss told me to tell you that he tore up that card, but he sent a nickel to you to pay for it."

The traveling man was deeply insulted, but he decided to get back as best he could. He opened his card case and drew out another card, handing it to the boy.

"Give this to your boss," he said, "and tell him that I'll keep the money. My cards are two for five. Much obliged."

The manager rushed out of the gate to find the traveling man, but he was too late. The man had left.

The Shame of Our Abandoned Ships

By James Creelman

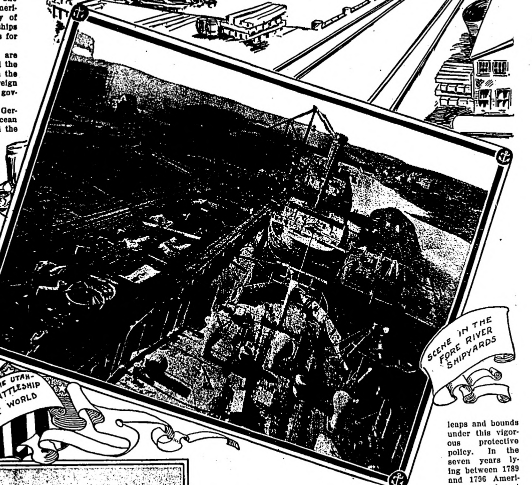
LAUNCHING THE UTAH—LARGEST BATTLESHIP IN THE WORLD



SCENE IN THE FORE RIVER SHIPYARDS

AS THE 22,000-ton battleship Utah slid down the ways a few weeks ago a smiling girl swung a bottle of champagne at the end of a gay ribbon and smashed it against the bow of the greatest fighting ship in existence.

A roar of 10,000 voices greeted the mighty steel hull as it struck the salt water and by sheer force of its weight swept a mile and a half into the gray fog against the combined power of four tugboats sent to stop it.

Magnificent! glorious! Yet the same week that saw the largest and costliest battleship in the world launched under the American flag from an American shipyard witnessed the humiliating spectacle of two American merchant steamships, Finland and Kroonland, transferred to the Belgian flag because they could not be operated without loss under the American flag, thus leaving only six American steamships in the whole transatlantic trade, where once America was supreme.

The American navy has become the second naval power, while the American flag is being rapidly driven from the foreign trade of the world at a time when international commerce has assumed imperial proportions.

Does it thrill the American imagination and stir the national pride to read of the American merchant ships and seamen that once made the stars and stripes emblems of courage, enterprise and success on all the seas and oceans? Then consider these plain facts:

In the past year not one keel of an American ship for the foreign trade was laid.

Our ship tonnage in the foreign trade has shrunk from 2,496,894 tons in 1861 to 940,068 tons in 1908, a shrinkage of 1,556,826 tons of American foreign shipping in 43 years.

No American steamship line connects us with South America, beyond Venezuela and Panama. Not a single American steamship goes to Brazil, Argentina, Chili or Peru.

The most convenient means of traveling from any of the great Atlantic ports of the United States to South America is by way of Europe, involving two voyages across the Atlantic ocean. That, too, is the most regular and sometimes the quickest route for mail between the United States and South America—our greatest natural market, which we defend from foreign spoliation according to the Monroe doctrine. There is absolutely no American mail service south of the Caribbean sea.

Two years ago the Oceanic Steamship Company of San Francisco withdrew its steamers carrying the American mails to Australasia. Even with the mail subsidy of $16,659 a voyage paid by the United States it could not compete with German subsidies of $41,604 a voyage, French subsidies of $47,814 a voyage, Japanese subsidies of $21,917 a voyage and British subsidies of $23,077 a voyage.

In three years the number of American steamships regularly crossing the Pacific has shrunk from fifteen to six.

Alas for our renown as a maritime nation and for the past prestige of our flag in the commerce of even the most distant countries! Where now is the American merchant fleet that once mastered every sea—the nursery and background of our naval power.

It is almost gone. No more American vessels are being built for the foreign trade and, as ships wear out and die, a few years under present conditions will see the American flag disappear from international commerce.

Our hearts beat high when we think of our noble array of battleships. We cheer as the mighty Utah is launched. We watch with a growing thrill of pride the digging of the Panama canal. We are a great nation now. We sit in the world council of the great powers. We are the protector of the American republics. We saved the Chinese empire from destruction. We brought peace to Japan and Russia. Our foreign trade has expanded to three and a third billions of dollars annually.

But in 1825, 85 years ago, 92 per cent. of our commerce with other countries was carried on by American ships, and to-day only 10 per cent. of our imports and exports is borne under the American flag. More than 63 per cent. of British foreign trade is carried in British ships.

We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars to build a great navy. We have added an empire to our national territory and hoisted our flag in the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Panama canal zone. Yet nine-tenths of all our foreign commerce is under foreign flags, and it is estimated that American shippers pay $200,000,000 annually in ocean freight rates and fares to our rivals in American trade.

Not a new American ship being built for that trade, the remaining few are rapidly wearing out and our flag being hauled down on some of these.

But beyond the dwindling of the American ship building trades; beyond the surrender of $200,000,000 in freight charges to our foreign rivals; beyond even an honest and wholesome pride in our flag at sea; beyond the mortifying lack of an ocean mail service possessed by other nations—there are even graver consequences to the disappearance of the American ship from international trade.

We send forth a great fleet to show both the civilized and uncivilized world the immensity of our armed power. That fleet is powerless without coal. Yet all but 13 per cent. of the coal sent to keep our battleships alive is carried in foreign merchant ships.

It is a matter of record that the small army provided by the United States for the last intervention in Cuba was taken there in foreign ships, under foreign flags.

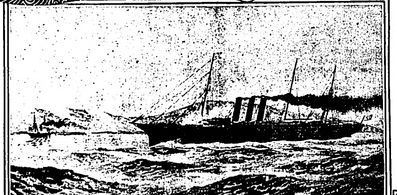
Even American war material sent recently to the Philippines was carried in Japanese ships under the Japanese flag; and that, too, while there was widespread newspaper talk of a possible war between the United States and Japan.

It was Washington who declared that "to an active, external commerce the protection of a naval force is indispensable."

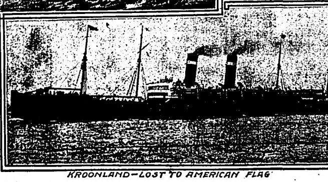
We have set our government 7,000 miles from the American continent; we have developed an international commerce amounting to three and a half billion dollars, and we insist on being recognized as one of the great world powers; yet so swiftly are American ships vanishing from the common highway of nations that we have to trust our mails to alien ships and our armed fleet must depend on foreign flags for coal.

Meanwhile our British and German rivals are launching greater and swifter merchant ships and the people of the United States are face to face with the plain fact that already nine-tenths of their foreign trade is in foreign ships, dependent upon foreign governments for protection.

A war between England and a foreign nation, Germany, for example, would almost paralyze the ocean transportation facilities of the United States and the results would be felt throughout the country in enormously increased freight charges.



THE YALE (S.S. PARIS) CAPTURING THE SPANISH S.S. RITA



KROONLAND—LOST TO AMERICAN FLAG

There is a brave, prosperous and glorious past that makes the present seem all the more weak and shameful.

Nothing in the history of the American people has more of the thrill of romantic adventure, steady courage, keen enterprise and shrewd, substantial accomplishment than the story of the once matchless ships and seamen of the American merchant marine.

It makes of blood run faster to-day to know that no foreign yacht can wrest the queen's cup from American seamanship; but what is that to the once continuous victories of our merchantmen throughout the world, to the pride of American ships that could outsail all rivals, lead in all sea trade and, when turned into means of war, make the American flag a terror in all waters?

It was armed American merchant ships that paralyzed British sea commerce in the struggle for independence.

It was armed American merchant ships that humbled the pride of England in the war of 1812.

In the beginning it was only natural that civilized Americans should become ship builders and sailors. The colonists, set on the shores of the Atlantic, with a savage, trackless continent behind them and before them the great ocean, beyond which lay the civilization and markets of Europe, were, out of the very nature of things, drawn to the sea.

They had forests of the finest timber growing down to the edge of the salt water and they were an energetic and practical people. A year after the Puritan colonists settled at Salem and Boston the armed trading ship Blessing of the Bay, the first deep sea vessel of Massachusetts, was built at Medford.

In 1740 New England had at least a thousand sail in the fishing trade. Commerce with Europe grew. In 1769 the colonists built 389 vessels, with a total tonnage aggregating 20,000 tons. And there were shipyards in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia.

The British shipyards could not compete with America. The British forests were largely depleted, while the Americans had a glorious supply of white oak, live oak, white pine, yellow pine and all the materials, save metal fastenings, necessary for the construction of ships, growing right at the margin of the ocean.

English shipwrights swarmed across to the colonies. In 1724 the shipbuilders of the Thames uttered a public outcry against the departure of their most skilled workmen to America.

The mother country steadily worked to break the American shipbuilding industry. But all in vain.

At the time of the revolution the tonnage of American ships was 398,000 tons, almost a third of the entire British tonnage and American trade with the British West Indies reached the impressive sum of about $18,000,000 a year.

Who can think of the American war for independence and the part which American merchant ships played in that struggle without a feeling of deep humiliation that we have sunk to such an insignificant rank on salt water to-day?

The colonies let loose their seamen upon the commerce of their haughty enemy. Their merchant ships had long carried cannon and gunners. Fighting was a part of commercial seamanship in those piratical days. In 1781 the thirty cruisers of the continental navy had dwindled down to nine, while the American privateers amounted to 449, with 6,735 guns, all manned by merchant sailors and directed by private owners.

These armed merchant ships not only scoured the seas in all directions, sweeping British commerce away, but they even hung on the British coast and captured the very linen vessels. The linen fleet passing between Ireland and England had to be, for the first time, convoyed by men-of-war.

So gallantly did the American privateers outwit or outrun the king's cruisers and prey on the king's commerce that before the end of the war they had captured or destroyed something like $12,000,000 worth of British property, to say nothing of the terrific loss occasioned by the general interruption of British commerce. And it is not difficult to understand, aside from all other things, that the merchant ships built of American trees, in American shipyards and manned by American sailors, made the purse-sensitive British all the more eager to abandon the struggle with America.

What could the United States do to-day, under similar circumstances, with practically no deep sea merchant marine and with a steam navy that has to depend for any unusual effort upon foreign ships and foreign crews to secure an adequate coal supply?

It is not a fact that the American members of The Hague international conference continue to plead with other great nations to respect goods carried in neutral ships during war? And why? because only 10 per cent. of American international commerce goes under the American flag and we must depend upon the flags of other nations to protect the other 90 per cent.

In 1794 the tariff weapon was used to protect American ships, when congress abandoned the 10 per cent. reduction in duties on cargoes carried in American ships and, instead, added 10 per cent. to the duties on merchandise imported in foreign ships.

American shipbuilding and ocean commerce grew by leaps and bounds under this vigorous protective policy. In the seven years lying between 1789 and 1796 American merchant shipping in the foreign trade rose from 123,893 tons to 576,733 tons. Before the discriminating tariff for the protection of ships was adopted only 17 per cent. of American imports were carried under the American flag. Within five years foreign ships had been almost expelled from American international commerce.

Everywhere, everywhere the fame of the American ship and the American merchant was spread. The American flag was carried to the remotest parts of the earth. In those days American statesmen knew the national value of a merchant marine.

Alas, the armed struggle between France and Great Britain which opened the nineteenth century brought temporary ruin to American shipping, just as American men-of-war under Preble, Decatur and Rogers smashed the barbarous corsair power of the emperor of Morocco and the bey of Tunis, leaving the waters of the Mediterranean safe for American ships.

At first the conflict between Napoleon and Great Britain compelled the transfer of European ships to the American flag. The carrying trade of Europe was in American hands.

Then the American sugar trade was killed by a British blockade of the French and Dutch West Indies. The British also searched our ships at sea and impressed our sailors into their navy under the claim that a naturalized citizen of British birth was still a Briton. In 1806 and 1807 there were 6,000 Americans serving unwillingly in the British navy. American merchant ships were confiscated on all sorts of pretexts. They were stopped and searched by British naval commanders even in American waters. Great Britain in 1806 declared a blockade of the European coast between Brest and the river Elbe. Napoleon answered by a decree blockading the coasts of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. Later on he ordered the confiscation of all neutral ships accepting British protection or paying British duties.

These were paralyzing blows to American shipping. President Jefferson answered the wholesale seizure of our ships and sailors by persuading congress to forbid American vessels to engage in foreign trade.

In 1812, when the United States at last responded to British outrages on our shipping by declaring war, the policy of Jefferson had allowed the American navy to shrink to 23 vessels carrying 556 guns. This small force captured 254 British ships valued with their cargoes at $6,600,000.

But the debt which America owes to her merchant marine in that second war for independence can be partly estimated by the fact that the armed American privateers numbered 517, with 2,893 guns, and captured 1,300 of the enemy's ships and cargoes, valued at $39,000,000.

In spite of the vexatious efforts of Great Britain to injure our maritime interests, American shipping continued to increase. It was not only the magnificent packet ships of the North Atlantic and the wonderful clipper ships of a later day that gave renown to the American shipyard aid sailor, but the swiftness of American ships and the courage and initiative of their merchant owners in every sea—even in the rich Asiatic trade—gave such an impetus to American sea enterprise that in 1861 our shipping tonnage almost exactly equaled the whole tonnage of Great Britain.

To-day our entire tonnage, including our coastwise trade, from which all foreign ships are excluded, is only one-third of the British tonnage, although our foreign trade has increased from $508,864,375 in 1861 to $3,315,272,503 in 1907. Our foreign trade has increased to more than six times its size in 1861, while our ships in foreign trade have shrunk from 2,496,894 tons to 940,086 tons.

American shipowners to-day frankly acknowledge that it is the high price of American labor, both in construction and operation of ships that has driven and is still driving our flag from foreign trade.

Eloquence Burned at Stake in Senate

WASHINGTON.—Oratory, when enthroned in the United States senate, hold doubtful sway. Let this be a warning to the young person who is training himself in the forensic art expecting some day to make the halls of the nation resound with eloquence until the listening throng with one accord is roused to action.

It don't happen. There is something wrong about the tradition that oratory sways. The senators can listen to oratory all day and remain pulseless as so many fish. Either oratory is not comprehended as it should be or the senate lacks red corpuscles.

For example, Senator W. B. Heyburn of Idaho recently was seen to rise and utterly waste a perfectly good broadside of eloquence. It was that noted speech in which he unfurled the star spangled banner over the matter of lending federal tents to the United Confederate veterans for their next reunion.

However, soon after he had risen to his feet and began his clarion enunciation, the galleries began filling with listeners, brought by the general alarm sent out that this day something at last was happening in the senate. He has a rich, melodious voice that is a treat to hear. His language is able, very. He employs correct gestures, and thumps on his desk with judgment and effect. He implored the senate not, oh, not to give recognition to the confederacy. He appealed especially to the patriots on his side of the house, whose party had saved the union from that period of error. He was vehement, but not unduly bitter. Things struggled within him for utterance, but he had calmly set his limitations. He would not wave the bloody shirt.

Amid a tense silence he sat down. The galleries craned forward, every heart beating. Would the senate now be torn by sectional strife?

It didn't even rip.

Everybody but Mr. Heyburn voted to let the United Confederates have what they wanted. The northern folks voted right along with the southern contingent. Even eagerly did they so vote. Mr. Heyburn's vote was the solitary recognition given the throbbing appeal from far off Idaho.

Thus was oratory martyred in the United States senate.

Now You Know What Whisky Really Is

IT'S DA REAL TING!

THE question "what is whisky" finally has been answered officially and President Taft's decision has been formulated in a set of regulations prepared by the pure food board of the department of agriculture.

"Weary Willie," when he meets "Lazy Tom" along the roadside and stops to take a swig out of his bottle, will not care whether it is whisky according to the presidential ruling or not, just as long as it tastes like the real stuff and has the same effect, but the man who buys it in bottles or over the bar can see the government label which will hereafter be found on all packages.

In brief, the regulations declare that all unmixed spirits distilled from grain, prepared in the customary ways, are entitled to the name "whisky" without qualification. Blended whisky must be labeled as such.

The term "whisky," however, is restricted to distillates from grain, and under the regulations distillates from other substances, if labeled "whisky," are misbranded and the person guilty of misbranding may be prosecuted. The regulation follows:

"Under the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, all unmixed distilled spirits from grain, colored and flavored with harmless color and flavor, in the customary ways, either by the charred barrel process or by the addition of caramel and harmless flavor, if not potable strength and not less than 80 proof, are entitled to the name whisky without qualification.

"If the proof be less than 80, that is, if more water be added, the actual proof must be stated upon the label and this requirement applied as well to blends and compounds of whisky.

"Whisky of the same or different kinds, that is, straight whisky, rectified whisky, re-distilled whisky, and neutral spirits whisky or like substances and mixtures of such whiskies, with or without harmless color flavors used for purposes of coloring and flavoring only, are blends under the law and must be so labeled."

Capitol Messenger Didn't Know Aldrich

I'AM DEAD
HAR-HAR SAY-I'AM ALDRICH
SENATE

FUNNY things happen, even in the corridors of the capitol in Washington, among those men who have been longest there. One of the messengers at the capitol is John P. Hamlin, who for more than 30 years has been messenger about the senate corridors. The other day Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island was positively held up in the corridors and refused admission to the elevator by a messenger who had served the United States senate longer than Senator Aldrich has. Mr. Hamlin, who is very old and does not see any too well, said: "Are you a senator?" squaring himself across the entrance to the elevator which is used only by United States senators.

"Yes," said Mr. Aldrich, entering into the spirit of the situation and hesitating a moment.

"Must be a new one," said Mr. Hamlin, talking more to himself than Mr. Aldrich.

"Well, hardly that," said Mr. Aldrich, chuckling. "My name is Aldrich."

The poor old messenger almost fell in his tracks, and Senator Aldrich for almost the first time in his lidfe laughed out loud.

Poor Messenger Hamlin will hardly recover from his panic. He is past 80 years of age, and was foreman of the jury that convicted Guiteau of the assassination of Garfield.

Beau Brummel Collects Old Milk Bill

THE maids and butlers of Washington's finest residential districts are well trained, but sometimes even they fail to discriminate. A story is told of a milkman who had a great deal of trouble in collecting his bills at a certain aristocratic house. The lady of fashion put him off over and over again and absolutely refused to see him in person—as a milkman.

Money is as essential in dispensing the lacteal fluid as in other lines of business, so the milkman resorted to strategy. A few days after his latest unanswered appeal, a man arrayed in the latest style of fall suit, with dashing diamond studs in a snow-white shirt bosom, hands neatly gloved and carrying a cane, walked up the steps of the residence of the delinquent milk purchaser. It was ten o'clock in the morning, and the mistress of the house was at breakfast. Looking out before opening the door—some Washington hall doors are provided with a ventilator-like "lookout" like those of Philadelphia—the maid failed to recognize the milkman, divested of his overalls. Opening the door, on hearing his modest request for Mrs. So-and-So, she at once ushered him in and took his card to her mistress. He waited—a trifle awkwardly, perhaps—in the hall, but was upheld by the stern justice of his errand. The lady of the house arrived.

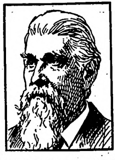
"Yes?" she said, questioningly. "What can I do for you?"

"The amount of this, if you please, madam," said he, presenting the obnoxious bill.

Whatever the lady may have thought of the improvised Beau Brummel, the bill was promptly paid. There were no lingering farewells, but the milk account in that house was always taken care of to date after that.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

HIS SPEECH STIRS SENATE



Col. James Gordon, the man who was once wrongfully accused of being an accessory to the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, delivered in the United States senate a few days ago, an address, which Senator Depew, probably the greatest orator in the upper branch of congress, says will long be cherished in that august body.

Not only the simplicity of the address, but the occasion of its deliverance furnished an incident unprecedented in the history of the senate. Although he had served as a senator only 60 days, being appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator McLaurin, Senator Gordon had been called to the chair two days before to preside over the body while Vice-President Sherman was absent for a few minutes. The venerable colonel, who had fought against the stars and stripes in the civil war, felt the great honor bestowed upon him, and when it was announced that Mississippi had elected a senator to permanently represent the state, Col. Gordon arose to make his speech. He told how, when a boy of five, his mother assured him that if he led a clean life he might some day occupy the chair of the vice-president; said the memory of her words never had left him and how the vice-president's kindness had brought to him the achievement of a life-time wish. Then he branched off into question of north and south, telling how he had fought the union because he believed he was right. He praised John D. Rockefeller, who later through the senate, announced his great plan for aiding mankind.

The rules of the senate against applause were broken both in the galleries and on the floor when he said:

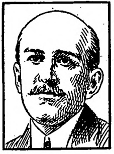
"I want to see the Mason and Dixon line obliterated from the map of the United States and on it written the words 'Our Country.' I am tired of sectionalism; God knows, I have seen enough of it. I don't want any more of it.

"I do not want to hear any speech in the senate, or anywhere else, that stirs up any strife between the old soldiers or citizens.

"But our people were good people, and we do not dispute that yours were just as good. Not at all; our people are not quarreling over these things down south.

"We want you to think well of us, and there is no use in calling us traitors. Nobody can take away the glories of either side."

PRESIDENT TAFT'S TRAINER



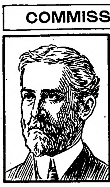
Tower clocks in Washington were just striking the hour of seven. Cabinet officers, senators and representatives and others, were snug in their beds, and the sedate old capital of the United States was not fully awake when a man weighing not more than 150 pounds, entered one of the high gates in the high iron fence on the Pennsylvania avenue side of the White House, and walked briskly up to the main entrance. He opened the door and walked in.

Fifteen minutes later he might have been found attired in gymnasium suit, punching at the face of the president of the United States. The man was Dr. Charles E. Barker. He is not the president's physician, nor is he Mr. Taft's trainer, but he might be called a combination of both, for while he exercises the president's muscles, he also exercises care over the chief executive's diet.

Every morning except Sunday, when President Taft is in town, Dr. Barker may be seen entering the White House at seven o'clock. After he enters the door no person but the president is allowed to see just what he does there, for the exercising is done in private.

Dr. Barker took charge of Mr. Taft's body in 1905. Then his patient was the secretary of war and a patient in the strictest sense of the word. Now it is different, and the doctor's patient is the nation's president and the nation is entitled to know how he is taking care of his charge.

COMMISSIONER UNDER FIRE

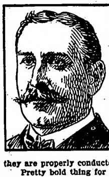


Following so close upon the heels of the Pinchot-Ballinger row, the charges that were made against Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor of the department of commerce and labor, caused a stir in official circles in Washington. Mr. Neill, be it known, is, like Pinchot, a close friend and was a trusted aide of former President Roosevelt.

Thomas R. Dawley, Jr., formerly a special agent in the labor bureau, makes the charges against Mr. Neill. He accuses the commissioner of changing and suppressing reports of special agents. Right here let it be said that Commissioner Neill declares the charges in the main are not true; admitting others, he says they were mistakes.

To Benjamin S. Cable, assistant secretary of commerce and labor, and Charles Earl, solicitor of the department, Dawley declared he had been assigned to investigations in connection with woman and child labor for which congress appropriated $300,000. Dawley charges Commissioner Neill with changing the data he collected so as to bear out and develop facts and conditions as the commissioner had preconceived them. He also charges that Commissioner Neill dismissed him and other special agents for objecting to the controverting of facts.

FRISCO'S LIBERAL MAYOR



Patrick Henry McCarthy, mayor of San Francisco, has the courage of his convictions as did another Patrick Henry, famous in history. Mayor McCarthy believes gambling under certain restrictions is not harmful to the city. He sees no reason to stop the encounters of pugilists, and thinks racing is all right. Mayor McCarthy not only thinks these things but he isn't afraid to say so.

Not long ago he came out in an interview and expressed such views that the sporting element rejoiced in San Francisco. Mr. McCarthy was the union labor candidate, and was elected on a platform that declared for greater personal freedom. "If the people want these things, I see no reason why they shouldn't have them," he said. "I believe properly conducted gambling houses will have no harmful effect on the city, and so long as they are properly conducted I see no reason for closing them."

Pretty bold thing for a mayor to say, and there are few chief executives who would have dared to express such a sentiment. This policy has shocked that element which has been trying to clean up the city.

Soon after Mayor McCarthy gave his approval to prize fighting, Andrew Carnegie arrived at Santa Barbara and gave out an interview. The 'Laird of Skibo" expressed the belief that San Francisco is being held back through the city's reputation as a prize fight center. He said all the talk about the Jeffries-Johnson fight is injurious to the business interests of the Pacific coast metropolis, and on that account he would not want to live in San Francisco.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

How Deaf Mutes Use Slang and "Cuss"

NEW YORK.—Five packed cars comprising a train on the Bath Beach line of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit were going toward Coney Island a few days ago, and in every one of the cars there was a flutter of the hands of youngsters, boys and girls, that suggested flocks of doves arising in flight. Passengers accustomed to travel on that line thought nothing of it at first, for the population along most of the way below Thirty-ninth street is made up largely of people who employ gesticulation as an aid to speech or speech as an aid to gesticulation.

It did not take long for the accustomed traveler to note that not a word was heard from the hundreds of animated youngsters whose hands and fingers were never at rest. A group of boys riding on one of the car platforms seemed to be having the time of their lives, when a man stamped heavily on the platform. The boys looked around and saw a flash of one of his hands.

A passenger who by that time was aware that the train was carrying an excursion of young deaf mutes asked the man what he said to them.

"I said, 'cut it out,'" said the man.

"Cut out what?" he was asked.

"Their slang and bad language," said the man, who was evidently one of those in charge of the excursion.

"Part of it," said the instructor, "is common to most deaf mutes who are somewhat in touch with the speaking world, as these boys are.

"Not long after it has taken its place in speech the deaf mutes have their sign for it, and it is more quickly said by a sign than in words. For example, I told the boys to 'cut it out,' for when I see them using slang I find it more effective to reprove them in slang. It reminds them that the instructors understand all that they say.

"Yet, as I said, they keep us guessing. Sometimes a group of boys in conversation will throw in here and there a sign that is a puzzle to us.

"When it comes to cuss words and other bad language," the instructor said in reply to a qeustion, "the signs are nearly the same all over. A roguish boy will swear like a pirate behind an instructor's back, but the profanity of the mute world is denoted by signs that for the most part do not change."

Whisky Gives 100 Sick Chickens "Jag"

I'AM S-H-O SIC-HIC SICK

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—As a chicken doctor, Joseph J. Rhoades, special policeman, residing at 201 Church street, southeast, is something of a success. But all his 100 chickens had a headache one day recently, for in the early morning hours they all became gloriously drunk. The chickens were not to blame, for they were all fed whisky when unconscious.

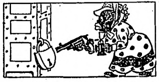
Rhoades works nights. Just before he left home one evening, Mrs. Rhoades suggested that as the chicken house was cold she feared the chickens would freeze if it were not heated. So Rhoades built a charcoal fire and went away. He returned shortly after midnight and took a look at his coop.

One hundred chickens were stretched on their backs with their toes up. At first their owner thought them dead from the charcoal fumes, but he discovered that they were unconscious.

The first thing he did was to get them into the fresh air and call to Mrs. Rhoades to bring the whisky bottle. Chicken after chicken got its allowance and soon they all were on their feet, staggering around the yard, cackling in uncertain fashion.

They were too intoxicated to stay on their roosting perches, so Mr. Rhoades kept watch, and as a chicken seemed to recover he chased it into the henhouse to sleep the "jag" off. By daylight they were all sound asleep.

Pays Herself by Taking Pork Chops



CHICAGO.—Lena Stevenson, a negro cook employed in the fashionable boarding house of Mrs. D. E. Bonner, 4339 Oakenwald avenue, must have read in the newspapers about hogs soaring in price above anything known in 40 years, for when she set about recompensing herself for wages she thought were owing her she passed by the family diamonds and plate and looted the ice box of pork chops.

The cook had a tilt with her mistress, and they separated at night without having come to an agreement.

But the cook had no idea of losing any of the fruits of her labors. She knew where were stored the valuables of the Bonner household and during the night following the quarrel over the wages, a dark and mysterious person stealthily approached the Bonner meat safe, and after working the combination, abstracted therefrom pork chops and eggs enough to pay for her wages and over.

She carried her palatable plunder to the Hyde Park police station, whence she telephoned her mistress early the next morning that she had in her desperation carried off Mrs. Bonner's treasures, and would keep them for ransom till her wages were paid. Mrs. Bonner nearly fainted, and her boarders threw old fashioned stage fits when they heard what had happened. When Mrs. Bonner had recovered she made breakfast from such odds and ends as the cook had set no value on, and then obtained a warrant for the offending cook.

The story of how the Stevenson woman laid violent hands on Mrs. Bonner's pork chops was told in court before Municipal Judge Fry of the Woodlawn police station, and the court fined the cook one dollar. Mrs. Bonner, who is a wise woman, immediately paid the Stevenson woman her wages rather than risk a second midnight raid on the treasures of her kitchen.

"Show Me" Tires Governor of Missouri

I'LL SHOW YUH

ST. LOUIS.—The reason Gov. Hadley wants a new nickname for Missouri is because he has become weary, on his travels outside the state, of the "show me!" line of conversational and banquet humor.

A man well acquainted with the governor, who has been also on some of his journeys, explained the situation several days ago.

"You can't blame Hadley," said this friend. "He has a strong sense of humor and he used to enjoy the 'show me' jokes, and used them in his conversation and speeches. But since he has been governor he has found how easy it is to get too much of a good thing.

"Wherever he goes he has found it to be a moral certainty that the same old 'wheeze' will greet him. It is always on meeting a man. 'Aha, governor, I suppose we'll have to show you,' or on being introduced to an audience: 'The governor of Missouri will now show us.'

"And, of course, he has to smile, and to acknowledge the 'witticism' in some apt way. There are only six or eight forms of the 'show me' joke at most, and he has learned to know, by the way a speaker starts, which one is coming, and to have his jocose little answer ready. And any one who sees him bravely trying to be cheerful and smiling in the face of the inevitable bromides must sympathize with his longing for something new.

"His case is fully as bad as that of Gen. Sherman. Old Tecumseh once said, you remember, that whatever war might be, it was nothing compared with having to hear 'Marching Through Georgia' played wherever he went, and that if he ever had foreseen his sufferings from that song he would have marched not only to the sea, but into it."

BACK TO THE FARM.

Nine hundred million dollars' worth of Agricultural products were exported from the United States last year, according to the bureau of statistics in the department of commerce and labor. Secretary Wilson says that the total was $8,776,000,000, so that a little more than 10 per cent. of our farm products were sold abroad and the home consumers had to be content with the remaining nine-tenths. This is a healthy condition, but doubtless helps to explain the high price of provisions in this country. Secretary Wilson thinks the high prices are due to the fact that there are too few farmers and too many distributers, too many young men rushing to the city, instead of staying home and tilling the soil. If we are to supply Europe as well as America with food stuffs we must increase the number of farmers with the increase of our population, and if farming is made and continues sufficiently profitable there will be no lack of farmers. The poor rewards of farming in the past have driven the farmer boys to other pursuits. There will be a cry of "back to the farm" as soon as it is clear that there is money in farming commensurate with the toil which it exacts from those whose livelihood is the cultivation of the soil.

Certainly the gentleman who undertake to explain the cause of high prices of necessaries of life should reach some sort of agreement and harmonize their views before they try to enlighten the public. For weeks the big packers and others have been saying that meat is so dear because the people eat so much and the supply is not equal to the demand. But here come the shoe manufacturers declaring that the people are turning vegetarians, and that with so few animals killed for food there is a shortage in skins and hides. Here are two radically different stories. Which is the consumer to believe?

An Indianapolis man returned from Alaska wealthy, and gave to his parents, to whom he had been as one dead for 20 years, a check for $5,000 to make them feel that he was still their son. Cases of this kind are frequent enough to cause thought as to whether those who disappear in that way and cause anxiety and sorrow covering half an average life can ever make amend with demonstrations of affection from the check book. Enoch Ardens without proper explanation as to their absence are in the same class, and there is always doubt as to the quality of the sympathy that should be expressed.

Crete continues to be a stormy petrel in European politics. Notwithstanding recent warnings the Cretans manifest a rebellious spirit and have so stirred up the protective powers that fresh warnings against further agitation have been issued. Crete is a small and relatively insignificant spot on the map. But when it keeps some of the greatest nations in the world on the anxious seat owing to doubt as to what the Cretans will do next it shows extraordinary capacity for trouble making.

The claim that men could make a better business administration of foreign missionary affairs than women if they would only take as much interest in them, will be denied by anybody who has ever patronized an oyster supper given to raise foreign mission funds. The ladies have reduced the ratio to one oyster to the bowl and the best business talent in the world could do no more by way of doing less.

Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, is trying to cheer meat boycotters with the assertion that the spineless cactus may, in the course of time, take the place of meat on the table. But the meat eater of the present will, without discrediting the Burbank production, feel satisfied to let the spineless cactus solve the meat problem of the far future.

A Turk who wished to become a resident of this conutry has been deported because he said, when he was questioned by the immigration officials, that he believed it would be right for him to marry all the women he could support. The officials probably had reasons for believing that his judgment as to what would constitute support was faulty.

Some small boys in Gotham tied up a playmate and set his clothing on fire and only prompt rescue by passersby saved him from serious injury. The little tormentors were dismissed with a reprimand, which shows why some people think Solomon knew what he was talking about.

A chemical analysis shows that 99 per cent. of a cup of tea is water. This does not refer to boarding-house tea, which contains even a greater percentage of water.

ROOSEVELT AT KHARTUM

EX-PRESIDENT IS AGAIN IN TOUCH WITH CIVILIZATION, HOMEWARD BOUND

Greeted in Historic Egyptian City by His Wife, Daughter and Hundreds of Correspondents and Friends---Chronological Review of a Remarkable Expedition

GATHERING OF THE TRIBES AT KHARTOUM

MRS. ROOSEVELT AND MISS ETHEL

COL. ROOSEVELT AND HIS AFRICAN SMILE

Khartum, Egyptian Sudan.—Ex-President Roosevelt is again back in touch with civilization and is at this place as the guest of the Egyptian and English governments, being entertained at the governor general's palace by Gen. Sir Reginald Wingate. He was met here by Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Ethel and by a host of American and European correspondents and numerous delegations of political and other friends from the United States. In fact this historic town is literally filled with visitors brought here to greet the returning traveler.

With his arrival at this place, Col. Roosevelt completed one of the most notable journeys through the wilderness of Africa that has been undertaken since the days of Livingstone and Stanley. It was a remarkable journey both in number of animals slain and preserved as specimens, and because of its lack of accidents and sickness of every kind. Ordinarily a traveler, through the regions through which Col. Rooseevlt has passed, comes out of the jungles loaded with malaria and fever germs. Up to the present time, neither Col. Roosevelt nor any of his party have shown any symptoms of having contracted any of the numerous contagious diseases.

Gen. Sir Reginald Wingate provided countless ways for the entertainment of his distinguished guest. Representatives of the many tribes of the desert have been gathered here into one great encampment, and for Col. Roosevelt's entertainment, have indulged in every possible form of native amusement, giving dances, races, etc.

The town of Khartum is a mass of color. Flags of Egypt, England and America are everywhere, and the ex-president has probably appreciated nothing more than the opportunity of visiting this historical spot.

Khartum is virtually built around the grave of "Chinese" Gordon. The city itself is a gigantic monument to that soldier's deeds and his heroic death. In the center of it stands his effigy in bronze, mounted on a camel, gazing with fixed eyes out toward the desert which mocked him during the terrible year that he lay there waiting for relief. Behind the statue stands the British governor's palace, an imposing structure in the Gothic style, typical of British power and British permanence.

Name Gordon Everywhere.

Not far away is the Gordon Memorial college, a school built with funds raised by Gen. Kitchener by subscription throughout Great Britain, in which the Sudanese newer generation is trained for service in the government which conquered its fathers. Everywhere throughout the city the name Gordon appears. There is the Gordon hotel, the Gordon drive and up the White Nile the Gordon tree. Gordon's memory will live so long as Khartum exists. The British have transformed the city of his death into a memorial to his glory that can laugh at time.

Khartum stands at the confluence of the White and Blue Niles, and some day with the development of the wilderness south of it will become a metropolis as important to the commerce of Africa as Chicago is to the commerce of North America. Properly speaking, however, the city itself does not extend beyond the banks of the Blue Nile. The river passes directly through the city, and along its banks, fronted by the barracks of the British soldiers, lies a magnificent driveway three miles in length.

British Policy Is Seen.

Northwest of Khartum is Omdurman, the city occupied by the Mahdi after the death of Gordon and the scene of the licentious revelries that occupied the native soldiery up to the time that they were confronted and overwhelmed by Kitchener. The British, true to their policy of colonization, have not attempted seriously to interfere with Moslem customs here. The ruins of the Khalifa's body guard headquarters, the military prison, the remnants at the Arab fortifications have all been allowed to stand.

Still further north is the field of Kerreri, the shambles in which Kitchener with mathematical exactitude slashed to pieces the Arab forces. The battle was one of the bloodiest in modern history. It was marked on the Mohammedan side by a courage and ferocity almost superhuman, and on the side of the British by a skill and coolness that was in itself a tribute to Anglo-Saxon civilization.

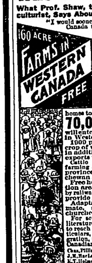
WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:



"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel (800 miles north of the International boundary). Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly

COOPER FOLLOWERS GIVE REASON FOR THEIR BELIEF

With a theory that human health is dependent on the stomach and with a medicine which he says proves this theory, L. T. Cooper, a comparatively young man, has built up an immense following during the past year.

Cooper has visited most of the leading cities of the country, and in each city has aroused a storm of discussion about his beliefs and his medicines. Wherever he has gone, people have called upon him by tens of thousands, and his preparation has sold in immense quantities.

The sale of this medicine has now spread over the entire country, and is growing enormously each day. In view of this, the following statements from two of the great number of followers which he now has, are of general interest.

N. V. Marsh, residing at 217 South Daly street, Los Angeles, Cal., has the following to say upon the subject of the Cooper preparations:

"For more than a year I experienced the most intense suffering, due to a form of stomach trouble which the doctors called catarrhal gastritis. After eating I would fill up with gas, which caused frequent belching. The abdominal area would expand until I could scarcely breathe, causing great distress. At such times I could not keep still, but paced the streets for hours until the pain subsided.

"Frequently I went without eating rather than endure the torture that was sure to follow. Liquids were the only kind of food I could partake of with safety. I had spells of dizziness, and became badly run down through suffering and lack of proper nourishment. I tried various remedies in search of relief, but they failed to help me.

"Some time ago a brother member in a lodge to which I belong urged me to try the Cooper remedies, which were then being demonstrated in Los Angeles. He stated that to his personal knowledge they had been of great benefit to others in a like condition, and on the strength of his recommendation I procured a treatment of Cooper's New Discovery.

"It proved helpful from the first dose, and in less than a week I was eating regularly and heartily, without experiencing any bad effects afterward. Since taking the full treatment I am perfectly well and enjoy living for the first time in many months. Now I can eat a hearty supper, then go to bed and sleep like a healthy boy. I feel so well that I can hardly realize I am the same man. Cooper's New Discovery has worked a marvelous change in me—it has done all that was claimed for it."

Another statement by Mr. W. B. Stewart, 109 W. Madison street, Chicago, is as follows: "I have had stomach trouble for years, and anyone who is afflicted this way knows what an awful distressed feeling it causes. Many a time I have felt that I would give most any price to be cured. It was by accident that I heard of this man Cooper's remedies. I immediately made up my mind to buy a treatment of him. I used it for about two weeks, and it is impossible to tell how much good it has done me. I feel altogether different. I have more life and energy than I have had for years. The medicine certainly does stimulate and strengthen the whole system. Tired feeling and weak condition of the stomach has entirely passed away. I feel well again."

Cooper's New Discovery is sold by all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, we will forward you the name of a druggist in your city who will. Don't accept "something just as good."—The Cooper Medicine Co., Dayton, Ohio.

SHOEING RACE HORSES IS AN IMPORTANT WORK

Nature's way is the way of the race-track horseshoer. He plies his vocation in the open light of the day, sheltered from the sun by a canopy and protected from the wind and rain if need be by side curtains of canvas which he carries along from early summer until late in the fall. About six o'clock in the morning, according to the amount of work which is ahead of him, the ringing anvil may be heard in the shop of the track shoer, and its resounding notes are often never quieted until the sun sets.

The average life of a shoe on the track is less than a week. All depends on the weight of the horse, his way of going and the amount of work done. Three or four days is a good life for some shoes, especially those worn by the dweller—the kind of a horse that grinds out metal in about half the time some of his light traveling stable mates do.

No. 1, a square-toed shoe recommended as the most effective design for steadying the action. Nos. 2 and 3, front and hind shoes worn by Amy Brooks when doing her best work, 1906.

In the case of the short-lived shoe care is taken to get the nail holes in exactly the same location as were the holes in the shoe which had been removed, and not unless the hoof needs taking down after several weeks of untouched growth are new holes taken. As is well known the weight of the shoes of a harness performer is regulated according to his needs, and those needs are understood thoroughly by both trainer and shoer only after an experience which in some cases has been extremely trying as well as costly.

As to the percentage of credit which should be given horseshoers for the part that they take in straightening defective cases and thereby assisting in the production of speed, Dr. James Seiter expresses himself as believing that not less than 50 per cent. of credit is due the shoer. This is from a man bearing the degree of D. V. S. behind his name.

In speaking of some intricate cases shod by him Dr. Seiter relates this of Montell and Just-The-Thing, both trotters, and both traveled much the same, being addicted to the habit of skipping behind. The shoe which was used with effect on each of these horses was made with the heels long, considerably longer than the foot, with a long outside calk and a grab toe.

Grab toes are something that Dr. Seiter does not believe in and he proves his position by citing the case of Sonoma Girl, that once wore such a shoe, but in obtaining her fastest mark she carried a shoe not grab toed but with toe rolled. At the present time this same mare carries a bar shoe with rolled toe.

Spanish Queen is shod in a somewhat peculiar fashion, inasmuch as her right hind shoe is carried inward at the outside heel. This same M. & M. stake winner was a somewhat difficult case to master. Originally carrying a three-ounce shoe the weight was increased to five ounces, later on made seven ounces, and it is in this that the Queen does her best work.

Formerly Spanish Queen had a very bad quarter and this was built up with a wedge of aluminum between the hoof and shoe much after the same fashion that a double wedge of leather might be used, the aluminum being the substitute which was found best in her case. She is very much afraid of concussion and to relieve this carries a leather rim between the shoe and the hoof.

Browns Get Bemis.

The St. Louis Browns secured Catcher Bemis of the Cleveland team by the waiver process. The former Nap will join the Browns at their Texas training camp in the near future.

NOTES of the DIAMOND

Most of the National and American league baseball teams are now in training. By St. Patrick's day every team will be at work getting ready for the 1910 season. Pittsburg, the champions of the world, will not go into camp until March 14. Two days later the Boston teams will start training and then all will be at work.

All of the others are now on the ground and the managers are looking over the recruits. The Chicago White Sox went to California on a special train. President Comiskey and Manager Duffy have a large squad of youngsters and expect to obtain from the bunch a world beating team. The Sox will play a large number of exhibition games before they return to Chicago to open the battle on April 14.

Part of the Chicago Cubs stopped at West Baden, Ind., before going on to New Orleans to train. All of the regulars are signed up and Manager Chance says he'll win another pennant. The St. Louis Cardinals work at Little Rock, Ark. Cincinnati, Pittsburg and Brooklyn selected Hot Springs. The New York Giants went to Marlin Texas and the Philadelphia team to Southern Pines, N. C.

The St. Louis Browns are at Houston, Tex., Detroit went to San Antonio and Cleveland to Alexandria, La. Connie Mack has the Philadelphia boys at Virginia Hot Springs and Manager McAleer took the Washington team to Norfolk, Va. New York is at Athens, Ga., and the Boston speed boys will go to Hot Springs, Ark.

New methods of training are to be tried by some of the managers and there seems to be a greater tendency this year to give the recruits a chance right from the first to show what they can do.

Detroit, like the Chicago Cubs and the Pittsburg Pirates, will stand pat on last year's team, Manager Jennings thinking the boys who won the American league championship last year strong enough. There will be little change in the Philadelphia Athletics. The Boston American league team was a bunch of youngsters last year, with a few exceptions. They played great baseball and are expected to do better this year. Cleveland has a bunch of new ones and a new manager and the lineup will be changed considerably. As usual Washington starts out with a lot of recruits and some old ones obtained in trades with other teams. Frank Farrell has paid out $30,000 to strengthen the New York Highlanders.

Other managers in the National league are keeping their eyes on "Old Fox" Griffith. The Cincinnati chief gave that city the best article of baseball last year that it has enjoyed in several seasons, and the wily manager has done everything possible to strengthen his club for 1910. McGraw has some new ones that are expected to help Matthewson win more games for the Giants this season. The scrappy New Yorker hopes to get Mike Donlin back into the fray.

Chance likewise, is hoping to hear that Johnny Kling will be permitted to go behind the bat for the Cubs. Mordecai Brown, Matthewson's great pitching rival, now enjoys the largest salary paid a pitcher, and with Kling to catch him, although Jimmy Archer did great work last year, ought to beat his former records.

Manager Fred Clarke of the Pittsburg Pirates, says he will win the pennant, and the world's championship again this year, no matter what the other teams may do in the way of strengthening. Roger Bresnahan, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, is now better satisfied with his chances, although he is not rash enough to claim he will win the rag.

Charlie Dooin of the Phillies, declares his lads are going to finish well up in front, and he'll not be satisfied if they don't cop the pennant. "Bill" Dahlen, new manager of the Brooklyn team, is expected to put some ginger into the outfit from the town across the big bridge. The outlook for the Boston Doves seems darker than that of any other team in the National league, but Fred Lake says his kids will be trying all the time to keep from winning the cellar championship.

Some Philadelphians with money have been trying to bet that Connie Mack's Athletics win the championship. They wanted to wager $7,000 against $10,000 that the Athletics would beat the Detroit Tigers.

The stories from the training camps are beginning to come out, and in the next few days we will hear all about the showing of the youngsters. Remember when you read these things that playing in practice and playing in a real contest is not the same thing by any means, and many a youngster who looked like a world beater in training, blew up when he faced the real test.

140 GAMES FOR THREE-I

Minor League Decides on 1910 Schedule and Changes in the Constitution.

The Three-I league will play a 140-game schedule, with four jumps, during the coming season. This was decided at the meeting of the league held recently at the Palmer house. May 4 was set as the probable opening date. Only a skeleton draft of the dates was made, the official drawing up of the schedule being left to Wilson Bering of Decatur. The schedule will be submitted to a mail vote when prepared.

It was decided that the receipts of holiday games would be pooled, as in the past, and that any new club seeking a franchise would have to pay $1,000 in addition to one-eighth of the money in the league treasury. New cities seeking membership also must have a regular organization, a ball plant and a balance in the club treasury of $2,500. It was agreed that in the future money will be returned to patrons when four and a half innings have not been played. In the past the fans were considered to have received their money's worth in three innings.

Adams and Marquard in 1908.

"Babe" Adams and "Rube" Marquard were rival pitchers in the American association, Marquard pitching for Indianapolis, which won the pennant in 1908, while Adams did the fighting for Louisville, the runner-up. Peculiarly, these two officiated in the same game which decisively put the Colonels out of the running, Indianapolis winning the game in question. Yet when they landed in the National league Adams proved a sensation and won the world's championship for the Pirates, while Marquard had nothing but hard luck at New York.

Line-Up of the Brewers.

Manager McCloskey of the Milwaukee American association team announces his line-up for the coming season as follows: Pitchers—McGlynn, Short, McShane, Stoweers, Dougherty and Manske. Catchers—Marshall, Ludwig and Hostetter. First baseman—McGann. Second baseman McCormick. Shortstop—Robinson. Third baseman—Clark. Outfielders—Barry, Barrett and Randall. Seven of this outfit at one time wore Cardinal uniforms.

Jennings Gives Cubs Flag.

Manager Jennings of the Tigers, when asked his opinion of the coming National league race, said: "Chicago will win the pennant, I think, with Pittsburg in second place. I can't see how Pittsburg can repeat. Neither can I see how New York can beat Pittsburg out for second place. I see the finish like this: Chicago, Pittsburg, New York, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Boston.

Addie Joss Picks Detroit.

Detroit will win its fourth successive pennant and second place in the 1910 American league race will be a battle between Philadelphia or Boston, according to Addie Joss, the Cleveland pitcher. The Sox will be strong pennant contenders from the word go, says Joss, who bases his predictions on the pitching staff and the young material which Manager Duffy has secured.

Form a Six-Club League.

At a meeting of the directors of the New Virginia Valley league at Huntington, W. Va., it was decided to make the league a six-team organization, with the following towns represented: Charleston, Huntington, Montgomery, Parkersburg and Point Pleasant, W. Va., and Gallipolis, O. Ashland and Catlettsburg, Ky., may be taken in later.

BLACKBURN MOST COSTLY YOUNGSTER IN BASEBALL

NEW SHORTSTOP OF THE CHICAGO SOX IS THE HIGHEST-PRICED RECRUIT THIS YEAR.

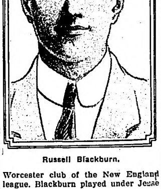
There's going to be a lot of disappointment if Russell Blackburn doesn't make good for the Sox this year. Charlie Comiskey, owner of the Chicago American league team, went down pretty deep into his pocket for Blackburn and gave two players, Jake Atz and Mike Welday to boot.

Hugh Duffy, manager of the Sox, says Blackburn is the goods. He had the youngster on his team at Providence last year and hasn't stopped praising the shortstop. Duffy ought to know a good player, for none was better than he when he was in harness, and he has had enough experience as a manager to tell a man who ought to make good. Since Freddie Parent fell down on the shortstop job the Sox haven't had a good man for the place, and it has been a weak spot in the line-up. Duffy declares Blackburn will fill the gap.

To the casual patron of the Sox games last year it seemed that what Comiskey needed more than anything was hitters. The team was weak with the bat. Comiskey admitted it himself. Duffy thinks Blackburn will not only be there with the goods when it comes to covering short, but will furnish some hitting that will help the team. There is no more popular magnate in the business than Comiskey, and he has spent a lot of money to get good players. He has tried out a lot of youngsters and found many of them wanting. It is to be hoped that Blackburn will supply the long-felt want.

Blackburn is the highest-priced youngster in baseball. He was originally a protege of Connie Mack, and was intended for the Athletics.

Mack wrote Blackburn, who lives in Palmyra, N. J., to come over and see him; then signed him to play for the Worcester club of the New England league. Blackburn played under Jesse Burkett for one year, 1908, during which Connie Mack forgot about the slip he had planted, because he had so many others he didn't know what to do.



Russell Blackburn.

Duffy bought Blackburn for his Providence team last year, and by the time Mack discovered how well his find had developed he learned that Comiskey and Barney Dreyfuss were scrapping for the player, with no chance for his sponsor to cut in. To get the promising shortstop the Sox magnate was obliged to dig pretty deeply into his pocket, and promise to give Providence Mike Welday and Jake Atz in addition. Blackburn swatted for .273 in 121 games, and led the regular shortstops of the Eastern league in fielding.

Toe Hold Still Profitable.

Frank Gotch, with his deadly toe hold, put another foreign invader out of the running a few nights ago in Chicago. This time it was James Esson from bonnie Scotland who succumbed. Gotch gained two falls without much trouble and put a nice bunch of money into his pockets. Esson was confident—as they all seem to be—that he could throw the Iowa farmer. Now he knows better.

THE SUNBEAM,

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

We received the finacial statement of the county last week, which we have filed for future refference. Anyone to look at it would conclude that the county had been in a "scrap," and that the lawyers had got the best of the tax payers.

A farmer asked us the following question the other day: "Who is that Martain V. Evenson that keeps on suing the county, all the time, and making big bills of costs for the tax payers to pay? We tried to explain the situation to him but he seemed to still be under the impression that Martain must be a bad man, if he kept on lawing the county.

"The country newspaper is the greatest agency for the betterment of your community, and it will be progressive or backward in the degree that you support it" is what L. J. Boughner, city editor of the Minneapolis Tribune told 400 students at the state agricultural school." When you go back to the farm, look up the editor of your local newspaper," he urged, "and make a friend of him. The editor of your local newspaper will help you in everything you undertake for the upbuilding of your locality. You need his co-operation and he needs yours."

Thief River Falls will vote on the proposition to bond the city for another $25, 000 next Tuesday to pay up debts. You have often heard people make the remark that they was going to borrow money to pay up their debts. Well that is what Thief RiverFalls is doing, and the News puts it up to them in this form: "In other words it is more or less a question as to whether the people resideing here now desire to pay off this indebtedness in the form of taxes next year or those who live here twenty five years from now have this pleasure." Why certainly let the other fellows pay it twenty five years from now and when you get into debt again let those who live there thirty years from now pay it and ect, and ect.

SEVEN YEARS TO PAY.

Hon. Halvor Steenerson has passed the bill through the low house of congress extending the time of paying for and making final proof on these lands to seven years without interest. The full text of the bill, so far as it refers to this land is as follows:

"Sec. 1. That entrymen on lands ceded under Act of Februrary twentiteth nineteen hunred and four, entitled "An Act to authorise the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota," who have complied with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence and improvements, are hereby granted an extension until seven years ater the date of their entries in which to make final proot and payment therefor."

Read the above over two or three times and try to remember it as it is the law as it passed congress, then give your representative in congress, Halvor Steeners the credit that he is entitled to for geting the bill passed.

DUFFY EXPLAINS,

Tells Of Bond Deal.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.
March 8th, 1910.

Editor of The Sunbeam.

Thanking you for your expression of good will for furnishing the county a free court house site, some time ago, allow me to say a few words of the bonds.

Regarding the bond issue of that date of 87, 000: my bid of 5 per cent and $1800 premium was the best bid for the county of that day. The bid of the Harris Trust Co. offering to take the bond at 4½ per cent and $638 60 premium, they faild to put up a certified check as the bid called for, and it was in reality no bid at all and should not be listed. These are facts as shown up in the Auditors office.

Yours very Respectfully,
J. A. Duffy.

Second Office Boy—When his creditors are due. He wants his creditors to think he is out.

Well Connected.

The Maple—What is the oak so conceited about? The Elm—He is the original oak under which Washington stopped in 1776. The Maple—But the souvenir fiends have left him only a blackened stump. The Elm—That's it. He has extensive branches in every city and town in the country.—Puck.

"Not a thing. She can cook, and he has a job."—Kansas City Journal.

A Fierce Threat.

Maid—Do you want a good beating, Master Jimmy, or do you not, because if you don't behave yourself this minute you'll get both?

Planning Ahead.

Used the Wrong Gender.

A Frenchman with an imperfect knowledge of English was once called upon for an after dinner speech. He struggled along manfully for a few minutes, managing to turn one or two good phrases. Finally he excused himself from further effort by saying, "I will no longer cockroach on your time."

An Englishman sitting next to him at the table remarked: "Your speech was dooced clever, bah Jove! But you used the wrong word at the close, don't you know. You should have said 'I will no longer hencroach upon your time.'"

"I see," said the Frenchman. "I used the wrong gender."—Exchange.

Enlightenment.

"Father," remarked Johnny after deep thought, "suppose I should knock this jug off the table and catch it, then I wouldn't catch it, would I?"

"N-no, I suppose not," his father slowly said.

"But," continued Johnny, still toying with the jug, "if I should knock it off and not catch it, then I would catch it, wouldn't I?"

"Yes, you would!" his father grimly returned, this time with quick decision.

WHITE FACES.

Effect They Produce When First Seen by Colored Races.

Either Stanley or Livingstone perhaps told the world that after long living in Africa the sight of white faces produced something like fear. (And the evil spirits of Africa are white.) Well, even after a few months along with black faces I have felt that feeling of uncomfortableness at the sight of white faces. Something ghostly, terrible, seemed to have come into those faces that I had never imagined possible before. I felt for a moment the black man's terror of the white. At least I think I partly realized what it was.

You remember the Romans lost their first battles with the north through sheer fear. The fairer the weirder, the more spectral the more terrible. Beauty there is in the north, of its kind. But it is surely not comparable with the wonderful beauty of color in other races.

* * * * * * * *

To appreciate the beauty of colored skins it is not simply enough to travel. One must become familiar with the sight of them through months and years. (So strong our prejudices are!) And at last when you perceive there are human skins of real gold (living statues of gold with blue hair, like the Carib half breeds) and all fruit tints of skins, orange and yellow and peach red and lustrous browns of countless shades, and all colors of metals, too—bronzes of every tone—one begins to doubt whether a white skin is so fine. (If you don't believe these colors, just refer to Broca's pattern books, where you will find that all jewel colors exist in eyes and all fruit colors and metal colors in skins. I could not believe my own eyes till I saw Broca.) I have seen people who had grass green emeralds instead of eyes and topazes and rubies for eyes. And I have seen faces with blue hair.—Lafcadio Hearn in Atlantic.

TRICK ANIMALS.

Sometimes the Trainer Has to Do His Work Quickly.

"You wouldn't believe how fast you have to work to train an animal," said the man who has broken everything from elephants to geese the other day. "Why, I can tell just how many hours it is going to take to break in any kind of animal you might mention.

"A woman came to me the other day and said: 'I want a trained goose for my magic act. How much will you charge me to break one?'

"'Sixty dollars,' said I.

"'Well, how do you figure that out?' she asked.

"'Why, it's very simple,' I said. 'It's $1 an hour, and it will take me just sixty hours.'

"Yes, sir; I can train a goose—that is, to follow me around and do some simple tricks—in sixty hours, a pig in thirty hours, and so on. But as for a peafowl and a guinea hen—they can't be trained in a hundred years.

"Now, you take a troupe of trained dogs. That doesn't take half as long to do as people suppose. No, sir; a man with an animal show has got to work fast. Why, maybe the boss comes around on a Monday morning and says: 'Here—here's a bunch of six dogs. Now make an act out of it for next Monday's show.'

"There are six green dogs to make into a troupe in a week. Can't be done, you say? Sure, it can! One dog—one trick—one day. That's the principle, and you can do it too. Each dog will learn a trick each day all right. One will learn a back somersault, one a front somersault, one to walk on his hind legs, one on his front legs, one to roll over, and so on. Then by the end of the week you've got a nice little act, and all the people are acclaiming about your years of patience and that sort of stuff. Patience is a good thing, of course, but the secret is just 'know how;' that's all."—New York Post.

Telling Eggs.

The problem of tellings eggs is not an easy one by any means. Very few of us know how to do it properly. On the other hand, there are those who think they should not be told at all, but that is old fashioned nonsense, inspired entirely by false modesty. It is safe to say that eggs should be told at as early an age as possible consistent with their temperament. If allowed to go too long there is grave danger that the egg will become bad, and when an egg becomes bad it is hopeless. The world is full of bad eggs which might have been saved if they had been told in time.—Lippincott's.

Wasted Effort.

At a fire recently a brave fireman came gasping and panting from the burning building with his beard and eyebrows singed in the flames. Under one arm he carried a small but heavy box, which he deposited in a place of safety with the air of a man who had saved a box of government bonds from destruction. On opening the box it was found to contain six bottles of a new patent fire extinguisher.—Argonaut.

The Last Word.

"You should bear in mind," said the publisher, "that four-fifths of the people who read novels are women."

"That's why I call my new story 'The Last Word,'" replied the novelist. "Every woman will want it."—Philadelphia Record.

Impoverished.

Newlywed—What, $30 for a hat! Why, it's simply ridiculous, my dear!

Mrs. Newlywed—That's what I thought, Harold; but you said it was all we could afford.—Lippincott's.

We understand that old hunt and his friend Andrew Ellingson have again came into prominence in THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS Under the circumstances we spell one name with a small H. but we begin to get "hot" under the collar, and well, we quit right now, for if we keep on setting type for two minuits more we might say something.

Gift to the Ugly Man.

The practice of making such gifts appears to have arisen in America and is nearly obsolete. It therefore seems to deserve a note. It goes back to Harvard college (now Harvard university) beyond 1794. In that year William Biglow was the recipient of the jackknife. In 1795 he handed it on to Charles Prentiss, with these lines:

"Item: C. P. has my knife
During his natural college life.
That knife which ugliness inherits
And due to his superior merits.
And when from Harvard he shall steer
I order him to leave it here
That it may from class to class descend
Till time and ugliness shall end

—Notes and Queries.

Meaning of Cemetery.

It is not correct to say that "cemetery" means the "city of the dead." The word is from the Greek "koimeterion," meaning sleeping place, not the place of the dead. There is nothing in the etymology of the word to warrant us in thinking that it was originally intended to convey the idea that the departed were really dead any more than there is in the old Hebrew term for cemetery, "bethaim," the house of the living.—Exchange.

To Save You Time.

Have you ever noticed that when reading you waste a certain amount of time in turning from the end of one line to the beginning of the next? Long ago, when the world was not so busy as now, columns were of a much greater width. Since then they have been narrowed more and more.

Of course in an hour's reading little time is lost, but in a lifetime it is likely to be considerable. Realizing this, some one has suggested that type should be arranged as follows. You read to the end of the line, drop the eyes and read backward:

What a luxury
tuohtiw daer ot
the inevitable
ta kcab repmuls
the end of each
s'ti woh eeS enil done"

The argument is that practice will make perfect. Five minutes' practice is usually found more than sufficient for most people.—Pearson's.

The Power of Napoleon.

The desperate struggle to do something worth while is the very thing which draws out our reserve forces and develops latent power, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine. Without this struggle many people would never have discovered their real selves. Napoleon was never so resourceful, never so level headed, never had that vigorous mental grasp, was never able to make such powerful combinations, as when he was driven to desperation. It was when all bridges were burned behind him and there was no possibility of retreat that the possible Napoleon came to the rescue. Napoleon said of his great general Massena that he never showed his mettle until he saw the wounded and dead falling all around him in battle. Then the lion in him was aroused, and he fought like a demon.

Not Tending to Business.

A country doctor was recently called upon to visit a patient some way from his office. Driving to where the sick man lived, he tied his horse to a tree in front of the house and started to walk across the ground. It happened that work was in progress on a new well, of which the doctor knew nothing until he found himself sinking into the earth. He fell just far enough to be unable to get out of the hole unassisted and lustily yelled for help

When he was finally pulled up the hired man remarked to him:

"I say, doc, you had no business down there."

"No; I don't think I had," replied the doctor.

"Don't you know," continued the hired man, "you ought leave the well alone and take care of the sick?"—Lippincott's

Inherited Dreams.

A medical scientist claims that many dreams are really hereditary, that is to say, they come down to us from ancestors. Many persons have a dream which they dream over and over again. This and some others that are frequent, according to the authority referred to, are inherited. The case observed ... a child of six years ... an attack of typhoid fever ... a figure ... in black ... advanced to the foot of the bed and fixed upon him its ... eyes. It was found that the father of the child had frequently dreamed that dream, although he had never mentioned it to his child. The grandfather dreamed the same dream, although he had told no one about it. Evidently there is more than our philosophy can fathom in "the stuff that dreams are made of."

The Touch.

Animal Vanity.

In a small town in Jersey there is a corner grocery where you may buy anything from a twenty foot ladder to a pearl necklace. Adhesive plaster, sauerkraut and toilet articles are also sold, and in case of necessity you may get a hair cut or a horse shod in the back yard. Some time since a farmer stopped in the store to get some horse liniment to rub the rheumatism out of a sick cow, and two or three days later he came back with a life sized kick

"Look here, Abner," he complainingly remarked, "I wish ye would be a leetle might more keerful how ye throw yerself back o' thet counter. 'Tother day ye give me cologne instead o' hoss liniment, and gosh dast if I didn't put it on thet sick cow afore I found out what it was."

"It didn't hurt her any, did it?" broke in the groceryman

"Can't say thet it did," answered the farmer, "but ever sence she has had thet sweet smellin' stuff on her she hain't done a derned thing but jes look at her reflection in ther duck pond an' sigh."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Damascus, a Garden City.

Damascus is a garden city touched by the great desert. Under its roses one feels the sands. Beside its trembling waters one dreams of the trembling mirage. The cry of its muezzins seems to echo from its mosque towers to that most wonderful thing in nature which is "God without man." The breath of the wastes passes among the poplars as that Bedouin boy passed among the merchants when he came and when he went. In Damascus one hears the two voices. And when one looks from the sacred mountain upon that city of dream, cradled among the woods, one sees far off the tawny beginnings of that other magic which looks out from the Bedouin's eyes. And though perhaps with the pilgrims from Samarkand one loves to rest beside the fountains under the hedges of roses, one is aware of the other love, intercourse with which has made Damascus an earthly paradise for them and for you.—Robert Hichens in Century.

Burr's Self Control.

Aaron Burr was by nature and training a man of extraordinary self control. He allowed no circumstances to throw him off his balance. An anecdote told by Rufus Choate to Richard H. Dana, recorded in Mr. Dana's "Diary," illustrates the callousness which aided Burr so greatly in controlling himself. Several years after the death of Hamilton, killed by Burr in a duel, Burr visited Boston, and Mr. Devereux of Salem paid him some attentions. The visitor was taken to the Boston Atheneum, where, while the two men were walking through the gallery of sculpture, Mr Devereux happened to catch sight of a bust of Hamilton. The thought flashed across his mind that Burr might not care to be confronted with the sight of the features of the man he had slain. But no. Burr was undisturbed. He also espied the bust, and, although Mr Devereux had instinctively turned away, he walked up to it and said in a loud tone "Ah! Here is Hamilton!" Then, passing his fingers along certain lines of the face, he added, "There was the poetry!" Hamilton's contemporaries gave him credit for possessing a poetic mind.

When Beau Nash and Wesley Met.

Beau Nash, though but an indifferent churchgoer, not only went to hear Whitefield preach, but attended a service at Bath held by John Wesley. The incident is related in Southey's "Life of Wesley:"

"While he was preaching this remarkable personage entered the room, came close to the preacher and demanded of him by what authority he was acting. Wesley made answer, 'By that of Jesus Christ, conveyed to me by the present archbishop of Canterbury, when he laid his hands upon me and said, "Take thou authority to preach the gospel."' Nash then affirmed that he was acting contrary to the laws. 'Besides,' said he, 'your preaching frightens people out of their wits.' 'Sir,' replied Wesley, 'did you ever hear me preach?' 'No,' said the master of ceremonies. 'How, then, can you judge of what you never heard?' Nash made answer, 'By common report.' 'Sir,' said Wesley, 'is not your name Nash? I dare not judge of you by common report. I think it not enough to judge by.'"

Two old settlers sat smoking in their cabin far away in the backwoods. No woman's hand had ever desecrated that sanctum, and grime reigned supreme and triumphant. The conversation veered around from state politics to cooking

"Ya-as," said the elder of the two with a drawl, "I did get one o' them there cookbooks wunst, but I could never do nothin' with it."

"How was that?" inquired the other "What was the hitch?"

"Waal," was the answer, "every one o' them receipts begun in the same way with the same words. Every one o' 'em started off with 'take a clean dish' and I never got no farther."

And he slowly replaced his old black clay pipe in his mouth and fell to ruminating sadly on the narrow outlook on the world of human beings as displayed by authors of cookery books

Origin of Kilts.

It will doubtless surprise many Scotchmen to learn that the kilt as at present worn is only a modern fancy costume and is not of Scottish origin at all. The honor of its invention is due to two Englishmen—an army tailor who accompanied General Wade's forces to Scotland in 1719 and Thomas Rawlinson, overseer of some iron works in Glengarry's country. For more than a century previously, indeed, the tartan plaid had been the common garb of the highlanders, but it was all in one piece, wound in folds around the body, leaving the knees bare. Prior to the adoption of the tartan, which probably took place about the close of the fifteenth century, the long, loose saffron colored skirt, the real "garb of old Gaul," was the highland dress.—London Mail.

DETROIT RIVER OFFERS SUCH FACILITIES FOR SMUGGLING THAT IT HAS TO BE WATCHED CLOSELY

A YOUNG MAN, just graduated from college, arrived in Vancouver in search of a modest business opportunity. This means that he had a little money — a few hundred dollars, perhaps. If he had had no money he would have been merely in search of a job, but he had enough to enable him to be moderately independent—that is, he could take the time to look about him for something that seemed to hold out some promise for the future. So it was a modest business opportunity and not merely a job that he was seeking.

But modest business opportunities seemed to be scarce that season. At any rate, he could find nothing that held out the promise he deemed necessary and he finally decided to see what he could do on the other side of the line. He still had a little money and Chicago looked pretty good to him. He would see what there was for a young college graduate in Chicago.

Naturally he told his Vancouver friends of his new purpose. He had found no Vancouver opportunity, but he had found a few Vancouver friends and the circumstances would seem to indicate that these friends were not among the leading citizens. One of them was properly solicitous for his financial welfare on so long a trip.

"Why don't you make your expenses?" he asked.

"Tickled to death to do it," returned the college man, promptly. "It's the first ray of sunlight I've seen. But how?"

"Take a little opium back with you."

Very likely the friend did not lead up to the point with these exact words—I was not there and I can't say positively just how the subject was broached—but somebody with whom the college man became chummy did suggest to him that it would be a shame for a man in his financial condition to waste money on a trip to Chicago, when he might just as well make some on the same trip.

Opium smuggling, however, did not look like a good and safe investment to the college man. It seldom does look enticing to the man to whom it is proposed for the first time. Somehow, it carries with it visions of all sorts of unpleasant things, including revenue cutters, customs officers and jails. The college man had to be convinced, but his friend convinced him.

"Easiest thing in the world for a man like you," said the friend. "A Chinaman can't smuggle, because he's always under suspicion. Besides, it's harder for him to get across the line anyhow. Then there are lots of others who are always under suspicion when they get near the border. But you have everything in your favor. The fact that you should want to go to Chicago or anywhere else is quite natural and nobody will give it a passing thought."

The college man was tempted, but he was curious to know how much there would be in it for him.

"You make it all," said the friend, "barring a little commission to me for arranging it for you. Nobody is going to employ you to do the job, but you can do it yourself. You buy the opium here and sell it in Chicago. You can get names and addresses here, before leaving, of people who will buy it from you in Chicago. They may even be notified that you are coming. It can all be arranged easily. You can get it over the line and there will be no trouble about the rest of it."

The college man not only assumed all the personal risk, but he also assumed all the financial risk. He bought 25 pounds of opium and received his instructions.

It would have been cheaper, of course, to have delivered the opium at Seattle or Portland. A man regularly engaged in the business probably would have tried Seattle, although the risk would have been greater at that time. But the college man was going to Chicago anyway, so he decided to try Portal, N. D., and he was so successful, as a result of his instructions, that the opium was safely stored away where nobody but the porter of the car could find it when they crossed the line. This added a little to his expense, for the porter naturally had to be remembered, but he had been informed that it was by far the safest plan when you could get hold of the right porter.

Arriving in Chicago, he ambled down South Clark street and presently he had consummated a little deal that left him somewhat better off financially than he had been when he purchased the opium at Vancouver. In other words, he had more than covered his expenses.

There is one peculiar thing about smuggling; it never seems to be wrong. Dangerous it may be, but never wrong. An ordinary mortal, so honest that he will cheerfully tender his fare to the street car conductor who has overlooked him (and that's going some), will not only cheat his government by smuggling, but actually boast of it proudly as a laudable achievement. Ladies of irreproachable character and connections will take more pride in a smuggled frock or necklace than in any other possession and men of high repute have been known to hearken to the lure of the fellow who says he has a consignment of smuggled cigars.

This is worth remembering in the case of the college youth. If his Vancouver friend had suggested that he make expenses by cheating a storekeeper or flimflamming a farmer, there would have been an immediate estrangement and probably a fight. But to beat Uncle Sam did not disturb his conscience in the least. That was merely a game, an interesting game, in which he matched his wits against the government's. And it was so interesting and so easy that he did it again. Why go to the trouble of looking for a modest business opportunity when it was possible to make from 100 to 200 per cent. on money briefly invested and have so much fun doing it?

The college man did not go again to Vancouver, but he went to Winnipeg, Regina, Moose Jaw and to other towns that were nearer Chicago. He used various routes and resorted to various schemes for getting his stuff over the line. He used Neche and Emerson, both almost due south from Winnipeg. He brought opium over the line in the bottom of a coal box and concealed almost every other place that the ingenuity of a complacent railroad man could suggest. He brought it over with horse and buggy, taking the train again far enough south to escape the train inspection. He had occasional assistance on both sides of the line (for the game of beating the government is always alluring), but he brought the stuff over the line himself. He tried almost every possible method and place along the border between Portal and Emerson, and, because he changed methods and places frequently he made things quite interesting in a small way for Uncle Sam. It is one thing to know, with reasonable certainty, that a man is engaged in an unlawful business and quite another to catch him in the act and get the requisite proof. So Uncle Sam had reason to give some thought to this case.

But one day the college man ambled into a Chinese store on South Clark street, Chicago, and offered to sell some opium. He never had sold any here before. Just why he should have tried it this time I can't say, for he certainly had other markets, but there doubtless was some reason that seemed to him sufficient. Perhaps his other markets were glutted; perhaps he had been informed that he could get a better price here. Anyhow, it was the big mistake of his career as a smuggler.

The Chinaman dickered with him, found out all he could and told him to come back in an hour. This particular Chinaman was not in the business of buying or selling contraband opium. Furthermore, a Chinaman who is not in the business occasionally finds much advantage in being on the side of the government. He might not have betrayed another Chinaman, but he had no scruples in the case of a white man.

"No wantee," said the Chink when the college man returned.

The college man was naturally annoyed. He tried to argue that the Chinaman had agreed to take some of the stuff, but you can't argue successfully with a man who won't understand anything he doesn't want to. This Chinaman had spoken very fair English before, but "No wantee" was now the limit of his vocabulary.

The college man relieved his mind of some burning thought about the Chinese in general and then left. The Chinaman signaled to a couple of men across the street, who thereupon shadowed the college man to his hotel. It is not enough to arrest a smuggler; he must be taken at a time and place that will uncover the contraband goods that he happens to have on hand.

When the college man opened the door of his room in response to a knock two men confronted him. One of them blocked the closing of the door with his foot and the other reached in and got the college man. Then they searched his room and found the opium, which was clearly contraband because it lacked the stamp that Uncle Sam puts on the duty-paid article.

The college man got a term of years and the Chinaman got his "moiety." "Moiety," in this instance, is what the court awards the man who puts a smuggler and smuggled goods within the reach of the law. Its size depends largely upon the value of the goods seized. The courts are inclined to be generous, however, and the "moiety" for smuggled opium not infrequently has reached a thousand or two thousand dollars.

The college man stuck to the business too long, which is a failing of most smugglers. It is so easy at first that they think it will always be just as easy, quite forgetting that the dangers and difficulties increase with each trip; for a man cannot cross the border often without becoming an object of suspicion. So Uncle Sam usually gets the smuggler in the end, although it occasionally happens that the latter is frightened out of the business before he is caught.

There is a case of a Winnipeg man, for instance, who was a member of a firm that dealt largely in opium. The Winnipeg sales were not sufficient for this firm, and, besides, there was something alluring in the price at which opium could be sold on the other side of the line. Men would cheerfully contract in Winnipeg for opium at this price—if it could be delivered in the United States—and the firm went into the business of so delivering it.

The partner in question took charge of this detail of the business and he was most ingenious in his methods. He made many "business" trips to St. Paul and there was certainly nothing suspicious in the fact that a man engaged in a legitimate business in Winnipeg should go frequently to St. Paul. But he was too cautious to stick to one method of smuggling and what went through in a Pullman car was merely incidental to what crossed the line in other ways. He sent it over in loads of wheat and wood and other commodities. Hunting for opium in a load of wheat is no easy task and a man is unlikely to undertake it unless he has pretty good reason to believe it is there.

In the "open" season this man was also a great sportsman and his hunting was all done close to the border. A man in search of prairie chickens may drive from Manitoba into North Dakota at almost any point along the line and there is nothing in it to occasion surprise. He kept so close to the line that he was always getting over it.

Just what aroused the suspicions of the United States officers I am unable to say, but one day one of them was waiting for the hunter. Unfortunately for the officer, it is all prairie here and the hunter saw him. Furthermore, there was something about the situation that made the hunter suspicious and he promptly turned and headed back for Canada. The officer started after him. The hunter urged his horse to a run and it is asserted in Winnipeg that his cart bumped the bumps for something over a mile in a way that loosened all his teeth. However, he crossed the line a few hundred yards ahead of his pursuer. Then he returned to Winnipeg, put the opium back in stock and announced that, so far as he was concerned, the firm had retired from the smuggling business. Which was wise. After a man is once "spotted" the only way for him to avoid trouble is to quit.

Another smuggler did a thriving business at St. John, N. D. He was supposed to be a farmer in that vicinity, became well known and popular at St. John and made regular trips to that town for the entirely proper purpose of shipping butter, eggs and other farm produce to market. No one is likely to be suspicious of a shipment of butter by a farmer whom everybody knows. But this particular farmer got opium from the other side of the line and this opium was shipped with his farm produce. My information as to him and his methods was secured on the Canadian side, where they are not particularly interested in the enforcement of United States laws, and I cannot say positively whether he was ever caught, but I understand that he was.

These stories, and particularly the story of the college man, serve to illustrate the various features of the opium smuggling business. For one thing, contrary to the popular belief, the Chinaman does not engage in it—at least, not directly. He is usually back of it.

The story of a sensational case at Seattle will illustrate this. It relates to the days when there was a big enough profit in opium smuggling to warrant a wholesale business—before the reduction of duty made it so much of a one-man enterprise—and there was a fleet of small boats operating in Puget sound. Also there was a United States inspector engaged in the business. He reasoned that he was there to watch others but that there was no one to watch him, which is where he made his mistake, for he was caught one night in a launch with $20,000 worth of the stuff.

Immediately there was great excitement in Chinatown. No Chinaman was on the launch, but nevertheless Chinatown was so desperately worried that some of the leading merchants met in haste and put up the amount of the inspector's bond. He might tell something, you know; he might uncover those behind him—those who were putting up the money and taking the opium. It was much better that they should lose both the opium and the amount of the bond and that he should have a chance to skip. They did lose both and he did skip, but it is worth remembering that he was brought back from Mexico some time later. He also stuck to the business too long and Uncle Sam is tireless in pursuit when he has evidence against an offender.

PREACH GOSPEL OF HEALTH

Plan to Have One Sermon on Sunday, April 24, Devoted to Scourge of Tuberculosis.

Following campaigns against consumption that have been carried on in the churches of hundreds of cities, and sermons on tuberculosis that have been preached before thousands of congregations during the past year, a movement has been started by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis to establish a permanent tuberculosis Sunday, on which it is hoped that every one of the 33,000,000 church-goers in the United States will hear the gospel of health. This year the Sunday selected is April 24. It is planned that on April 24 tuberculosis sermons shall be preached in all the churches of the country. Literature will be distributed to members of the congregations, and in every way an effort will be made to teach that tuberculosis is a dangerous disease and that it can be prevented and cured.

Clergymen who desire to obtain additional information in regard to tuberculosis will be able to secure literature from state and local anti-tuberculosis associations and boards of health, as well as from the national association.

Danger in Spitting on Sidewalks.

In order to show that spitting on the sidewalks is dangerous to health, an investigation has been made by Dr. John Robertson, medical health officer of Birmingham, England, which shows that seven per cent. of the "spits" collected in public places contained consumption germs. On the other hand the dust collected from the floors of the cottages of the Adirondack Cottage sanitarium has been found to be free of tuberculosis germs, showing that a careful consumptive is not dangerous.

WHAT'S THE USE

Sticking to a Habit When It Means Discomfort?

Old King Coffee knocks subjects out tolerably flat at times, and there is no possible doubt of what did it. A Mich. woman gives her experience:

"I used to have liver trouble nearly all of the time and took medicine which relieved me only for a little while. Then every once in a while I would be suddenly doubled up with an awful agony in my stomach. It seemed as though every time I took a breath I would die. No one could suffer any more and live.

"Finally I got down so sick with catarrh of the stomach that I could not turn over in bed, and my stomach did not digest even milk. The doctor finally told me that if I did not give up drinking coffee I would surely die, but I felt I could not give it up

"However, Husband brought home a package of Postum and it was made strictly according to directions. It was the only thing that would stay on my stomach, and I soon got so I liked it very much.

"Gradually I began to get better, and week by week gained in strength and health. Now I am in perfect condition, and I am convinced that the whole cause of my trouble was coffee drinking, and my getting better was due to leaving off coffee and drinking Postum

"A short time ago I tasted some coffee and found, to my astonishment, that I did not care anything about it. I never have to take medicine any more. I hope you will use this letter for the benefit of those suffering from the poisonous effects of coffee."

VOTES ON LICENSE

QUESTION OF "WET" OR "DRY" ENGAGES MANY TOWNS THROUGHOUT STATE.

HONORS BREAK ABOUT EVEN

Minneapolis, March 10.—Towns and villages held elections throughout Minnesota. In most of the towns the issue was that of "wet" or "dry."

The question at issue in the towns was whether high license liquor legislation should prevail, or whether absolute prohibition should be the rule.

The returns furnished little upon which a judgment can be based as to the general trend of sentiment thruout the state. For the most part, the results show little change in sentiment in the towns.

The western and northwestern portions of the state, for the most part, showed a prevalence of "dry" sentiment, while in the central and northeastern parts of the state, the tendency was to vote license.

Interest in Excelsior.

In Hennepin county, greatest interest attached to the contest in Excelsior, where the fight was spirited. There was the largest vote here in the history of the town, the "drys" carrying by a vote of six.

By a singular coincidence the candidates supported by the "wet" faction, with one exception, were all elected, indicating there is a tendency in the town to wink at possible violations of the law.

The towns of some of the candidates for office in the Republican state ticket showed peculiar results. Brown's Valley, the home of S. Y. Gordon, the county option candidate for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor, went "dry."

Long Prairie, the home of W. E. Lee, who has been boosted as a possible county option candidate for governor, went "wet."

In many of the towns, where the "dry" and "wet" issue was played up, local issues confused the question of liquor regulation so that the vote was not a real test.

CARNEGIE GIFT FOR MINNE?

Minneapolis.—The city of Minneapolis is to be one of the beneficiaries of Andrew Carnegie's next $3,000,000 plunge into "charitable finance" to the extent of $300,000, according to Eastern dispatches. The annual interest on this, estimated at $12,000, is to be expended in advancing the educational facilities of the city.

Some time ago Mr. Carnegie announced that he had $3,000,000 at his disposal and with the assistance and advice of the trustees of the Carnegie hero fund and some of his close friends he decided to apportion the amount equally among ten cities, leaving it practically to the school teachers of those cities as to how the income should be spent.

He probably will make the official announcement about April 1, when he is expected to be in Pittsburg, but his plans are formulated and it is known that he has decided upon the cities to receive the money as follows: Minneapolis, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Baltimore, Detroit, Milwaukee, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Rochester and Kansas City.

Old Riverman Dies.

Winona.—Abner Gile, one of the early river pioneers, who assisted in building up the great commerce of the upper Mississippi in the early fifties, and known personally from St. Paul to St. Louis by old-time river men and those people who lived along the river, is dead, according to word received by friends here from McGregor, Iowa, where he had lived since his retirement, fifteen years ago. He built and was master of the well-remembered rafter which bore his name, the "Abner Gile."

LAND OPENING POSTPONED.

Chippewa Lands Near Cass Lake and Deer River Will Be Opened Later.

Cass Lake.—The land office received United States land office received from the general land office an order which withdraws from settlement the ceded Chippewa lands, notice of the opening of which on March 13 was received several weeks ago.

This makes the third time the opening has been postponed for the reason that the department says the withdrawal was for the purpose of facilitating the exchange of allotments from lands in the limits of the national forest to lands outside.

This exchange cannot be effected in the time required, hence the department withdraws the tract from homestead entry for one year or until March 19, 1911.

THE MOTHER AND THE BOY

Childish Confidences That Should Never Be Repelled, But Always Encouraged.

A boy's heart is full and overflowing. He needs some one who will listen to his confidences. If he is repelled and finds himself alone, he becomes fretful, indolent or worse. His affairs are not "nonsense." A good mother never says: "Run away; I am busy." She listens, encourages.

Important discoveries may be made in these outpourings. She gives sympathy, enters into his feelings, sees things from his point of view. If he tells her of something which proves that he is at fault, she does not reprimand at the time, because this will check further confidences. She gives her attention quietly, tells him she is glad he has confided in her, and that she will talk of it again to him.

If a mother has insight she can solve many problems. She is interested in her boy's sports, collections, his school and companions. The choice of his companions should not be left to chance. It is well if they are from families known to his parents.

TINY BABY'S PITIFUL CASE

"Our baby when two months old was suffering with terrible eczema from head to foot, all over her body. The baby looked just like a skinned rabbit. We were unable to put clothes on her. At first it seemed to be a few mattered pimples. They would break the skin and peel off leaving the underneath skin red as though it were scalds. Then a few more pimples would appear and spread all over the body, leaving the baby all raw without skin from head to foot. On top of her head there appeared a heavy scab a quarter of an inch thick. It was awful to see so small a baby look as she did. Imagine! The doctor was afraid to put his hands to the child. We tried several doctors' remedies but all failed.

"Then we decided to try Cuticura. By using the Cuticura Ointment we softened the scab and it came off. Under this, where the real matter was, by washing with the Cuticura Soap and applying the Cuticura Ointment, a new skin soon appeared. We also gave baby four drops of the Cuticura Resolvent three times daily. After three days you could see the baby gaining a little skin which would peel off and heal underneath. Now the baby is four months old. She is a fine picture of a fat little baby and all is well. We only used one cake of Cuticura Soap, two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. If people would know what Cuticura is there would be few suffering with eczema. "Yes. He says he's going into grand opera," replied Mr. Rafferty. "He wants, says he, to have the crowds leanin' forward to catch every tone as he lifts his voice to express things that no one but himself can fully comprehend."

"Jerry says that, does he?"

"He does."

Kansas Takes 1,000 Overland Cars

Our agents in Kansas have ordered for this season 1,000 Overland automobiles.

Nebraska takes 750—Iowa 1,000—Texas 1,500. Thus has the Overland—after one year's experience—captured the farming states.

It has captured the cities, too. New York City takes 1,000 Overlands this year. Boston takes 500—San Francisco 500—Washington 500—Philadelphia 450.

Our agents have contracted for 20,000 Overlands—for $24,000,000 worth of Overlands—to supply the demand for this year. That's a larger sale than any other car commands.

Yet, two years ago few had ever heard of an Overland. This sensational success is due to the creation of a remarkable car.

The Simple Car

The success of the Overland is mainly due to its amazing simplicity. A 10-year-old child can master the car in five minutes. Push a pedal forward to go ahead, and backward to reverse. Push another pedal for high speed. There is nothing else to do but steer.

Any man with the simplest instructions, can run an Overland a thousand miles and back.

There was never a car so easy to care for—so easy to keep in order.

20 Per Cent Reduction

The Overland's success is also due to its price. No other maker ever gave nearly so much for the money.

Yet we have cut our costs this year about 20 per cent through enormous increase in production.

The Overland we sell for $1,000 this year is better than the $1,250 Overland last year. It is a 25 H. P. car with a speed of 50 miles an hour.

So with the $1,250, $1,400 and $1,500 Overlands. Each offers a fifth more than ever before for the money.

All prices include Magneto and full lamp equipment.

THE STORY of the ROAD

By
Howard H. Gross
of the Farmers' Good Roads League

This illustrates a piece of mountain road in Norway in the late spring or early summer. Note the heavy square stones set by the road side to prevent the traveler from driving off in the dork, or if for any reason he was careless.

MAN is born with a restless spirit and early exhibits a tendency to roam. Children three years old or less will wander away, led by curiosity, to explore the unknown. The savage picks his way long distances as best he can, through forest or prairie, as the case may be; he builds no roads, but goes forward in the line of least resistance. The buffaloes of the prairie follow beaten paths—it is said the streets of Boston were made to follow cow paths of colonial days.

When civilization came to mankind we find among its early activities evidence of progress in road building. As light dawned upon him he found an economic advantage in making the paths smooth. It also entered his consciousness that to remove obstacles to travel was a common duty of everyone and not the special duty of anyone or a few. No truer saying can be found than that the condition of the public roads in any community is an indication of the standard of civilization, not an infallible one, of course, but very trustworthy nevertheless.

It will be interesting to note what the world has done and is doing in making the roadway better, so they will more fully meet the economic and social needs of the people and the state. Measured by the age of the Mediterranean and oriental countries, our own land is but an infant, but it has grown and waxed strong beyond any of its ancestors. It not only has learned much from the older countries, but has been able to teach them many things as well. In some things, however, we must confess that we stand at the foot of the class. One of our two most conspicuous failures in the administration of public affairs is the inefficient, wasteful and corrupt methods of administering our great municipalities and the other failure, even more complete, relates to the not only inadequate but idiotic methods that have pertained to the question of public highways.

Space does not permit nor is it part of the "Story of the Road" to set forth the signal failure in the mismanagement of our cities, but rather to point out some of our shortcomings as to the public highways as compared with the rest of the world. A well-known advertiser, in speaking of the excellence of his product and its popularity, says: "There's a reason," and so there is a reason why we have so completely failed in doing our duty to the road. There has been money enough expended upon them in the last three generations to have made boulevards of all the main highways, yet they are not much better, as a rule, than they were a half-century ago, and this is particularly true in the middle west.

Take for the purpose of illustration and as a type the great state of Illinois, the third in the Union in wealth and population. In the last 30 years there has been expended on the highways of Illinois, in grading, bridging, making and spoiling the roads, approximately $100,000,000, and what is there to show for it? The larger part of this colossal sum has been frittered away by honest but misguided effort—by doing the wrong thing; the annual road picnics, where a dozen or more farmers with their boys would meet in the fall (to do work that ought to have been done in the spring) to work out their road tax, have a good time, tell stories, play practical jokes, do "stunts" of physical prowess, such as jumping, wrestling, etc., with a small amount of work in plowing up a stretch of road, scraping loose earth together with weeds and grass in a winrow, and leaving it there and calling this road building. By the operation, perchance, a hundred dollar road tax had been worked out and probably two hundred dollars of damage done to the road in doing so. This is an extreme case, but there are tens of thousands of such instances in more or less aggravated form.

Road building in Porto Rico, since it came under United States government control. President Taft told the writer he built good roads in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines and the United States government advanced the money to do it. It was suggested that if the government could do so much for an alien people why not help fix up the rural route roads for our own folk? The reply was: "Your point is well taken."

One of the highest roads in the world. A pack train leaving Ambatio for Quito, Ecuador. Ambatio is where an astronomical observatory of Harvard university is located. Its altitude and clear atmosphere make it one of the most desirable locations in the world.

Anyone knowing the first principles of road building should know the surface of the ground should not be disturbed after the first of July and that road grading done in March, April or May gives the best results, as the summer rains and traffic work the earth down smooth and hard so that it will be in the best condition to stand the trying weather of the winter and spring following.

The first great step in reform is a wise and sane expenditure of the money now raised, which in Illinois is about $5,000,000 per year. The writer has spoken upon the question of highway improvement in more than one-half the counties of Illinois and has discussed the "labor system" methods employed with hundreds of the most intelligent farmers of this country, and they generally agree that most of the money raised is wasted. There are some fundamental errors responsible for this and some misconceptions that must be gotten rid of before any real progress can be made. Among these is the abolishment of the labor system, collecting the road tax in cash and the employment of someone of good judgment and skill to do road work, following the advice that they can secure from the state engineer, and from him learn what to do, when to do and how to do it.

A thorough drainage of the main roads either by open ditches with unobstructed outlet, or, better, by tile drains on either side, is an absolute necessity in order to have the best results (unless perchance there may be inadequate natural drainage, as in the case of rolling, sandy soil) and frequent and timely use of the split log drag, used during or immediately after the rains, or when two or three inches of the rough, frozen road has thawed out, it would help matters very greatly. Some farmers and a few so-called experts, however, entirely overestimate the value of the drag.

There is only one type of road that is worthy the name of good, and that is one that is hard, smooth and usable 365 days in the year, and one that is not affected by weather conditions. The main roads (these comprise not more than 25 per cent. of the total mileage) should be graveled or macadamized after first being thoroughly graded and drained. The experience of the world for twenty centuries is back of this system. Among the illustrations on this page are some stone roads that for 2,000 years have been used daily with but a moderate cost for maintenance.

Another fallacy that must be put on the shelf is the belief that a hard road cannot be built in the corn belt; that it would not "stand up," etc., upon the heavy black soil. Every engineer knows and experience shows that this soil, if drained and graded, makes an exceptionally good foundation to build upon.

Another mistake and a rank injustice has been to place practically all the burden of road taxes upon farm property. This plan has obtained from the first and is still in vogue in about one-half the states. The other half have learned that roads are public property—they belong to everyone and it is unfair and indefensible to place the whole burden of public work of this nature upon the farms. It is sometimes said the farmers use the roads more than others and that is given as a reason why they should do all the paying. Well, the lawyers use the court house more than others; shall we tax them for the county building?

A Jersey man in the last decade of the century just closed made a discovery far more important than the finding of the north pole. It was that the roads belong to the public and that everyone ought to be taxed to help build the roads. In this thought state aid was born, and it has spread from state to state until now 22 of the 44 states are building by this plan. It has been tried out and found successful. It is no experiment—it is an equitable, workable plan that gets results and spreads the cost in such a way that it is no burden and gives everyone a square deal.

The building of a good stone and gravel road adds to the value of farm property, so for that reason it has been found just and practicable to make some such division as this as to the cost of the public roads in any township, leaving it to the people of the township to say what roads shall be improved and when and how much money shall be expended, viz: that the state, from a general tax levied upon all property in the state, shall pay one-half and the property owners of the township shall pay the other half.

Suppose $2,000 were spent upon the roads of any township. Under this plan one-half would be paid by the property owners of the township and a like amount, $1,000, would be drawn from the state. Of the latter $1,000, $700 would be contributed by cities, towns, railroads, corporations and other forms of property. The writer has at many times asked farmers whether it would be worth to them two cents a bushel on their crops to have a first-class road over which to market it. Very seldom has he found an intelligent farmer who did not agree that a road would be of this much value to him and that by having good roads and watching the market he could easily get that much more for his crops and he could certainly take them to market at less expense than under ordinary conditions.

A calculation has been made very carefully by the writer and has been checked over by the best authorities of the state. It shows, and the writer is prepared to defend it, that under the state aid plan the main highways in Illinois can be improved as first-class gravel and macadam roadways within 10 or 12 years at a cost of about 10 cents per acre per year on the farm lands of the state, or a tax equal in the aggregate to $1 to $1.20 an acre.

The writer believes that the principal objection to hard roads throughout the state is by retired farmers, who object to building roads for the tenant. If they would but realize that two per cent. on their rent, which is anywhere from $4 to $7 per acre, will pay the tax, and that it will make their farm more desirable and they can get their selection of tenants and sometimes 50 cents an acre more cash rent, they would arrive at the conclusion, if they are not prejudiced, that the money invested in roads is the best investment they can make.

The trouble has been that the farmers are paying enormous amounts of money for highways improvement and they have not seen the improvements. The money has been squandered.

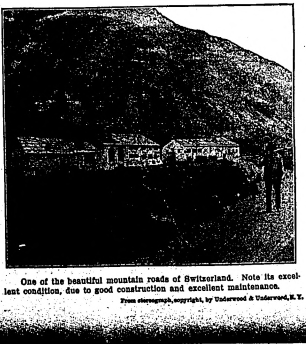
Next to production the world's greatest industry is distribution. In this world-wide system the farm wagon and the country road occupy the first place and ought to have the first consideration. If the state or the nation has the money to spend on internal improvements, let them assist the townships to build good roads; the highways over which the children must go to school, the doctor to reach the suffering, and over which must pass every bushel of grain and every bale of cotton raised. The road reaches every field, every farm home and every market town. The people everywhere demand good roads. Good roads mean better schools, more social life, a higher standard of living—they mean progress and civilization.

Here is a road over the mountain pass between China and Manchuria, with Chinese farmers on their way to market. Rather primitive transportation, you say. Compare this with an Illinois and Missouri earth road in March with a fine team and modern wagon in mud knee deep. We can imagine these Chinese farmers commiserating this pitiable condition if they could see it. This is one of the best types of high-class road building to be found anywhere.

The above illustration shows a detachment from the Japanese army building a road so the army with its ordnance could approach Port Arthur in the late war. The cloth hanging down the back of the head-gear is to protect the base of the brain from the heat of the sun and to keep insects away. A similar device is used in the interior of Australia, where they are called "puggeries." Why this name was given to it the writer never could ascertain.

The most famous and one of the world's oldest roads, made and used before the Saviour was born and ever since. It was known as the "Appian Way." On either side we see tombs built up of masonry. Over this highway the Roman legions of Caesar passed in conquering the world.

This shows a splendid type of a hard road in southern California, with palms upon one side of the road, pepper trees on the other. Compare this drive with a Mississippi valley road. The residents of California are no better able to build good roads than the farmers in the corn belt.



One of the beautiful mountain roads of Switzerland. Note its excellent condition, due to good construction and excellent maintenance.

Believes Monkeys Do Not Know Much

IMITATE THAT? NEVER!

WASHINGTON.—Instinctive imitation is all the monkey has. Inferential imitations are not among his mental equipment. Physiologically he is closely related to the greatest mind the world has ever known, but that is where the wise man stops in his drawing of parallels.

Such are the conclusions of Prof. W. T. Shepherd, of George Washington university. He has had a dozen assorted monkeys caged in the laboratory of the university for months, trying to get from any or all of them what a layman would designate a gleam of intelligence.

These little copies of the human being were invited to do dozens of stunts such as trained animals are taught, but the professor made no effort to compel them to learn them. He simply made conditions such that if they had had any reasoning power they would have been able to figure out a way of doing the desired stunts without any further assistance from him. But not one showed what to the professor would be evidence of the reasoning power. Not one showed capacity to watch the professor do a certain thing and then do it himself because he liked the result.

Not one of them, for instance, was able to trip the lever that released a peanut, although the professor showed them often how to do it. All, however, held forth dirty paws begging for the peanut. Not one even made what the men who study mental phenomena call a trial in error.

The professor is satisfied that the monkeys have no memory of things in the sense that they are able to call up a picture, place, person or thing. There is no question that they are able to recall having seen a person when that person stands before them. In other words, they are the equal of any of the domestic animals in that respect.

He can not even subscribe to the Darwin belief that they have imagination, such as Darwin thought dogs have because of the evidence before him that dogs dream in much the same way that human beings do.

Another thing the professor feels warranted in saying is that the monkey is not any more imitative than many other animals. He shows that monkeys that have had a merry-go-round in their cages, that revolves when they jump on it, will continue to jump on a contrivance of that kind that is fastened so that it will not revolve and continue to go through the motions necessary to make a proper merry-go-round perform its proper functions, just as if the first trial had produced results.

"Bandits" Seal Promise with Kisses

WASHINGTON'S "Dirty Dozen" has been reduced by three. Judge De Lacy did it when he bade three very small boys, accused of stealing cigars, pipes, milk and bread, to kiss their parents and promise never, never, never again to try to emulate the Forty Thieves or any other bad people —and to turn back to the owners of the property three dollars and some cents to compensate for the loss.

"And remember," said the judge, "keep away from the gang you call the Dirty Dozen. If you must have a gang, make up one of good companions, who will teach you something that will do you some good."

Judge De Lacy has a way of making a boy tell him just what the boy is when he has taken anything that does not belong to him.

"Now, what would you call the boy who took a watch of yours and didn't give it back?"

The biggest boy hung his head and twisted his cap and wanted to sink through the floor.

"Tell me, now, what would you call him?"

The biggest boy's lips framed the words:

"A thief."

And in that way Clerk Harper, listening attentively, knew that the boy had pleaded guilty. Each of them did, for that matter.

The judge ordered the middle-sized youngster to step around and kiss his mother and ask her to forgive him, and to understand that he would never, never do it again, and would have nothing to do with the Dirty Dozen.

The middle-sized boy sulked. The spirit of the proud rover of the Spanish main told him that to kiss a woman in court, even his mother, was a puerile thing to do.

"Kiss me," whispered the mother.

"Do you want to go to the reform school?" thundered the judge.

And then the proud rover of the Spanish main turned and fled, and the erstwhile dirty digit became his mother's little boy again.

Conscience Stricken, Appeals to Taft

GEE! TH' PRESIDENT IS SORE AT ME IMAGINATION

A MUTILATED Lincoln penny weighed on the mind of Patrick Peterson of Buxton, Ia., to such an extent that he has written a letter in regard to the coin to President Taft. The shining new penny made a great hit with Patrick, and he decided to make a lucky piece of it. So he bored a hole through the penny to hang it on a chain.

When the hole was bored Peterson remembered the law relative to mutilating coins. He searched his conscience and found himself to be a lawbreaker. It is probable that he had in mind the power of the president of the United States to pardon offenders against the law when he wrote the following letter, inclosing the penny, which was received at the White House:

"President Taft, Washington, D. C.: Please find one cent which I bored a hole in and feel very sorry for it. Hoping you will forgive me. Yours truly, Patrick Peterson, Buxton, Ia.

"P. S.—Hoping to hear from you."

President and Speaker in a "Hoe Down"

SOCIALLY and politically the dinner given for Speaker Cannon at the White House recently marked something of an epoch, for not before in many years has a president entertained in honor of the speaker of the house of representatives. Speaker Cannon was never entertained at the White House with an exclusive official function during all of the seven years of President Roosevelt's occupancy, and no previous affair has been given in his honor by President Taft.

About fifty guests, nearly all of whom were senators and members of the house, accompanied by their wives, looked on and applauded when the speaker tempted President Taft into a test of terpsichorean agility in the east room. Both stopped, panting, when the trial was ended, but the opinion was unanimous that the honors of fancy steps were even. The dancing followed the dinner.

The dinner ended, the company went to the east room, which boasts an ample and smooth dancing floor. An orchestra played a gentle waltz and the president led off with Mrs. Joseph H. Gaines, wife of the representative from West Virginia.

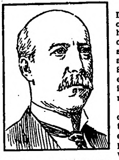
In the intermission, however, when the orchestra struck up a lively tune, Uncle Joe stepped briskly into the middle of the room and brought his heels together sharply. There was a patting of gloved hands and voices called encouragingly to the guest of honor. In a moment the speaker's heels were swinging in a brilliant highland fling.

"Excellent, eh?" he called, exultingly to Mr. Taft.

For answer the president stepped smilingly forward, and those who were present say the two executed several steps of an old-fashioned "hoe down" that delighted every one. Both were puffing when they finished.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

RAPS AMERICAN HEROES



James H. Stark, historian, in his book, "The Loyalists of Massachusetts and the Other Side of the American Revolution," calmly tears the halos from the heads of the ancestors of many of Massachusetts' first families, who pride themselves on their honorable lineage. The book is a most damaging document to the cause of the Sons of the Revolution and other kindred societies and one of the boldest statements concerning the real lives of some of the foremost men of revolutionary days.

In a chapter devoted to the causes of the Revolution the author states: "In Virginia the revolutionary movement of the poor whites, or 'crackers,' led by Patrick Henry, was against the planter aristocracy. It was only very slowly and very deliberately that Washington identified himself with the disunionist cause."

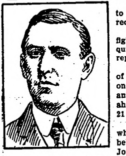
"He had been successively a storekeeper, a farmer and a shopkeeper, but he failed in all these pursuits and became a bankrupt at 23," declares the author. "Then he studied law a few weeks and practiced a few years. Finally he embarked on the stormy sea of politics. One day he worked himself into a fine frenzy and in a most dramatic manner demanded 'liberty or death,' although he had both freely at his disposal.

"John Adams joined the disunionists probably because he saw that if the revolution was successful there would be great opportunity for advancement under the new government. This proved to be the case."

The author, by quoting from a letter which Adams wrote, shows Boston that Adams was a defaulter and did not make proper return of taxes and that his sureties had to pay about $5,000.

NEMESIS OF THE BEEF TRUST



"Who is this man, Pierre P. Garven, who dares to go after us?" inquired one of the beef barons recently indicted at Jersey City.

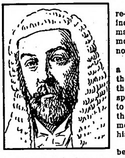
"You might get some information as to his fighting qualities and ability as an official by inquiring of the Standard Oil Company," was the reply.

By this it is shown that the young prosecutor of the county of Hudson, in New Jersey, having once locked horns with the greatest of all trusts and come out winner, is fitted for the great battle ahead of him when he goes into court to try the 21 packers of the beef combine for conspiracy.

Mr. Garven is not a reformer in the sense in which the term is generally used. He simply believes in the enforcement of the laws. Like Joseph W. Folk of Missouri, Mr. Garven says the the laws should be obeyed by all alike, but if the laws as they appear in the statute books are bad laws they should be repealed.

Mr. Garven started out in life just like thousands of other boys. He was born at Bayonne and his first work was for the Jersey Central Railway Company. He studied law at night and after being admitted to the bar served the same company in the legal department. Next we hear of him attacking a corrupt Democratic ring. He lost the first bout but tried a second time and was elected mayor of Bayonne. Then it was that he tackled the oil trust. He did not think the Rockefeller concern was paying enough taxes. If there's anything a trust hates it's taxes, so Mr. Garven had a fight on his hands from start to finish; but he succeeded in tacking $2,500,000 on to the assessment against the Standard. He had tried to add $5,500,000, but was satisfied with the compromise.

GREAT BRITAIN'S SPEAKER



The British house of commons the other day re-elected James W. Lowther speaker and for on indeterminate period the right honorable gentleman will preside over the lower branch of the mother of parliaments as does "Uncle Joe" Cannon at Washington.

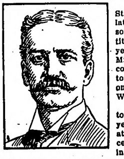
But the Right Hon. James W. Lowther follows a different system from that of the speaker of the house of representatives at the capital of the United States. Nobody ever calls the British speaker a "czar," a term that has been applied to American speakers. None of the members of the house of commons ever gets into an argument with the speaker. There is no fight against his rules.

Prior to his election Speaker Lowther had been as keen a partisan as anybody.

But when he became speaker he became politically dense. He had not—and must not have—a political opinion. So far as party politics is concerned he doesn't know anything.

The emoluments of the speaker of the British house of commons are $25,000 a year, an official residence, $5,000 a year toward its equipment, a web of broadcloth every Christmas and a buck and a doe each year from the master of buckhounds. When the speaker wants to retire from office he gets a pension of $20,000 a year.

COL. GORDON'S SUCCESSOR



Leroy Percy, who recently was elected United States senator to fill the unexpired term of the late A. J. McLaurin, is a lawyer and planter, the son of Col. A. W. Percy, who won his military title in the confederate army and also was a lawyer and planter. The family, one of the oldest in Mississippi, has its home in the rich Yazoo delta country. Senator Percy lives at Greenville, a town of some 8,000 population, which is situated on the Mississippi river and is the county seat of Washington county.

The real test of popular opinion on the senatorship question will come in Mississippi next year, with the holding of the Democratic primary, at which the voters will determine Percy's successor. Percy's election came after a long fight in the legislature. He was nominated on the fifty-eighth ballot of the Democratic caucus—nomination being equivalent to election—by a majority of five votes over former Gov. Vardaman. That picturesque character has announced his intention of being a candidate at the coming primary and he undoubtedly will poll a large vote. It is presumed that Mr. Percy intends to make the primary race also, for the term for which he has just been elected will expire March 3, 1913.

Born during the civil war, Senator Percy is considered a representative of both the old and new spirit in Mississippi. He showed himself a good politician in the fight for the senatorship and was the only candidate to develop strength steadily as the contest progressed. His wife is a Louisiana creole; one of his brothers is a prominent lawyer of Memphis, another brother is one of the wealthiest business men of Birmingham, Ala.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

"Nervy" Nat Enters Realm of Swelldom

QUAIL — A LA BERENICE PIE A-LA-

NEW YORK.—"Nervy" Nat came to life at the Hotel Plaza several nights ago and very narrowly missed enticing into his system some $26 worth of guinea hen, frogs legs and broiled pheasant a la Berenice, not to mention a qart of sparkling Burgundy of the vintage of 1811.

That he didn't feed was due to the unhappy conduct of his dicky which jumped out of his open faced waistcoat to the consternation of Baron Goldfogle of Obersheimer, Saxony.

As he afterward testified, "Nervy" Nat had spent his last 15 cents on a shave and a haircut, and at a nearby fountain he had laundered his celluloid collar until it shone with a brilliant sheen. In a Fifth avenue ash barrel he had found a very classy necktie, so that a casual glimpse of him would not dismay the most fastidious waiter.

With exquisite nonchalance and savior faire, Mr. Johnstone (he later gave his name as Lorillard Lawrence Johnstone) ambled into the dining room and sauntered to a table. Slipping into a chair he swiftly spread a napkin in such a manner that it hid the triangular patches in the legs of his trousers.

A waiter approached and, bowing low, offered Mr. Johnstone a menu.

"Ahem!" said Lorillard Lawrence Johnstone. "I feel rawther hungry this evening, waitah, and I am rawther pressed for time."

"Ah, yes, that would do very nicely," assented Mr. Johnstone, "but I fear it would serve only as an appetizer. You might also bring me some frogs legs and one of them, that is one of those pheasants a la Berenice."

The zest with which Mr. Lorillard Lawrence Johnstone attacked the rolls was the first thing that attracted the attention of the waiter.

"What a strange looking person," remarked the baron in German to his viz-aviz. It was only a moment after Mr. Johnstone had caught the attention of the baron that he opened his coat to give his arms freer play, and he was making such splendid progress with the bread and rolls that he paid no attention to the wanton conduct of his dicky.

It was a high polish celluloid dicky of a very smart pattern, but when it billowed out and revealed Mr. Johnstone's red flannel nether garment the Baron Goldfogle almost swooned.

"Caught," hissed Johnstone, as he saw Burnell. "I'd a gone to the jug a year for that dinner."

Old "Ben," Cat Pugilist, Dies Aged 19

KI-YI OW-!
MEDAL

The death of "Ben," who for almost nineteen years has been a permanent fixture in the store of the Merz Drug Company, West Twelfth street and Ogden avenue, has brought sorrow to hundreds who have known and petted him.

He died of old age and his body lay in state in the laboratory of the store with several candles burning above him as a mark of respect to what was probably the best-known cat in Chicago. Clerks in his former home went quietly about their duties and informed their customers gravely that "'Ben' is dead" before attending to their wants.

But sorrow was not everywhere in evidence on the West Side, for there were some who felt differently on hearing that he had passed away. Every dog in the neighborhood is rejoicing, for, although a stanch friend of mankind, "Ben" proved himself a veritable thorn in the side of every dog within blocks of his home. His reputation as a fighter, it is said, far eclipsed that of any feline pugilist on record.

"Yes, 'Ben' is dead," explained Edward Merz, "and we certainly miss him. He had become a landmark here with us, for he grew right up with the store. About eighteen years ago we got him from a milkman who found him. He was then only a kitten, but grew fast. He was the largest cat I have ever seen and weighed about twenty-one pounds. I am having a tombstone prepared with the inscription:

Joseph Lestina, manager for Mr. Merz, spoke eulogistically of the phenomenal fighting record of the dead hero.

Detroit "Cop" Snores, Loses His Teeth

WHAT DID THEY TASTE LIKE ME BE YUH ET EH

DETROIT, MICH.—A member of the Detroit police force woke suddenly from a restless slumber to find his false teeth gone—the upper set. The weird, strange, uncanny and ghostly part of the affair was that he had dreamed he had lost his teeth, and now it had come true.

"Funny thing," he remarked, as he scratched his head. "Awful funny." Then he scratched his head again.

"Did you bring 'em with you?" queried the door man.

There seemed to be no doubt that he had had them when he dropped asleep. Just as decidedly they were now gone. The policeman hurriedly searched all of his pockets, but in vain. Nary a molar nor bicuspid. Mystery most profound. Business of vexed astonishment.

"Maybe you swallowed 'em, old man," suggested another policeman hopefully. A look of scorn was the only reply he received.

"If this is a joke," said the toothless one, "it's gone too far, that's all.

Then he saw his overshoes near where he had been sleeping and inside were the teeth just where they had dropped as he opened his mouth to snore!

Students in Pajamas Catch a Burglar

POLICE RAH-RAH
RAH-POLICE

CHICAGO.—Ten members of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity of the University of Chicago, clad in pajamas, captured a fleet-footed burglar, after a chase of three blocks along the Midway plaisance, following the robbery of the chapter house, 923 East Sixtieth street, of property valued at $150.

The burglar, James Clark, was discovered in the building shortly after six o'clock in the morning by Henry Brown, the negro janitor, who grappled with him. The man broke away and ran from the building, the "frat" members, who had been roused from their slumbers by the scuffle, taking up the chase. He was locked up at the Woodlawn station.

The presence of the burglar in the when he found one of the front win- house was discovered by the janitor dows open and a two-foot "jimmy" lying inside.

Picking up the instrument, Brown crept up the stairs to the second floor, which is used for studying, just as the burglar appeared and commanded him to hold up his hands.

The janitor complied and when Clark ran toward the stairway he struck him over the head with the "jimmy."

Ten of the students, who had been sleeping on the third floor, appeared and gave chase. The burglar was caught three blocks away.

Lieut. John Hogan of the Woodlawn station declared that Clark had been paroled from the Joliet penitentiary in October, where he had been sentenced for a burglary. He declared, however, that Clark would be prosecuted on the charge of burglarizing the fraternity house, instead of being sent back to the penitentiary to finish his sentence, because of the recent parole law decision handed down by the supreme court.

A MAIL BOX AT THE DOOR.

One of the suggestions of the postmaster general for economizing in his department is that the people put up little boxes or other receptacles at their front doors, so that the postman will not have to stand and wait until somebody answers the bell. A great deal of time is wasted by the postman having to wait. It is in the interest of an efficient and economic service to provide these little conveniences. And then they are not only conveniences for the postman; they are also for the people of the house. "There is the mail man," says the housekeeper, with her hands in the dishwater or mixing the dough for the family bread—"run, Johnny, to the door," and Johnny is down in the back yard trying to lasso a black cat, but by this time the mail man, thinking no one is at home, goes off with the expected letter from Mary, who is visiting over in Chicago, and so the family is deprived of the pleasure for several hours, simply for the lack of a neat little letter-box at the front door.

The report of the geological survey shows the remarkable growth in the production of natural gas in the United States, the output having risen from $215,000 in 1882 to $54,640,000 in 1908, or 254 times the value 28 years ago. This is a tremendous increase. But the question will be suggested to many minds whether such enormous consumption of natural gas will not soon exhaust the supply. In fact, in one or two localities there have been complaints that during the cold waves of the present winter the natural gas has proved an uncertain reliance for heating purposes, sometimes failing when most needed. A little conservation and more effective regulation might be in order.

The marvelous power of recuperation possessed by the French is already beginning to show the rehabilitation of Paris is beginning. Notwithstanding the damage has monuted in the multimillions, the people are not discouraged by the vast task before them, but have attacked the problem of restoration without delay and in a spirit of courage, which, indeed, is characteristic of the age, and, in connection with the Gallic buoyancy of temperament, may confidently be expected to work miracles.

Dr. Pearsons, the Chicago millionaire who has been giving so much money to small colleges throughout the country, says that on April 14 he is going to have a general squaring up with all the institutions to which he has promised money and that he is going on a rampage of giving that will end only when his millions are all gone. "I intend to die penniless," he says, and he really acts as though he meant it.

The London post office, which is closed from Saturday night to Monday morning, now announces that it will deliver letters on Sunday by telephone. Only, you see, you must write your letter and post it before the post office can telephone it. It isn't at all strange that people are saying it will be much easier to do their own telephoning.

TAFT NOT AFRAID OF PEOPLE

President Declares He Is Against Railroads Only When They Violate the Law.

Chicago.—In a speech before the Chicago Traffic club during the St. Patrick's Day's celebration in this city Thursday, President Taft devoted a portion of his remarks to the railroads and the law.

It was in acknowledgement of his election as an honorary member of the club and in the course of his address the chief executive said:

"I am against railroads only when they violate the law. But every man must have his day in court. I would be a coward if I did not consider every interest affected before passing upon legislation. I am not afraid of the people of the United States. They are fair when you can get the facts before them. But sometimes it is difficult to do this.

"It seems to be in the minds of some gentlemen in responsibility that the people who are to be consulted are not those directly affected. That if in the recommendation of legislation affecting railroads, you venture to consult railroad men that it is enough to condemn all the legislation which you recommend.

"Time was in this country when it was most difficult for any railroad man to conduct his business within the law. I worked to bring it about so that he may conduct his business within the law, and so that the law shall be fair, but so that he shall be made to feel the penalty of the law when he steps outside of it.

"I believe there is a course, and I believe there is legislation that we may have that can bring that about, and I hope that I may be always able, no matter what the result to me, to do justice between the great interests of this country—the people, the shippers and the railroads; that business may go on, that we shall all be within the law and that every man shall see that it is to his ultimate advantage to uphold that law and preserve it and make it inviolate."

TRUCE HALTS FIGHT

LEADERS SEEK COMPROMISE

Insurgents Insist Cannon Shall Not Be Member of Rules Committee—Both Sides Name Conferees In Hope of Peace.

Washington.—By a vote of 164 to 150 after 26 hours of unceasing warfare the house of representatives postponed the fight over the rules amendment until noon Saturday. In the meantime there are agencies at work anxiously seeking to effect a compromise.

The insurgents were still unshaken in their demand that Speaker Cannon be made ineligible for membership on the committee of rules and that the committee be enlarged to represent all sections of the country. They claim a pledged vote of 33 on the final position and with the Democratic vote this is more than sufficient.

Republican organization leaders are working for a compromise agreement under which Cannon's position may be saved. They have agreed to the enlargement of the committee and its selection in party caucus. They are pleading that Speaker Cannon be permitted to remain on the committee.

The insurgent conferees are Norris, Hayes, Gardner (Mass.) and Lenroot. The organization is represented by Tawney, Mann, Payne, Dalzell and Smith (Ia.).

The latest plan of compromise to be considered is for the committee on rules to bring out a privileged resolution enlarging the committee to ten members—six Republicans and four Democrats—to be selected in respective party caucuses. No mention is to be made of the ineligibility of the speaker, but it is to be agreed that the speaker is not to be elected by the Republican caucus as a member of the committee.

Representative Tawney of Minnesota, chairman of the house committee on appropriations, has taken control of the situation for the regulars.

These insurgents voted for a recess without prejudice to their cause: Davidson of Wisconsin, Fish of New York, Gardner of Massachusetts, Good of Iowa, Hayes of California, Hinshaw of Nebraska, Kendall of Iowa, Kinkaid of Nebraska, Miller, Steenerson and Volsted of Minnesota: Pickett and Woods of Iowa, and Pray of Montana.

They announced to Tawney that they would continue to vote for the elimination of Cannon from the committee on rules and its enlargement that it might be representative.

The vote for postponement of the speaker's ruling on the point of order made by Dalzell against the Norris resolution, taken on motion of Gaines of West Virginia, was 164 ayes to 150 nays. This ended the present filibuster.

Speaker Cannon had announced his readiness to rule. It is understood he is to rule against the right of privilege claimed by Norris for his resolution changing the rules. Should the conference fail to reach an amicable agreement it is possible the speaker may rule in favor of the privileges of the resolution and throw it into the house for action.

The fight broke more critical for the speaker Friday than at the opening of the contest. The incoming trains brought many absentees but their round up and poll showed that under the most favorable circumstances the speaker was beaten by four votes. The insurgent leaders claim their majority will be nearly 20. Tawney and Smith of Iowa began work on the compromise plans. They sought out Norris, Nelson, Cooper of Wisconsin, Hayes of California, and Gardner of Massachusetts, with peace suggestions.

Tawney conceded to the insurgent leaders the enlargement of the committee to ten or fifteen members, but was not willing to grant the elimination of the speaker as chairman or a member of the committee. He insisted also that the members of the committee be elected at representative party caucuses. The regular leaders went so far as to intimate that Speaker Cannon would not be elected by a Republican caucus to the new committee on rules but they would not go to the extent of offering Speaker Cannon open affront by specifically denying him the privilege of serving on the committee.

At this point the conference ended, the insurgents being unwilling to consider any compromise that did not finally eliminate Cannon. Following this the insurgents met in their first caucus for over a month. There had been no prior agreement on the Norris resolution. Champ Clark and Underwood, Democratic leaders, were made aware of it less than 12 hours before the resolution was introduced. But insurgent and Democrat rallied at the first sign of conflict and they were standing as a unit when adjournment was taken.

KELLOGG SCORES OIL TRUST

"IF NOT MONOPOLY, WHAT IS IT?" HE ASKS.

Government Counsel Argues Before Supreme Court for Dissolution of the Standard.

Washington.—Frank B. Kellogg, lawyer for the government, after speaking three hours and a half Monday before the United States supreme court, in going over the evidence in the case for the dissolution of the Standard Oil, concluded with the words: "If the concern is not a combination in restraint of trade, then, in Heaven's name what is it?"

"If it is not a monopoly, then what is it? I challenge all history to show its equal as a combination, or as a monopoly. It was just the sort of concern that congress had in mind when it legislated against combinations in restraint of trade. It was its trust agreement that was copied in all other trust agreements that led to the anti-trust act."

"What sort of a corporation do you think the legislature had in mind when the act was passed?" asked Mr. Justice White who had listened intently.

"The Standard Oil Company," was Mr. Kellogg's quick reply, and he practically rested his case there.

Mr. Kellogg, for the government, followed John G. Milburn, representing the corporation, and like Mr. Milburn he gave a history of the Standard Oil Company, but it was an entirely different history from that presented by the corporation attorney.

"Mr. Milburn says that is competition," he said after citing evidence to show how the Standard had driven its competitors from business. "I admit it was competition, the fiercest kind of competition. But I deny that the morals of this country are so low that it was necessary to lie and steal and cheat for this corporation to maintain its status against competition."

"Have I denied that they have ability and energy?" he said again, replying to Mr. Milburn's contention that it was ability and energy that built up the Standard's business.

"They have ability and energy of the highest order; ability to make combinations and energy to crush out competition. But they have raised the black flag and it is under that ensign their ability and energy have been used."

He read from the defendant's brief that they had a right to combine and use their money as they pleased, and then he said: "Let them combine and let them use their money as they please, and I believe that this company and others like it will control the industrial affairs of this country before ten years have gone by; yes, before five years have passed. And if you remove the fear of the law, they will combine, they will control the country."

Mr. Kellogg argued at length to show that the company has a monopoly in the meaning of the Sherman law.

When that august body will render the momentous decision that will either perpetuate the great Rockefeller corporation or else dismember it, is a matter that the court will make known at its own good pleasure.

The closing arguments in the case Wednesday were bitter charges to be made in the presence of the supreme court—bitter upon the part of both the government and the corporation.

WILL ARBITRATE RAIL WAR

Request of Railroad Officials and Firemen for Mediation by Federal Authorities Is Granted.

Chicago.—After the hour for calling a strike of 27,000 railroad employes had been fixed W. S. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, announced that the railroad men would accept Commissioner Neill and Chairman Knapp as mediators.

He said, however, that the men would not countenance needless delay or sacrifice any of their rights.

Mediation by the federal authorities at Washington under the Erdman act has been asked by representatives of all the railroads operating westward out of Chicago, in the trouble that has arisen between their firemen and themselves. This mediation will be granted, and it is hoped in this way to avoid a strike, which would involve nearly 30,000 men and tie up all of the big western roads.

Chairman Knapp of the interstate commerce commission and Dr. Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, the federal mediators, start for Chicago Thursday to take up arbitration negotiations with the officials of the firemen's union.

The resolution followed a communication from the railway managers to the effect that they are willing to arbitrate the money question, which was one of the demands of the men, but absolutely refused to arbitrate two working rules demanded by the union.

Follow this advice.

Quaker Oats is the best of all foods; it is also the cheapest. When such men as Prof. Fisher of Yale University and Sir James Crichton Browne, LL.D., F.R.S. of London spend the best part of their lives in studying the great question of the nourishing and strengthening qualities of different foods, it is certain that their advice is absolutely safe to follow.

Professor Fisher found in his experiments for testing the strength and endurance of athletes that the meat eaters were exhausted long before the men who were fed on such food as Quaker Oats. The powers of endurance of the non-meat eaters were about eight times those of the meat eaters.

Sir James Crichton Browne says—eat more oatmeal, eat plenty of it and eat it frequently. 59

A Big Shortage in Seeds.

From almost all sections comes the report of frightful shortages in seed corns; also in some varieties of seed barley, oats, rye, wheat, flax, clovers and the early varieties of potatoes.

This is particularly noticeable in the great corn and oat and potato growing states.

The wide-awake farmers in these and other states are placing their orders early for above seeds in order to be on the safe side, and we can but urge farmers to write at once to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., Box 182, La Crosse, Wis., for their farm seed and corn catalogue.

The magnitude of the business of this long established firm can be somewhat estimated when one knows that in ordinary years they sell:

50,000 bushels of elegant seed corn.
50,000 bushels of seed wheat.
100,000 bushels of pure clover and timothy seeds, together with an endless amount of other farm seeds and vegetable seeds, such as onions, cabbages, carrots, peas, beans, lettuce, radishes, tomatoes, etc.

There is one thing about the Salzer firm—they never disappoint. They always fill your order on account of the enormous stocks they carry.

Send them 8 cents for a package of their great $500 prize Corn and Catalogue. Address, John A. Salzer Seed Co., Box 182, La Crosse, Wis.

The Right Spirit.

Apropos of Valentine's day, a passenger on the Bermudian said:

"Mark Twain once told us, in a little Valentine day speech on this boat, of an Irish wooer who had the right Valentine spirit. Acceptance or rejection he could take with equal grace.

"'Will ye be my valentine?' he said, on February 14, to the girl he loved.

"'No,' she replied; 'I am another's.'

"He heaved a sigh and said:

"'Sure, thin, darlin', I wish ye was twins, so that I could have at laste the half of ye.'"

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. An Ungallant Outlook.

"Again, the ungallant outlook of some husbands causes divorce," said ex-Gov. Pennypacker, in a witty after-dinner speech in Philadelphia.

"It is amazing what an ungallant outlook some men have. I said one day to a Bucks county farmer:

"'Have you got a wife, Hans?'

"'Why, yes, to tell the truth, I have,' Hans replied. 'For the little bit the critters eat, it ain't worth a man's while to be without one.'"

His Sole Resting Place.

Next day, hoping to reap the fruits of her labor, she asked: "Now, Johnnie, tell me! What do you see on the mantlepiece at home?"

A LITTLE THING

Changes the Home Feeling.

Coffee blots out the sunshine from many a home by making the mother, or some other member of the household, dyspeptic, nervous and irritable. There are thousands of cases where the proof is absolutely undeniable. Here is one.

A Wis. mother writes:

"I was taught to drink coffee at an early age, and also at an early age became a victim to headaches, and as I grew to womanhood these headaches became a part of me, as I was scarcely ever free from them.

"About five years ago a friend urged me to try Postum. I made the trial and the result was so satisfactory that we have used it ever since.

"My husband and little daughter were subject to billious attacks, but they have both been entirely free from them since we began using Postum instead of coffee. I no longer have headaches and my health is perfect."

If some of these tired, nervous, irritable women would only leave off coffee absolutely and try Postum they would find a wonderful change in their life. It would then be filled with sunshine and happiness rather than weariness and discontent. And think what an effect it would have on the family, for the mood of the mother is largely responsible for the temper of the children.

J. S. KENNEDY ESTATE

ADMINISTRATORS OFFER $135,000 TAX IF STATE DROPS CLAIM FOR $450,000.

LATEST PHASE OF LITIGATION

Estate Claims Immunity, but Offers This sum as Compromise to Save Litigation.

So. St. Paul, Mrch 19.—If the state of Minnesota is wiling to acsept $135,000 for its claim of something like $450,000 against the J. S. Kennedy estate of New York, in the shape of inheritance taxes, it can have it without further litigation.

This does not necessarly mean that the administration of the estate acknowledges the state right to collect on stock owned by non-residents and represented by property located within the state, but is merely for the purpose of getting rid of a lot of expensive litigation, the outcome of which some claim is doubtful.

Cooper on Proposition.

This compromise was put up to Governor Eberhart, State Auditor Iverson, and members of the state tax commisson by Attorney General G. T. Simpson on his return from the east, at a conference held in the attorney general's office.

It was some months ago that Mr. Simpson startled the legal fraternity with the announcement that he intended to enforce the state inheritance tax law against non-residents. It had never been done before and there was some doubt.

The estate of J. S. Kennedy of New York, owner of Great Northern stock aggregating $14,000,000 in value, was selected for the test and claims against the property were immediately filed. As an aid Loouis W. Weeks, assistant to Mr. Simpson, was appointed resident administrator of the estate by Probate Judge E. W. Bazille of St. Paul. This was done on petition by Mr. Simpson.

Since then a quiet investigation as to the value of the property represented in Minnesota has been on and as far as known the estimate has been in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. This was ascertained by taking the Great Northern holdings and deducting the Minnesota mileage.

Mr. Simpson, it is said, is unwilling to accept the amount tendered unless backed by the other state officials. He even doubts his authority to make a compromise when such would be taken as equivalent to an admission of the state's contention that it has power to reach the property even though it is outside the state.

TO INSPECT STATE GUARD.

Colonel Wright, St. Peter, Announces Second Infantry Dates.

St. Peter.—Battalion inspections, to which are attributed much of the increased efficiency of the Minnesota National Guard, have been ordered by Colonel A. W. Wright, commanding the Second infantry. They are to be held in preparation for the annual inspections, and the dates fixed for the various companies are as follows:

Third Battalion.—Major W. T. Mollison; Company A, New Ulm, Captain Albert Pfaender; Company K, St. Peter, Captain O. J. Quane, April 11; Company C, Winona, Captain William Brandt, March 15; Company E, Fairmont, Captain E. N. Chute, April 4.

Mad Man Thinks He is Satan.

Bemidji.—Asa Bradley, a homesteader who recently proved up on his homestead in 134-29, Koochiching county, was adjudged insane and ordered committed to the hospital at Fergus Falls. He recently ran through the streets of Kellihеr, claiming he was Satan and asking every one he met to kill him. No particular reason is given for the unfortunate young man's present condition. His habits have been good.

Death Preferred to Trial.

Lyons, Nebraska.—Mrs. Mae Sabin, formerly Miss Mae Stipp of Windom, Minn., committed suicide at her husband's farm near here, through fear of testimony she believed would be brought in at an impending trial. She killed herself with her husband's pistol.

MR. LIND NOT A CANDIDATE.

Former Governor Asserts Reports Are Untrue.

New Orleans, Louis.—John Lind, former Democratic governor of Minnesota, is in New Orleans, and is the second former governor of Minnesota, to be here within a week. Reports have been circulated that he might again try for the governorship of his state and head his party. In reply he declared that he positively would not be a candidate.

DEMOCRATIC VOTE HEAVY.

St. Paul.—Fifty precincts out of one hundred twenty-seven have reported their returns on the St. Paul primary election held for the nomination of city officers, assemblymen and aldermen.

The returns showed that the Democratic vote was considerably heavier than the Republican vote. This was attributed to the fact that in nearly all the wards, with the exception of the First and Seventh, there were hot contests for the nomination.

The 50 precincts reported gave Henry G. Haas, Democratic, 3,437 while Herbert P. Keller received 2,313 votes. Haas and Keller will be the respective candidates for mayor.

The election day was quiet and uneventful, marked by spirited contests for the minor offices. Among the Republicans, the contests were for city comptroller and city treasurer. For comptroller, W. H. Farnham in the nomination over J. J. Ermatinger by a vote of about 2 to 1.

For the positions of municipal judge, Judge John Finehout and Judge Hugo Hanft, Democratic, are both renominated, with close contests on the other two positions.

Major W. C. Handy, for years the managing editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, is nominated by a handsome majority on the Republican ticket for assemblyman.

Among others nominated for assemblymen on the Republican ticket are Michaud, Hahle, Rogers, Holt, Keller, Connolly and Mills.

OWNERSHIP DEAL DRAGS.

Stillwater Council and Water Company Fail to Agree on Terms.

Stillwater.—The city council postponed action on the proposition to purchase the waterworks plant. The company will sell for $142,500 in cash or for $147,000 in 4 per cent bonds. There was no discussion, but the council evidently wants to buy for $142,500 in bonds.

Consideration of the proposal to annex the town of Oak Park to Stillwater was deferred indefinitely. Officers of the city were authorized to enter into a contract with the Consumers' Power company to install electric motors for the operation of the pontoon section of the bridge over the St. Croix. A saving of 50 per cent is expected.

The board of education decided last night to install domestic science in the schools next year. W. H. Hollands was re-engaged for superintendent of the schools for a term of two years at an advance of salary. Four teachers were chosen to fill vacancies.

BARTENDER IS INDICTED

Chaska, Minn., Grand Jury Investigating Death of Man.

Chaska.—The grand jury is investigating the charges of manslaughter in the first degree preferred against a saloonkeeper here, now in jail, who is alleged to have sold liquor to a man in such quantities as to cause his death. The grand jury has been hearing evidence in this case for over a week. The victim is Julius Euntick, who died February 19.

CRUSHED UNDER WAGON, DIES

Granite Falls, Minn., Farmer Meets End in Runaway.

Granite Falls.—Arthur Frances, a farmer living south of town, was killed by a runaway team. He was addicted to drink, and was under the influence of liquor when he left town for home. He was found dead with the wagon box lying across his neck. He leaves a wife and two children.

Ivanhoe, Minn., March 18.—The finding of $1,000 in currency in an old cast-off mattress by a boy caused much local excitement and may result in litigation.

A. H. Mohler, a lawyer, left four years ago for the state of Washington, and at the time disposed of a hair mattress to the proprietor of the Ivanhoe hotel. In course of time the mattress was thrown out and permission given the children to make a bonfire of it. The boys found more fun in using it for play purposes than in burning it, and for four years it has been common property among them.

A few days ago the old mattress went to pieces and a boy extracted from its remnants a flat wallet containing $1,000 in currency. The question has arisen as to who hid the money in the mattress, and has not been satisfactorily answered as yet.

PFIFER DIES OF WOUNDS.

Mankato, March 14.—Robert S. Pfifer, who shot his daughter and himself at his home in Judson village, died in a hospital. His daughter Maude, while not out of danger, is doing as well as could be expected. Her condition is grave because a bullet perforated the bowels in several places. Peritonitis is feared and the only hope lies in the fact that Miss Pfifer is a strong, healthy girl.

JOHN KLING, THE CHICAGO CUBS' GREAT CATCHER.

MANAGERS TO LEAD FIGHT FROM BENCH

NONE OF THE AMERICAN LEAGUE CHIEFS THIS YEAR IS PLAYER.

OLD STARS AT THE HELM

Duffy, McAleer, O'Connor, Donovan, McGuire, Mack, Jennings and Stallings, Were Great Players and Among Topnotchers of Their Time.

For the first time since its organization the American league will take the field in 1910 without a single playing manager in the list of eight competing clubs. With the passing of Sullivan and Lajoie from the bossing job and their return to plain playing duties the last of the combination manager-captains has departed, and the whole array of teams will be given attention from the bench hereafter.

Curiously enough the eight American league managers are also old players of great reputation, men who in the days of their glory were among the topnotchers of their time.

The eight men who are on deck for 1910 are Connie Mack, Patsy Donovan, Hughey Duffy, Jim McGuire, Hughey Jennings, George Stallings, Jack O'Connor and Jimmy McAleer. Six of them are Turks, while Jennings and Stallings are supposed to have considerable Irish blood mixed into their veins. Score a point, therefor, for the Irish. The players under their control will be Germans, Indians, Hunyaks, Norwegians, Frenchmen and a few Americans, but the flag of Ireland waves in the foreman's hand.

Of the eight, Mack, McGuire, Stallings and O'Connor were catchers when in the big game. Score another for the catchers, when half the managers learned the fine tricks of the game behind the bat. Donovan, Duffy and McAleer were outfielders and Jennings was a shortstop. Only one infielder on the job, and not a solitary pitcher. How about the pitchers? We hear so much about the wonderful ability of the pitchers, their great headwork, their incomparable foxiness and wisdom, but where are there any pitchers, except Clark Griffith, managing ball clubs?

All of the eight were great men, real wonders, in their line. Connie Mack was a long, lean and wily catcher. He backstopped with the greatest of success and the best of records, year after year. Patsy Donovan came into prominence in Brotherhood year, when he came into the National league. Although Patsy never stayed long in one place, he was always popular, and most of the big cities enjoyed his company at one time or another. Fast fielder was Donovan, good base thief and a peachy hitter.

Hughey Duffy, though an active player before Donovan broke in, outlasted Patsy, and is still able to hit as hard as anybody. He will probably send himself to bat now and then as a pinch hitter for the Sox, but will not try to play any fielding position. Duffy was one of Anson's merry lads for several years previous to the Brotherhood, and then, going to Boston, made a grand record as a batter and one of the keenest thinkers ever in the game.

Jim McGuire antedates even Duffy as an active player, having caught in the fast company back in 1884. The deacon has played with numerous teams since then, giving up the mask only a year ago, and still could go in if all the other catching talent went to the bad. He was always a classy catcher, a good batter, slow on foot, but steady and reliable.

Hughey Jennings rose to fame as the great shortstop and magical batsman of the glorious old Baltimores. There have been shortstops that equaled Jennings—it is doubtful if there was ever a shortstop that was of more value to a team, fielding, batting, running, ginger and wildfire all counted in. Since his arm went back on him Jennings has achieved as much fame as a manager as he gained in active play.

Few of the eastern fans, perhaps, are aware that the dark and burly Stallings was once a catcher of renown, but he was. He caught in California more than twenty years ago, played in several minor leagues and had a season in the fast company along about 1890. Taking to the managerial work later on, he has been in and out of the fast company a couple of times, but now seems destined to stick awhile, as he has shown better work in piloting the Highlanders than when he was at Detroit.

Jack O'Connor for many years was one of the greatest of the catchers. While his fame was not sounded as loudly as that of Ewing, Kelly and Bennett, old pitchers declare that he never had a superior in the inside requirements of the catching job, and that as a jollier, a cheery helper of the team, he was unequaled. O'Connor was a great ball player in every department of the game and ought to make an able leader.

Jimmy McAleer never had a master when it came to playing center field. McAleer was for many years a star in a group of wonderful outfielders, of whom Curt Welch, Dickie Johnstone and Bill Lange were fine examples. He was not a heavy hitter, but his outfield work was that of a wizard, while his managerial skill has been high grade ever since he gave up the garden to assume the reins.

Pretty neat bunch of managers, these eight men of the American league. We ought to get some rare baseball from them during the coming season.

Developed Some Good Players.

The Three-Eye and Texas leagues developed more players for the big league market last season than any other circuit. The Springfield (Ill.) club alone sold $12,500 worth of players, while Shreveport, La., marketed $19,000 worth.

Recruit Gets First Home Run.

The first home run of the season was made by Wanner, the new infielder of the New York Americans. Chief Myers of the Giants smashed out two in a game a few days later.

GORDON'S TESTIMONY PROVES INTERESTING

Charles W. Gordon, whose picture is given above, is agent for the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company in Ogdensburg, N. Y., and resides at 78 King street, that city. In giving testimony regarding his own case, Mr. Gordon recently made the following statement:

"Some time ago, while suffering from stomach catarrh, I was advised to take Cooper's New Discovery, and did so, two bottles of the preparation putting my stomach into good condition. Previous to my taking the New Discovery I could not eat a meal without experiencing pain and discomfort afterward.

"I had been in this condition for a long time, although I had tried many different remedies in search of relief, and at last reached the conclusion that I had exhausted every available resource. Cooper's New Discovery was therefore to me almost a heaven-sent blessing, and the work of the medicine was so permanent and lasting that I have had no recurrence of my former trouble whatever.

"I can eat anything I care for without noticing any bad effects afterward. I have recommended Cooper's New Discovery to many persons of my acquaintance, and it never fails to give satisfactory results. It reaches the seat of stomach trouble in mighty short order."

Cooper's New Discovery is sold by all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, we will forward you the name of a druggist in your city who will. Don't accept "something just as good."—The Cooper Medicine Co., Dayton, Ohio.

The reign of Czar Cannon came to a sudden end in Congress last week. No one man can hold up congress for any great length of time, for it was up to the republican member to either put Cannon out of business or get out themselves.

There is but one rule for legislative apportionment bills worthy of anybody but a sneak thief. That rule is simple and obious. It is obvious that there is one and only one time to re-district the state; namely, immediately after the federal census to be taken this year. Any man who refuses to forward the work as soon as this work is available is no better than a thief and should be banished from public life thereafter. The failure of reapportionment bill's in this state in the past has been no slight stain upon its record. -Red Wing (Goodhue County) Republican.

The [illegible] stuff John, but you [illegible] to hustle if you find a better man to represent this district in the legislature than D.P. O'Neill, if he does live in Thief River Falls.

Of That Result.

The Highlanding correspondent, or we might say mixer of lies for Eastman to publish, go a little farther than usual last week when they say: "At the annual meeting last Tuesday the fight centered upon the choice of supervisor. A. Hammersteen, said to be a socialist, was a candidate for supervisor, and fearing that his election would cause a great disorder, W. C. Hunt and Andrew Ellingson got together, held a caucus at the store of the latter and nominated Ben Eveato in opposition to Hammersteen."

We quote the above to let people know, that know the facts, how dirty and low down some people would sink to obtain a little town office. As a matter of fact, W. G Hunt never attended at the store of Andrew Elingson to nominate a township supervisors on any other town officer, as we can employ our time to better advantage than attending little town caucus. Lie No. 1 nailed. There was no fight made on supervisor, but there was one made on town clerk, and Anthony Dannacker (the Ellingson store candidate) won out with such a big majority that Hammersteen couldn't "count him out." We did call the republicans of Highlanding attention to the fact, that an attempt was being made to defeat Dannaker, and they delivered the goods, and they will see to it that all their legal votes are counted at the next election in this town.

Both Needed in Their Proper Place.

The Skandinaven in a lengthy editorial says both Steenerson and Bjorge are needed in the places they now fill Steenerson in congress, Bjorge in the legislature, and that it is a mistake for Bjorge to run for congress. It argues that Bjorge is needed in the legislature to complete the solution of the problem of the taxation of the iron ore and says that the steel trust will no doubt support any plan to get him out of his present position. On the other hand it says that no fault can be found with Steenerson for his official conduct and that he should be returned, as it would take Bjorge several terms in congress to fill Steenerson's shoes.—Norman County Index.

We Have Some Grown Up, in Highlanding.

Go along the streets of our city and you can point out the boys who in the next decade, will be the grumblers and growlers. You will see them sitting idle on a dry goods box swinging their feet and squirting tobacco juice. In ten or twenty years from now they will be doing the same thing and declaring the world has been made all wrong. Never having made an effort to do anything for themselves they do not like those who have; having nothing themselves, they look upon every man who has gained property or high professional reputation thru unceasing toil and economy of time and means as having wronged them in some way, and an enemy to be denounced in season and out of season.—Thief River Falls Press.

Venetian Coffee Houses.

The first cup of coffee was drunk in Europe at Venice toward the end of the sixteenth century. The Venetian chronicler Morosini in his records of the events in the year 1585 mentions the beverage called "cavee" drunk by the Turks and noted for its anti-soporific qualities. In the year 1591 a Venetian doctor introduced the berries from Egypt, taught his countrymen how to crush them and brew the beverage, and the use of coffee soon became general—so much so, in fact, that Venice was full of coffee houses where the people idled away their days drinking the aromatic beverage. A peculiarity of the Venetian coffee houses was that their patrons did not pay for each cup of coffee they drank, but settled their bills for all the coffee consumed at the end of each year. The regular price of a cup of coffee was 5 soldi, about 2½ cents, and in some of the old cafes of Venice today the same price is still charged.—New York Sun.

Awkward Compliment.

There is such a thing as being too persistently complimentary. A candid and well meaning professor who had witnessed the performance of a little play in a private house in which his hostess had taken the leading part met the lady as she came from behind the curtain.

"Madam," he said, rushing up to her, "you played excellently. That part fits you to perfection."

"Oh, no, professor," said the lady modestly. "A young and pretty woman is needed for that part."

"But, madam," persisted the professor, "you have positively proved the contrary!"—Pearson's Weekly.

PAPER CAR WHEELS.

Safer and Stronger but More Costly Than Other Wheels.

We naturally think of paper as something lacking in strength and of a paper article as being fragile, so are somewhat alarmed when an encyclopedic friend remarks that the wheels of the car on which we are slipping along at the rate of a mile a minute are made of paper. This opportunity to be alarmed occurs, however, on only the best of railways, as paper car wheels, though safer and longer lived than any others, are also more expensive. The principal advantage of wheels made from this unpromising material is found in the fact that they are not injured by the violent vibrations to which car wheels are subjected.

The paper used in the manufacture of these wheels is known as calendered rye straw board, or thick paper. It is sent to the car wheel shops in circular sheets measuring twenty-two to forty inches in diameter, and over each of these sheets is spread an even coating of flour paste. A dozen sheets are placed one on the other and the lot subjected to hydraulic pressure of 500 tons or more. After two hours' pressure these sheets, which have now become a solid block, are kept for a week in a drying room at a temperature of 120 degrees, after which a number of blocks are pasted together, pressed and dried for a second week. A third combination of layers is then made, after which there is an entire month of drying. The final block contains 120 to 160 sheets of the original paper and is four and one-half to five inches in thickness. All resemblance to paper has been lost, the block in weight, density and solidity approximating the finest grained, heaviest metal.

To complete the wheel there are required a steel tire, a cast iron hub, wrought iron plates to protect the paper on either side and two circles of bolts, one set passing through the flange of the tire, the other through the flange of the hub and both sets through the paper. The paper blocks are turned on a lathe, which also reams out the center hole for the hub. Two coats of paint are applied to keep out moisture. The various parts are next assembled and the paper car wheel is complete.

As may be readily understood, paper which has received the treatment described may be used for almost any purpose for which metal or wood is used if not too much exposed to dampness, and to all practical purposes it is fireproof.—Harper's.

A Pert Reply.

A story is told of Sir John Fisher and Lord Charles Beresford when both were stationed in the Mediterranean with their commands. A competition had been held at Malta for a prize annually presented by Sir John. It is known as the Malta cup, and, having so far always been won by a crew belonging to the admiral's flagship it was fully expected by Sir John that this record would be maintained. On this particular occasion, however, a crew of the Ramillies, commanded by Lord Charles Beresford, carried it off instead. A day or two later the fleet was practicing maneuvers, and Admiral Fisher, whose reputation as a stern disciplinarian is well known, was dissatisfied with the performance of the Ramillies. He signaled accordingly to its commander the message, "Explain your reason for being late in executing maneuver." Without a moment's delay the answer came, "We are towing the Malta cup."—Dundee Advertiser.

A Cruel Joke.

Oswald, a witty and original Parisian, had a mania for practical joking. He was very amusing to his friends, but when his talents were exerted to avenge some wrong there was more bitterness than fun in his wit. One evening when a man who had not treated him politely gave a reception he revenged himself cruelly. The man was slightly deformed. All the hunchbacks of Paris, 500 in number, presented themselves at his reception. They had received notices from Oswald that if they should go to this address on this evening they would learn of a legacy which had been left them.

Stolen Joke

The shade of the ice baron had introduced himself to Charon on the river trip.

"Quite a roomy bit of water, this Styx," he commented. "Never freezes over, does it?"

"Not so's to interfere with navigation," said Charon smilingly, "and, by the way, that very fact gave Mephisto the idea for his favorite joke."

"You don't say! What's the gag?"

"Why, when a guest in hades complains of the scarcity of ice the old boy explains that it's due to the unprecedented perversity of the past winter!"—Buffalo Times.

Obedient Bobby.

"Bobby, my son," exclaimed the dismayed mother as she saw all her boy's belongings stacked in a corner of the closet, "haven't I tried over and over to teach you that you should have a place for everything?"

"Yes, mother," said the boy cheerfully, "and this is the place."—Ladies Home Journal.

JUDGE WATTS SUSTAINED

GUNDER TALKED TO MUCH

This morning Attorney E. O. Hagen received notification from clerk of the supreme court that Judge Watts has been sustained in overruling the demurrer in the $25,000 slander suit of Ole Larson against Gunder Kresture, both well known residents of Fisher.

The action was started last summer. Larson alleging in his complaint that Krosture had maid the statement that the plaintiff had set the fire which destroyed his (Larson's) hardware at Fisher together with several other buildings.

The defendant demurred to the complaint contending that the mere statement on the part of Krostue that Larson had set the fire did not constitute slander. Judge Watts overruled the demurrer and Krouste appealed from the decision which has not been sustained.

The action for $25,000 damages will therefor come up for trail at the June term of the district court.

Do You Really Love Dogs?

Perhaps the final test of anybody's love of dogs is willingness to permit them to make a camping ground of the bed. There is no other place in the world that suits the dog quite so well. On the bed he is safe from being stepped upon, he is out of the way of drafts, he has a commanding position from which to survey what goes on in the world, and, above all, the surface is soft and yielding to his outstretched limbs. No mere man can ever be so comfortable as a dog looks. Some persons object to having a dog on the bed at night, and it must be admitted that he lies a little heavily upon one's limbs, but why be so base as to prefer comfort to companionship? To wake up in the dark night and put your hand on that warm, soft body, to feel the beating of that faithful heart—is not this better than undisturbed sloth? The best night's rest I ever had was once when a cocker spaniel puppy, who had just recovered from stomach ache (dose one to two soda mints) and was a little frightened by the strange experience, curled up on my shoulder like a fur tippet, gently pushed his cold, soft nose into my neck and there slept sweetly and soundly until morning.—H. O. Merwin in Atlantic.

Absentminded Dyer.

Charles Lamb had a friend named George Dyer who was perhaps the most absentminded man on record. It was Dyer who, leaving Lamb's Islington home at broad noonday, walked straight into the New River. He was known to take up a coal scuttle instead of his hat, to walk home with a footman's cockaded hat on and even to leave one of his shoes under the table and get well on his homeward way before discovering his loss. He called at a friend's one morning, heard that the family was away in the country, left his name in the visitors' book, and a few hours later called again, asked for the book again and was astonished to see his own freshly written name. Once, when Proctor breakfasted with him, Dyer forgot the tea. The omission being noted, he filled the teapot with ginger. Proctor left as soon as he could to get a better breakfast at a coffee tavern, and there Dyer strolled in and asked him how he did, quite unconscious of having seen him earlier.

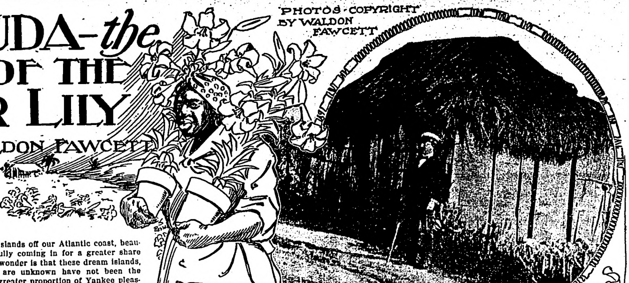
BERMUDA—the HOME OF THE EASTER LILY

By WALDON FAWCETT

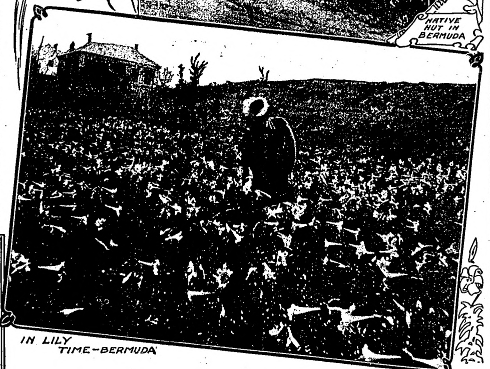


PHOTOS COPYRIGHT BY WALDON FAWCETT

NATIVE HUT IN BERMUDA

NOW that American tourists, in search of the novel and picturesque, have taken to journeying in great numbers to all parts of the West Indies and other islands off our Atlantic coast, beautiful Bermuda is rightfully coming in for a greater share of attention. The only wonder is that these dream islands, where frost and snow are unknown have not been the mecca in the past of a greater proportion of Yankee pleasure lovers who each winter and spring seek more kindly climes than are to be found in the northern and western portions of the United States. A hospitable domain, where the temperature never goes below 60 degrees or above 75 degrees and which is only 48 hours' sail from New York, may naturally be expected to claim no meager share of attention from travel loving Americans—particularly that large portion of us who enjoy a complete change of scene and manners and customs, even though we cannot (by reason of time and expense) journey far to find them.

These coral islands in mid-ocean may be very delightful at almost any season of the year, but the particularly auspicious season in which to visit Bermuda is in the lily season, just as Japan may be seen at its best in cherry blossom time. Bermuda's chief claims before the world are as the home of the Easter lily and the onion and right royally does she merit prestige in both directions. However, the reader need conjure up no mind picture of an atmosphere laden with the odors of the strong-scented vegetable. In Bermuda, in lily time, at least, the delicious, pungent odor exhaled by millions of the white, bell-shaped flowers dominates every nook and corner of the land. The only rivals of the lilies in floral splendor are the oleanders, which grow in hedges to twice the height of a man, and while the flaming tints of these latter flowers challenge the eye they have no fragrance and so leave the lilies undisputed in their pre-eminence.



IN LILY TIME—BERMUDA

A MARKET SCENE. IN THE LAND OF THE LILY

The lilies are not the only contributors to the spectacular features of life in Bermuda. The island community is a British colony and military post and the periodical parades of red-coated soldiers add a touch of the bizarre to life in a restricted little community. Likewise are the dusky natives speaking a cockney dialect a source of amusement and the quaint little white houses attract every person with the slightest trace of home-love in his make-up, but, after all, it is the lilies which constitute the omnipresent, ever-satisfying attraction. The lily fields are easily and comfortably reached, thanks to a network of hard and perfect shell roads. In most instances the lily tracts are surrounded by walls, but visitors are usually welcomed.

Some idea of the beautiful spectacle afforded by these vast masses of gleaming white blossoms, gently swaying in the breeze, may be formed from the fact that there are a number of lily fields in Bermuda each of which are 25 acres in extent and there are some lily farms where from 30 to 40 acres of bloom may be seen in a single field. Many of the stalks are literally laden down with the precious posies. Indeed Bermuda holds the record for the production of the greatest number of lilies on a stalk, as high as 145 perfect flowers having been in bloom on a single plant at one time. A large proportion of the sweeter rivals of the Bermuda onion which overspread the islands in the spring are shipped to the United States for Easter. The employment of fast steamships and the comparative nearness of Bermuda makes it possible to get whole cargoes of cut Easter lilies to the large cities on the Atlantic coast promptly and in perfect condition.

In the average Bermuda landscape it seems as though every detail had been arranged with a view to maintaining harmony with the billowy fields of white. The small, cottage-like houses, built of coral, would appear almost glaringly white were it not that in almost every instance a contrast is afforded by clinging rose bushes and sturdy vines which entwine the habitations. According to tradition, it was an American woman — Mrs. George Russell Hastings, niece of the late ex-President Hayes—who first gave to the people of Bermuda the idea of growing Easter lilies on a commercial basis. In 1878 Mrs. Hastings planted some bulbs in Bermuda and, finding that they took kindly to the thin, rich soil, she urged the farmers of the islands to raise lilies as well as vegetables. Soon it was found that an acre of lilies would net three or four times as much revenue as an acre of onions.

The AMERICAN POULTRY INDUSTRY

SCENE ON AN AMERICAN POULTRY FARM

NO OTHER American industry has a heavier tax suddenly put upon its resources than that imposed upon the poultry industry at Eastertide. It comes about largely, of course, through the significance of the egg as the emblem of the universal currency of the spring holiday. It is not, moreover, the actual consumption of eggs on the Easter breakfast table that is solely responsible for this heavy drain upon an important branch of our food market. That is an important factor, to be sure, but it must be remembered that tens of thousands of eggs are, in effect, suddenly "withdrawn from circulation" as eatables at Easter time. In this category are countless numbers of the colored eggs which have been dyed for the occasion and most of which are never intended to be eaten. Similarly there are the myriad eggs which are used for egg rolling and other childish games on Easter and Easter Monday and which are, for the most part an actual as well as a theoretical loss at the close of the day.

The largest poultry dealers declare that the drain upon the egg market at the close of Lent is only rivaled by the strain imposed upon that other branch of the industry—that covering live and dressed fowls—at Thanksgiving and Christmas. With the steady increase in the Easter egg requisitions of the American people and the price advancing at times to about 50 to 70 cents per dozen in many of our most populous cities, it is small wonder that the purveyors of Easter ammunition are greatly concerned regarding the various projects for increasing the egg production of American hens. Much has been accomplished in this direction by the introduction of scientific breeding methods somewhat similar in scope to the methods followed in breeding horses and dogs. Only with chickens the qualifications of pedigree necessary to win places in the breeding pens include records of having laid at least 160 eggs per year.

The source of supply for America's Easter eggs is no longer restricted to those farming communities where the poultry and egg business is in effect a "side line" and supplementary to grain growing or some other agricultural activity. A tremendous aggregate of eggs is obtained through such channels—often through the enterprise of the women folk of the farms, who are allowed the "butter and egg money" as a personal income—but heavy dependency is now placed upon the great poultry farms which specialize in this particular sphere.

To convey a more vivid idea of the magnitude of these fountain heads of the annual flood of Easter eggs it may be noted that one of the largest American poultry farms is 82 acres in extent and the buildings and poultry yards cover more than 35 acres. This metropolis of the feathered aristocrats is lighted by electricity and heated by steam. The farm has its own water system, with a complete system of piping leading to all parts of the institution and in one of the buildings is a huge food cooker, with a capacity of 1,000 gallons. In the laying department of this particular farm are more than 2,000 hens and this tremendous flock contributes from 1,000 to 1,200 eggs daily. For gathering these eggs promptly a novel system has been perfected and as the eggs are collected the date is stamped upon each one. Each individual egg is neatly wrapped in tissue paper ere it is dispatched to market.

Although no recent accurate statistics are obtainable covering the entire country, it is known that the consumption of eggs by the people of the United States, even under normal conditions, is such as to astound persons who have never had occasion to become familiar with the magnitude of this food industry. New York City alone receives about 30 carloads of eggs every working day in the year and other cities have proportionate appetites.

Of course the current production of eggs is nowhere near sufficient to meet the demand at the Easter season. Great quantities of eggs are taken from cold storage for the Easter trade and, incidentally, it may be mentioned that the cold storage system has become one of the most important adjuncts of the poultry industry.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brookfield, Mo.—"Two years ago I was unable to do any kind of work and only weighed 118 pounds. My trouble dates back to the time that women may expect nature to bring on them the Change of Life. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made me feel much better, and I have continued its use. I am very grateful to you for the good health I am now enjoying."—Mrs. SARAH LOUSIGNONT, 414 S. Livingston Street, Brookfield, Mo.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

For Lame Back

This liniment takes the place of massage and is better than sticky plasters. It penetrates — without rubbing — through the skin and muscular tissue right to the bone, quickens the blood, relieves congestion, and gives permanent as well as temporary relief.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. JAMES C. LEE, of 1100 9th St., S.E., Washington, D.C., writes: "Thirty years ago I fell from a scaffold and seriously injured my back. I suffered terribly at times; from the small of my back all around my stomach was just as if I had been beaten with a club. I used every plaster I could get with no relief. Sloan's Liniment took the pain right out, and I can now do as much ladder work as any man in the shop, thanks to

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. J. P. EVANS, of Mt. Airy, Ga., says: "After being afflicted for three years with rheumatism, I used Sloan's Liniment, and was cured sound and well, and am glad to say I haven't been troubled with rheumatism since. My leg was badly swollen from my hip to my knee. One-half a bottle took the pain and swelling out."

Sloan's Liniment has no equal as a remedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia or any pain or stiffness in the muscles or joints. Prices, 25c., 50c. and $1.00

He Whom Diogenes Sought

By BELLE MANIATES

(Copyright, 1909 by Associated Literary Press.)

It was fully expected that the verdict would be "Not Guilty." Not that the evidence demanded such verdict, but the case had resolved purely and simply into a political affair, and the jurymen were all of the party in power. The defendant was Walter Ledeen, a popular young politician, clubman and society man. His air of confidence waned as the jury continued to remain out. When night came with no returns, he grew nervous. By morning he was white-faced and his finger nails were gnawed to the skin.

At last the foreman announced that there was no possibility of an agreement. The last, and in fact all of the ballots, had stood eleven to one for acquittal. When it was divulged that Jerry Winters was the one who had stood out, amazement and indignation ran high among Walter's clique. Jerry was an associate of the defendant, and, moreover, was said to be engaged to the defendant's sister, Edith.

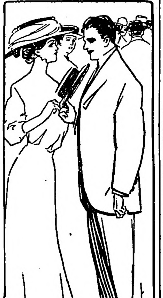
To all remonstrances, inquiries and demands, Jerry had one answer: "The evidence showed that he was guilty. I did my duty."

It was clearly borne in upon the obdurate young juryman that any political aspirations he might have entertained were doomed. It was to be expected that Walter would consider him an enemy, but all Riverton watched with much curiosity to see what Edith would do. Jerry proceeded immediately to justify himself.

"I couldn't do otherwise, Edith," he said, manfully. "I strained every point I could. I tried my best to find a flaw in the evidence. There was none. I could not perjure myself."

"Jerry Winters", flashed the girl, "it was my brother you wanted to convict!"

"Don't, Edith!" he pleaded with a harassed look. "I tried my best to forget that fact. I had to give an unbiased opinion."



"I AM GOING WITH YOU JERRY"

"Jerry!" she exclaimed, wildly, "don't ever dare speak to me again. I hate you! We are not only strangers henceforth, but enemies."

"Edith," he said, sadly, "nothing could make me your enemy."

As time went on, Walter had a new trial and was acquitted. His vindictiveness toward Jerry, however, did not diminish, and he did his best to injure his former friend. Still there were men who respected Jerry for his action. But neither the animosity of Walter and his coterie, nor the approbation of law abiders mattered much to Jerry. All he wanted or cared for was Edith and Edith's love. But she cut him publicly and with disdainful demeanor.

One day in early autumn, when baseball enthusiasm waxed high, when crowds gathered and waited and stampeded in front of the places where the scores were shown, a crucial game was played at Riverton. The home team, the Stalwarts, were to play against the Lions. This was to be the game of games, for if the Stalwarts won it meant the pennant. All Riverton turned out to witness the game and shouted for the Stalwarts.

A gay young crowd was on the grand stand behind the plate. Among them were Walter and Edith. To their right, alone, was Jerry.

Edith looked, but she did not sneer. She found herself looking surreptitiously and longingly at the lean-faced, honest-eyed man who had squared his shoulders at society's disapprobation.

There seemed to be some delay in the starting of the game.

In a few minutes the manager for the Stalwarts approached Jerry, who had played two seasons ago with the Stalwarts and was considered expert authority in all matters pertaining to [illegible] After a short conference Jerry left the stand and went down to the ground.

"Oh, Jerry's going to umpire!" exclaimed some one sitting near Edith, whose interest in the game was now intensified.

"The manager of the Lions won't consent," said Walter, "to have an ex-member of the opposing team act as umpire."

But the manager of the Lions knew of Jerry's proficiency in the game. He had heard also of his stanchness in the Ledeen case. He took Jerry's measure at a glance and announced that he was perfectly satisfied with the choice.

It was a close game, and people were breathless in their intensity and crazy in their cheering. At last came an awful moment. It was the last inning, and to that point the game was a tie. Then came a play that called for a close decision. It was so close that the spectators, and even some of the players, could not determine whether or not the man was "out."

Jerry decided for the Lions. The Stalwarts were manly and abided stoically by the umpire's decision, but hisses, jeers and groans came from the bleachers and from that part of the grand stand where Walter and his friends sat.

Jerry's decision in the Ledeen trial had made him unpopular only with a certain class, but now he felt that every one was against him. He knew he was down and out for evermore in Riverton.

Angry groups were gathering here and there on the way out of the grounds.

"You'd better not go down the street just now, Winters," said the manager of one of the teams. "You know what crazy fools a baseball mob is made up of."

Jerry's jaw came forward and he said decisively that he would go now. He went.

There were mutterings as he passed out of the gate and walked down the street. He walked alone until he was a block from the grounds. Then some one stepped up behind him—a girl—a every fair, tremulous girl, who said, timidly and softly:

"Jerry!"

"Edith!"

"I am going with you, Jerry, if you will let me. I've shut my eyes and my heart all this time, and something has opened them. I don't know enough about baseball to judge professionally of your decision, but a baseball friend sat right behind me, and when every one was mad and yelling at you this man said: 'By ——! There is the man Diogenes was looking for! There's nothing so rare nowadays as an honest man!' I wanted to hug him, but I'll hug you instead, Jerry—if you will—if you will care."

He turned to her with a wonderful light in his eyes.

"Edith, you are all I do care for!"

REASONING POWER OF SPIDER

Remarkable Ability of Instincts Has Been Proved by Patient Scientific Research.

The instinct of the spider is always an interesting subject for study. Recently a naturalist placed a small spider in the center of a large spider's web some four feet above ground. The large spider soon rushed from its hiding place under a leaf to attack the intruder, which ran up one of the ascending lines by which the web was secured to the foliage.

The big insect gained rapidly upon the little one, but the fugitive was equal to the emergency, for when barely an inch ahead of the other it cut with one of its rear legs the line behind itself, thus securing its own escape, the ferocious pursuer falling to the ground.

The naturalist says: "It is not the habit of spiders to cut the slender thread below them when they are ascending to avoid some threatened danger unless there is a hole close at hand—and a hole that is known to be unoccupied." From this it would seem that the little creature's action was the result of some sort of reasoning.

The same naturalist says that spiders are cannibals, and they are naturally pugnacious. But they do not fight for the satisfaction of eating one another. "When two spiders fight there is generally a very good reason for the attack and the vigorous defense that follows.

"It is generally known that after a certain time spiders become incapable of spinning a web from lack of material. The glutinous excretion from which the slender threads are spun is limited, therefore spiders cannot keep on constructing new snares when the old ones are destroyed. But they can avail themselves of the web-producing powers of their younger neighbors, and this they do without scruple. As soon as a spider's web-constructing material has become exhausted and its last web destroyed, it sets out in search of another home, and unless it should chance to find one that is tenantless a battle usually ensues, which ends only with the retreat or death of the invader or defender."

POULTRY NOTES.

It is no so much in the breed as in the care and feed.

Damp houses are the greatest promoters of disease among fowls.

If you intend to raise chickens for meat, do not invest in the egg breeds.

More fowls die from bad ventilation and over-crowding than any other cause.

If you intend to build a new poultry house set it facing the south and leave the front open.

The natural grain feed of fowls is hard and they should be fed hard grain when in confinement.

Never kill a chicken just before it is to be prepared for the table. Twelve hours, at least, should elapse.

Fowls that are to be marketed early should now be fed all they will eat of fat producing foods with a liberal supply of charcoal.

Leghorns are the most desirable fowl for heavy egg production. You can no more combine eggs and meat than you can butter and beef.

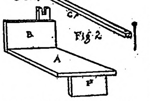
If you decide to raise broilers for early market make that a study, work for early hatches, then force the chicks along so as to be ready for market.

It goes without saying that turkeys will not flourish in confinement of any sort. No one should undertake to grow them unless he has ample range for them, because they must have entire liberty or they will not make progress.

IMPROVED HEN NESTING BOX

Chicken Must Enter by Walking In on Platform, Her Weight Causing Door to Close.

In building a trap nest the size should vary according to the breed. For the Asiatic breeds it should be not less than 3½ feet long, 15 inches wide and 20 inches deep. The hen must enter nest by walking in on platform. Her weight causes the platform to tilt, which by means of the lever attached, closes door, writes Fred L. Bailey in Missouri Valley Farmer.



Lever and Platform Attached.

When the hen leaves nest she goes for the light which comes in at the slat door. Her weight on front end of platform causes door to open, and the door stays open till she finds food and water and is ready to go back on the nest. The box has no floor, so nest can be made directly on ground.

Explanation: A, platform 1½ feet long by which hen enters nest. B, board across back end of platform which she puts full weight on when entering nest, causing platform to tilt. C, lever attached to platform and door, showing door open. D, point where lever is attached to door. E, point where lever is attached to platform. Ideal Turkey Ranges.

Meadows, pastures, and, after harvest, grain fields are ideal ranges for turkeys. They are busy foragers and the insects they find give them the meat feed that is necessary to their best development. If the owner will attend to giving them a moderate grain feed every day he will find that his care and the cost of the feed will be returned many fold when it comes time to put the birds on the market.

Capacity of Hens.

It should be the aim of every farmer to find out the capacity of his hens and make them produce to their fullest capacity. It has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that hens can be made to yield a net profit of at [illegible]

Fighting Disease in Greece.

Consul General George Horton has made a report from Athens on the conspicuous work of Greek physicians in combating the country's chief scourges—malarial fever and tuberculosis. An annual average of 2,000 persons die each year from the former, while in epidemic years, due to excessive rains, the number exceeds 6,000, which was the case in 1905. The population of Greece is 2,433,806. The people have been interested through lectures, pamphlets, etc., to fight the malaria-carrying mosquito by draining stagnant ponds and throwing petroleum on them. A tuberculosis congress will be held at Athens next year, to which will be invited not only physicians, but all the mayors and other prominent people of Greece.

DRY SHAMPOO BETTER THAN SOAP AND WATER.

(From the New York Graphic)

"Once in two or three months is as often as it is advisable to wash the hair with soap and water," says Claribel Montague, the beauty expert. "The rubbing, drying and rinsing, together with the action of the alkali in the soap—especially the alkali—tend to make the hair coarse, hard and brittle. Too much moisture causes the hair to become thin and lose its color.

"A simple and satisfactory dry shampoo is made by mixing four ounces of powdered orris root with four ounces of therox. Sprinkle a tablespoonful of this mixture on the head and brush thoroughly through the hair once or twice a week. That is all there is to it. This treatment not only keeps the hair light, fluffy and lustrous, but therox produces the growth of new hair."

Easily Explained.

"Strange," murmured the editor, "that this anecdote of George Washington has never been in print before."

"Not at all," explained the occasional contributor. "I only thought of it last night."

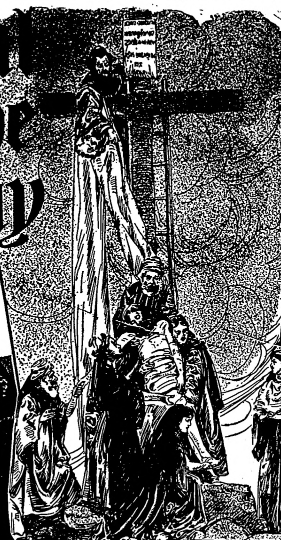
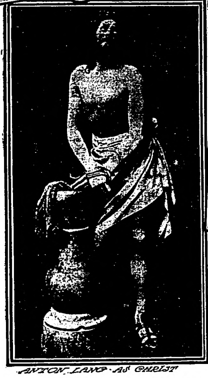
The Central Figure of the Passion Play

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD Photographs N.Y.

THE BETRAYAL OF JUDAS ISCARIOT



JESUS TAKING LEAVE OF HIS MOTHER



ANTON LANG AS CHRIST

JESUS PRAYING IN THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE

SINCE December of last year the inhabitants of the little village of Oberammergau have given most of their time to earnest rehearsal of the Passion play. Once in every ten years the villagers enact the greatest drama in the world, in performance of a solemn vow made by their ancestors 300 years ago. Some poor fellow had brought the plague to the vallage and the villagers in fear betook themselves to their church and vowed that if the plague should pass from their midst they would devote themselves to a representation of the Passion. Only once has the tenth year passed unhonored; that was in 1870, when the Franco-Prussian war drew away the male players, but the play was only delayed till the next year.

The play begins in May and runs till the end of September. The performance commences at 8:00 a. m. and lasts till 8:00 p. m., with an interval of two hours, and the weather is not allowed to interfere in any way. It makes no difference as to the costumes getting wet, as there are two complete sets for each player.

The Passion play sets forth the life, death and resurrection of Christ. There are 17 acts and each of the acts is preceded by a tableau, illustrative of an Old Testament incident, and pointing prophetically to the events of the act. The 17 acts are divided into three parts. The first, from the entrance of Christ into Jerusalem until the hour of his being taken prisoner on the Mount of Olives; the second, from then to his condemnation by Pilate; and the third, from the condemnation until the glorious resurrection of the Lord; the whole ending with a tableau showing the ascension.

Acted, as it is, on a huge stage, with the background of the mountains, with the climax at the mysterious time of evenfall, perhaps with the thunder and lightning of nature in the crucifixion scene, it is more than the art of the stage; it is the convincing expression of a great and simple faith.

There are 700 persons in the play, of whom 270 are children. The speaking parts are given out by the officials of the community and there is no rivalry or jealousy shown. There has always been a Lang in the play, and this year Anton Lang will repeat his Christus of 1900. It is the highest ambition of the Oberammergau youth. The honor of enacting the Saviour is more than anything you can offer him, and next to that the part of one of the disciples. So with the unmarried maidens, the highest aspiration is to be found worthy to be chosen for Mary, the mother of Jesus, or Mary Magdalene.

They are no skilled actors. Their art is nature's own. They are humble woodcarvers, smiths, artisans. Anton Lang is a potter, is 34 years of age, is tall and lithe, and speaks English fluently. He was chosen for the part because of the extraordinary resemblance he bears to the accepted idea of Christ as pictured by the old masters. One critic says of him: There has been no such typical and truly German embodiment of the Nazarene during the whole of the century as in Anton Lang. When he is hanging on the cross it is just as if the wonderful picture of the crucifixion by Overbeck at Stresa were before us."

Though he is the central figure of the play and is honored and almost revered by the whole community, he is in no way spoiled, and carries himself with a simplicity and humility which is characteristic. He is essentially a son of the people and this is only fitting the part he takes. He seeks to follow the example he has ever before him, and is quite untainted by the spirit of that commercialism which is creeping into the conduct of the village. While every scene in the play centers on Christus, the role is not long in comparison with other speaking parts. It is the spiritual tranquillity of Christus which pervades the whole play and is more potent than the spoken word in stirring the audience to a full realization of the teaching of the play.

Among the peoples of the earth, except those of Australasia, the Americans are the most liberal meat eaters.

The Weekly Easter

In all the church calendar, there is no more joyous day than Easter day, which commemorates the resurrection of our Lord and Saviour from the dead. And this is as it should be; for the resurrection of Christ is the most vital and fundamental fact of the life of Christ. Had he remained in the tomb, his birth would have been forgotten long ago, and Christmas greetings and joys would not exist. Had he remained under the power of death, his death on Calvary would have been considered nothing more than that of a mere man, like that of Socrates and others, who have given their lives in attempts to uplift mankind against the forces that make for evil and that destroy the good. But when he burst the bands of death asunder, he gave the crowning proof of his Deity, and added to Bethlehem and Calvary a significance and luster that will never grow dim. There is little wonder, therefore, that the Christian world has laid especial emphasis uopn the day upon which the Saviour arose.

If we take Easter Sabbath as an illustration of how we should observe every Sabbath of the year, it may be most profitable to us. Easter Sabbath is a day of worship. No other day in the year attracts so many people as Easter Sabbath. People who seldom ever darken the doors of a church are present in great multitudes on the Easter day. But God should be worshiped every Sabbath day. For this especially God set the Sabbath aside. And to worship him we must rest from worldly employments and pleasures. Easter Sabbath is a day of joy. Organs peal it forth, sublime music emphasizes it, sermons repeat the strain, and multitudes feel the joyous thrill that comes from the fact of Christ's resurrection. But every Sabbath day should be observed in joy. The Sabbath should not be looked upon as a dreary and tiresome day. Moreover, it will not be, if we will enter into the service and worship God as sincerely and heartily as we do on Easter day.—Rev. S. H. Doyle, D. D.

EASTER CEREMONIAL IN VENICE

TOURISTS have been rushing from all parts of Enrope to Venice in the last month to get there in time for the Easter celebration.

Those who plan to go to the beautiful city of canals and venerable architecture make special efforts to reach there at the the Eastertide, for the most romantic and picturesque celebration of the great spring holiday takes place in the city of the doges.

Easter in Venice is unlike Easter in any other city in the world, and once to have experienced the day there is never to forget it.

Easter, St. Mark's and the pigeons. This is the combination that makes the spring holiday specially interesting. At all seasons of the year the famous pigeons that stuff and stuff the food down their fatted crops till they can hardly waddle are a magnet to the crowd of sightseers, but especially do they make their appeal at Easter time, for they are genuine Easter birds.

Years and years ago they held the same relation to the Easter cuisine that eggs do in the new world, but that was before the populace came to the point of regarding them as something almost sacred. Now no one would think of putting a finger on their smooth plumage.

For more generations than anybody knows the admired pigeons have fluttered from point to point on the sacred architecture of St. Mark's. They have made their homes in nooks and crannies of the basilica; they have built comfortable nests at the feet of the famous bronze horses over the portico. In fact, there is hardly a place in the whole impressive pile that has escaped their keen little eyes and been turned into account, providing it promised to afford a hospice.

Venice loves these pigeons with a devotion that would be amusing to the outside world were it not honest.

And especially does it warm up to them at Easter titme, for it was then, according to the ancient tradition, that they first came to St. Mark's.

According to the ancient story, it was Palm Sunday that the great doge made a formal visit to the Piazza San Marco. With him came his entire brilliant suite of officials, including the foreign ambassadors residing in Venice.

The presence of this host of dignitaries, the blare of the silver trumpets that heralded their arrival and the magnificence of the procession deeply impressed the people, so that all who could be accommodated filled up the street and buildings.

The doge was so delighted by the welcome the populace accorded that he determined to show his bounty in a manner that should be remembered, so he had a large number of pigeons, each one weighted by having a piece of paper attached to its legs, released from the gallery of St. Mark's, over the portico where the bronze horses rear their gigantic bodies.

The crowd made a rush on the pigeons, eager to get the choice meal they afforded, and the unfortunate birds, hampered by the weights on the legs, were caught in large numbers and taken home to form the feature of many a succulent repast.

But not all were caught. Some of them escaped and sought refuge high up in the dome of the church, where none could come near them.

The fact that the birds found their hospice in the very dome of the tomb of St. Mark was not without its effect on this highly superstitious populace and they at once decided this to be a token from the good saint that his sheltering mantle was spread over the birds and that none of his true worshipers would do them harm.

Thus this early number of pigeons fluttering in fright to the top of the temple became the forerunners of the multitude that flies around the church to-day. Now they are sacred from the profane hand of man and as an extra tribute it is the habit at Eastertide, the anniver sary of their recognition by the saint, to give them extra food and attention.

It is for this reason that everybody who is in Venice on Easter Sunday provides an extra supply of food for the pigeons of St. Mark's. This does not mean that they lack in povender the remainder of the year. It simply means that the coming of the holiday brings an extra supply.

And the birds enjoy it. None can say that they fail to enter into the spirit of the holiday. They gorge and stuff until it is a marvel that the air is not filled with feathers from the exploding bodies of the birds.

It is not the first ceremonial of the day, this feeding of the pigeons. Not until the great morning service in St. Mark's has been held does the church permit the holiday fun to begin.

In the morning everybody goes to St. Mark's; that is, everybody who can get in, which is quite a distinction, for residents and visitors alike all think only of this one church on the most important Christian holiday.

In fact, the whole scene is a rioting panorama of flowers. As in every other city of the civilized world where the Christian religion is supreme, efforts have been concentrated to getting flowers into the city for the great day, but under these southern skies it is not a question of forcing hothouse plants—the natural growth in the open air supplies all that could be asked, and everybody, rich and poor, buys liberally of the luscious blooms.

In no other country in the world do the blooms attain such magnificence and it is not an uncommon sight to see a gondola literally laden with violets, which can be bought so cheaply here that for the price of an ordinary bouquet in an American city an armload can be purchased.

Against the perfect blue of the Venetian spring sky St. Mark's is outlined. The whole city is going there. The wealth and aristocracy of a city that was ancient when the new world was in swaddling clothes is making its way to worship, reclining against the black cushions of the gondola and lolling in the exquisite comfort that comes from this most lulling form of transportation. The perfume of flowers is in the air, the beauty of the dark-skinned, brown-eyed and black-eyed daughters of the city of Desdemona helps the picture richly. Everything is comfortable, romantic, inspiring.

The service is a wonderful display of rich raiment, of gorgeous processional, of richest music, of most brilliant coloring.

Easter hymns peal forth in most enchanting tones and the lover of the beautiful finds every sense cajoled.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the yearly tribute of food is paid to the pigeons and in some mysterious manner they seem to know the coming of the day that sees so much of honor done to them.

But it is at night, on Easter evening, that the full beauty of the Venetian life and Venetian charm is felt.

Every part of the city appears in a new guise; every palace, monument and church takes on a glory that is not to be described.

Gliding past the gondolas filled with holiday pleasure seekers, listening to the ripple of the waters under the bows of the boats, making calls on those living in the beautiful palaces fronting on the canals and reveling in the atmosphere of romance that seems to surround every detail of the life of this ancient city, is to get impressions not to be duplicated elsewhere—impressions that explain the eagerness of tourists to spend an Easter day in Venice.

EASTER

The term "Easter" is supposed to have been derived from Ostera, or Eastre, the goddess of spring, and the personification of the morning. The feast of this goddess was celebrated by the ancient Saxons in the spring of the year.

This ancient pagan festival was utilized by the early Christian fathers and by them turned into the Christian observance now known throughout Christendom as "Easter." There was a difference among the eastern and western churches as to the date of this observance, but in 325 A. D. the council of Nice declared that the Easter celebration should be held on the first Sunday following the full moon, on or after March 21. If the full moon should happen on the Sabbath, then Easter should fall on the following Sabbath.

The Christian Easter commemorates the most vital fact in Christianity. In these days it has been made an occasion for the display of flowers and millinery, but underlying all else is the basal fact that Easter commemorates the resurrection of Christianity's founder.

Christianity, as a divine revelation, stands or falls with the establishment or overthrow of this fact. If the resurrection of the prophet of Galilee was not an actual and accomplished fact, then his claims to the spiritual leadership of mankind are spurious. He based the success of his mission on the fact of his resurrection. If he did not rise from the grave, he was a blasphemer or an ignorant fanatic. If he did rise, as he predicted he would, then the seal of divine truth was upon all he taught and all he wrought.

There are many who cannot believe in the miracle of the resurrection. For them the Easter celebration is all foolishness. But multitudes believe with unfaltering faith in this triumph of the God-man over death and the grave.

To them Easter is a day of cheer, hope and joy. The basal fact of Christianity gives foundation and force to their faith and their hope. More joy bells will peal forth their notes of victory to-day, more glorious anthems and oratories will break forth from human hearts and voices, more human tongues will speak and sing the praises of humanity's Christ than at any time since the angels said to the affrighted women at the gateway of the tomb: "He is not here, he is risen, as he said; come, see the place where they laid him."

The Christian faith is too deeply rooted in the heart of humanity ever to die away and the annual Easter celebrations serve to strengthen that faith.

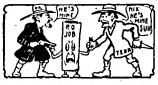
States in a War Over a Postmaster



WASHINGTON.—It's hard enough to have constituents in any event, but it's much harder to have 'em for next door neighbors.

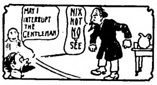
Representative Slemp is the only Republican member of the house from Virginia. This, is of course, a Republican administration. So when anybody in Virginia wants anything he comes to Slemp.

Just now Slemp is facing a problem in little. The town of Bristol is split up between Virginia and Tennessee. Representative Brownlow of Tennessee, like Slemp, is the lone Republican from his state. White House influence is divided. For 40 years a Tennesseean has been postmaster of Bristol. Brownlow wants a Tennesseean to be postmaster. But the president has appointed a Virginian to the place.

Four years ago the late Representative Campbell Slemp, father and predecessor of the present representative from the Ninth Virginia district, and Representative Brownlow, who comes from the Tennessee part of Bristol, agreed, so the Virginians say, that if Eli Warren, a Tennesseean, were made postmaster a Virginian should be named as assistant. The Slemps put forward no candidate for the place and Warren got the appointment on Brownlow's indorsement.

At this stage the president enters. As soon as the younger Slemp got his congressional seat he acquainted Mr. Taft with the situation and told him that it was about time that Virginia was given some recognition in the patronage in this divided town. The president thereupon sent to the senate the nomination of a man named Goodell. Brownlow's protests against the Virginia appointment were vigorous, and Goodell's name has been held up.

Question of Ethics Raised in House



MAY I INTERRUPT THE GENTLEMAN
NIX NOT NO SEE

MR. SHERLEY was making a speech in the house several days ago when Representative Clayton arose and asked: "May I interrupt the gentleman?"

Mr. Sherley—Certainly.

Mr. Clayton—To say that the gentleman from Georgia was unavoidably taken away and is not present.

Mr. Sherley—I thought the gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. Clayton—I wanted to ask the gentleman—

Mr. Sherley—I would rather go on with my remarks but just ask the question.

Mr. Clayton—That is to say, does the gentleman think that any man who in failing circumstances goes to a man who has money, within four months of his failure, and says to him: "I am about to fail; I am in an embarrassed position; let me have a thousand dollars and I will prefer you." Do you think any sane man will let him have that thousand dollars?

Mr. Sherley—I will say, if you will read the law, you will find the express provision that he can get a thousand dollars and give security for it, and there is not the slightest reason why a man should not lend it if he wants to.

Mr. Clayton—That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. Sherley—That is my answer; I am not going to answer it as the gentleman wants, but I have answered it according to the law.

Mr. Clayton—If the gentleman will not be so much in earnest and a little more dispassionate—

Mr. Sherley—Permit me to make my speech. After I make it you may make such criticism of my manner as you choose. I insist upon consuming my own time.

Mr. Clayton—May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. Sherley—The gentleman can not.

Mr. Clayton—I am very sorry that the gentleman's argument is so vulnerable that he cannot submit to an interruption.

Question: Was the expressed regret justified or genuine?

How Congressman's Secretary Got Help

FOR EVERY 1000 YOU GET A KISS SEED

SECRETARY HORN of the staff of Representative Gaines, is a Foxy Quiller. The other day he sent out invitations to a number of other secretaries for a lunch in his office of a certain night.

"Fine," said the surprised secretaries."

"I'll have a pretty girl for each of you," said Horn.

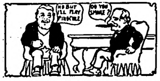
"Finer," said the secretaries.

He had the lunch and the girls. He had spent nearly six dollars, though some of the secretaries said afterwards that they had an idea that the girls had brought the lunch. It is not of record whether the lunch was eaten before or after Horn unfolded his little scheme.

In any event, before each secretary and each girl had left, they had addressed about a thousand envelopes apiece. You see, it's seed time here; all the congressmen are sending Secretary Wilson's seeds to their constituents.

Horn saw a monumental task before himself. Hence the pretty-girl-tempting-lunch invitation. Now a number of pretty girls and secretaries are wondering who got the best of it. The party idea in this connection has taken root, too. One secretary has a scheme to have a stag affair in his office. He will have cigars and pop.

Senator Burton and the Tobacco Habit



NO BUT I'LL PLAY PINOCHLE
DO YOU SMOKE?

THE senate committee on commerce, of which Burton of Ohio is a member, was just about to begin its afternoon session. Senator Frye of Maine, chairman of the committee, sat at the head of the long table. Burton sat midway toward the end from Frye. Presently Burton pulled a cigar from his vest pocket. He lit it, rose and stalked up the room toward Frye. Frye looked at him quizzically.

"Well, Burton," said the Maine senator, "I'm glad to see you have one vice."

Burton held his cigar between his thump and forefinger like a boy learning to smoke.

"Ah, senator," he said, "I have many vices; I have many."

Frye only grinned a little at that. Burton came closer to him.

"You smoke, do you not, senator?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, I smoke."

Spectators thought Burton was about to produce for the gentleman from Maine, but maybe he didn't have another cigar. Anyway, Frye got an answer to that old question: "Is this an interrogation or an invitation?"

"I smoke about six cigars a day," Frye said then.

"I smoke about that many," the Ohio statesman commented.

"I don't smoke at all," chimed in Senator Nelson, who is chairman of the Ballinger-Pinchot committee.

"No," said Frye, "but you chew enough to make up for it."

"I don't either," he said.

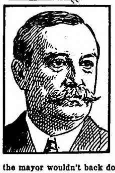
He fished a chunk of plug from his pocket. It was about as big as your thumb.

"A piece like that 'll last me a week."

Then he shifted the lump in his left cheek to his right. If a "piece like that" lasts the senator a day he must take one chew and keep it the whole day through.

In the Limelight

MAYOR OF PHILADELPHIA



They have been having some pretty hot times over in Philadelphia. Street-car strikes always are marked by violence and pistols, stones, policemen's clubs and, not infrequently, a stick of dynamite or two, play an important part in a day's happenings.

Philadelphia has had all of these, just as did St. Louis and Chicago when the car men went out in those cities.

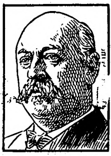
But to get down to the subject. It is of Mayor John Edgar Reyburn, former school teacher, lawyer, state senator, presidential elector and member of congress, we intend to write.

When the strike started politicians went to the mayor and told him the stand he had taken, that of supporting the transit company and siding against the employes, meant political suicide, but the mayor wouldn't back down. It is not our place to say whether the mayor was right or wrong in the stand he took, but it is certain that few men would have the courage to face public opinion as did Mr. Reyburn.

The mayor said he did not consider the demands of the car men fair and he refused to concur in the general opinion prevailing in Philadelphia, that the differences ought to be arbitrated.

Then came the riots. Cars were wrecked and innocent persons killed. Still the mayor stood to his guns and lent his influence to the side of capital. State Senator John P. Nichol joined the other leaders in an effort to influence Mayor Reyburn to change his attitude, but without avail.

NEW SENATOR CALLED "DOC"



William E. Purcell, Democrat, is now the junior senator from the State of North Dakota. The governor of Senator Purcell's state is a Democrat, and, pending the convening of the legislature it fell to his lot to name a senator. He gave his preference to Fountain L. Thompson of Cando. [illegible] man of Illinois birth and education, who [illegible] o the Dakotas a good many years ago. [illegible] ator Thompson had been in Washington [illegible] short time when his health failed to such [illegible] tent that he was compelled to resign his senatorial office and then Gov. Burke named Mr. Purcell.

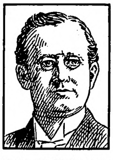
The new North Dakota senator was born and reared in the east country. When he went west he was very much of a tenderfoot. He landed in Dakota as a full-fledged lawyer, but it took the residents of the little town in which he alighted 48 hours to learn the fact. For two full days they had held to the belief that the newcomer was a doctor of medicine, and although they were undeceived the title of doctor has clung to him from that day to this. It has been abbreviated to plain "Doc," however.

While Mr. Purcell was on his way to his Dakota home a passenger on the train became seriously ill and an attempt was made to find a physician. When the man who is now senator found that there was no doctor on the train he turned to do what he could for the patient and in order that the sick man might not lose his nerve through lack of confidence Mr. Purcell did not disclose the fact that he was not a physician.

He used some practical means to make the patient comfortable and did everything in true hospital style. The man was taken off the train at the town in which Mr. Purcell had elected to live. From the time that he offered his services to the suffering man he has been called "Doc."

The Democratic senator from North Dakota comes from the town of Wahpeton, in which lives his Republican colleague, Senator McCumber. The two men have been political rivals for years, but also they have been firm personal friends.

COULDN'T BLUFF U. S. ENVOY



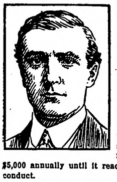
The United States has a minister in Colombia who is equal to an emergency. His name is Elliott Northcott. Mr. Northcott hails from the state of West Virginia and is a friend of Stephen B. Elkins.

Down in Bogota, the capital of Colombia, the street railway system is operated by an American company. The citizen of the United States who manages the affairs of the street-car company got into an altercation with a policeman, just like a citizen might do in this country. This altercation led to a riot.

The Colombians are a hot-headed people and after they had wrecked a few street cars and stopped the traffic they thought it would be the proper thing to stone the United States legation.

They surrounded the place and threw their stones. Mr. Northcott wasn't the kind of man to stand anything of that sort. He promptly told the leaders of the mob and the authorities of Bogota that he would have part of Uncle Sam's army down in that part of the country in a jiffy if they tried anything more of that kind. Colombians have had occasion to look upon Uncle Sam's soldiers and they didn't relish the idea. They decided to let the American legation alone.

SALARY FOR BEING HUSBAND



How would you like to be a husband at $50,000 a year?

If reports are true, that is the part the Viscount Maidstone is going to play. Nor is he to get the full amount the first year.

Sometime in June the viscount is coming over to this country to wed Miss Margaretta Armstrong Drexel of Philadelphia. He is going to be placed on his good behavior by his papa-in-law, who reads the newspapers and knows something of what happened to Anna Gould when she became the Countess Castellane and to Alice Thaw when she became the Countess of Yarmouth.

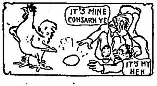
So Papa Drexel has decided that it is well to be wary. He has devised an ingenious marriage settlement by which he will allow the viscount $10,000 the first year and will increase the amount $5,000 annually until it reaches $50,000—all conditional on the bridegroom's conduct.

The viscount is 25 years old, a keen sportsman, one of the most popular men in English society and the eldest son of the earl of Winchelsea. He has a few thousand pounds sterling himself and can afford to accept Papa Drexel's proposal, so 'tis said.

English genealogists are now saying that if the Anglo-American alliances keep up at the present pace future students of genealogical trees will have to trace the lines of the British aristocracy back into the antiquity of the United States. Isn't that too bad?

Happenings in the Cities

Egg Mystery Has Led to 20 Fights



NEW YORK.—That deep mystery, "Fowl Business; or Whose Hen Laid the Egg?" hasn't been solved yet in the Flatbush court. Two leading residents of Canarsie appeared to press charges of assault against each other a few days ago and Canarsie is all torn up over the case.

The litigants were accompanied to court by all their friends, families or neighbors, for such problems as the possibility of war with Japan, the price of clams or the high cost of living have faded into insignificance beside this egg affair. Only the hen can settle it and she won't tell.

When court opened a small man bubbling over with excitement jumped to his feet at the sound of his name, William Gemar. He rushed up to the judicial bar and before Court Officer Dalton could stop him he exploded with:

"You know how this here trouble started, judge?" Well, a week ago my hen, Matilda, laid an egg—at least, I will swear to my dying day that it was our hen that laid it. My daughter picked up the egg and started carefully for the house. On the way she was met by our next door neighbor, Mrs. Mary Penninger, who upset the child in her attempt to seize the egg.

"Now, it appears that she wants the egg, and so do we. We are fighting for the principle involved, and so is she, she says. But the egg—there's the trouble, judge. Then, on Monday we are haled to court to prove we own the egg.

"Naturally, we resent their denial, which almost says we are lying. Last night I opened a window which commands a view of the Penninger hennery. As I did so Penninger pointed a finger at me and exclaimed to Joseph Taylor, who was with him:

"That was too much, your honor, so I fought them both in turn. Look at Penninger! I guess I beat him to it, hey, judge? And he hit me first, at that.

"Here's another point, judge," added Gemar. "I have possession of the egg pending your official determination of its ownership. Should you decide that that man Penninger owns it I propose to charge him storage on it for every day I have kept it.

"Think of it, your honor! One egg has been the cause of 16 fights between our children, four between Penninger and his wife and me and my wife and several domestic tiffs, to say nothing of our pugilistic encounter last night!"

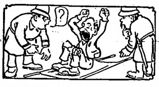
Big Wart Hoodoos a Champion Sleeper



CHICAGO.—James White, a long distance sleeper, was carried out of the Vestibule lodging house, 99 Van Buren street, on a stretcher to-day as a "corpse," but as he was about to be taken to the morgue he rolled off and was awakened.

"I ain't dead," he yelled, stretching himself, yawning and rubbing his eyes in wonderment.

"What the—" began Policeman Kelly, as he let his end of the stretcher fall.

"Who tickled me?" demanded the indignant sleeper.

The "corpse" moved away.

"That fellow ain't dead," he complained to the clerk.

"Sure he is," insisted the clerk. "Two porters punched him with the 'feeling stick' and he didn't wake up."

Outside, the tramp was being held a prisoner. The clerk and Patrolman Gabel came out to look him over again.

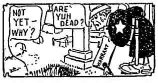
"You see, I ain't had no luck since the wart came. Guess it will be my death yet."

"Why don't you have it removed?"

"Removed, eh? And how? I've tried everything. I've tried to get ahead, but I either get hurt, get 'pinched' as a suspect, arrested for being drunk, or lose my job. And—

"Move on," broke in Patrolman Gabel. The sleeper moved.

Dragged Out of a Grave to Jail Cell



NOT YET—WHY?
ARE YUH DEAD?
WARRANT

NEW YORK.—To be taken out of a grave on a warrant on a charge of threatening to kill his wife and family was the unusual experience of Albert Smith of Long Island City.

But the grave was not his own.

Smith, who was employed in Calvary cemetery, was simply engaged in digging it when Patrolmen Quinn and Kline went hunting him.

"Hey, Smith!" shouted Quinn, leaning over the edge of the grave, "are you down there?"

"Ay, bane," said Smith, who is an Anglicised son of Sweden.

"Comin' out soon?" inquired the policeman.

"Naw! Ay bane tank Ay stay hyar. It bane nice an' quiet an' charful place."

"Come on up," said Quinn, coaxingly. "I've got something for you."

"You bane kape what you got. Ay no' want any present."

Quinn, who was in plain clothes, stepped aside and gave Kline, who was in uniform, an opportunity to try his authority.

"Come up out of that," said Klein, "or I'll go down and get you."

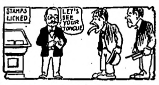
Smith came up at last, and was then taken before Magistrate Gilroy, in the Long Island City police court, where he was held for examination.

Has Job for an Expert Stamp Licker



MILWAUKEE, Wis.—If you are in search of employment in a Milwaukee drug store you must be a stamp licker. The unofficial word has gone forth among owners of drug stores that lickless individuals in search of work are to be turned down cold.

That the ability to lick stamps is one of the prime requisites of a nifty drug clerk is just becoming known. Time was when Milwaukeeans licked their own stamps, stuck them on their packages or letters, and that was all there was to it. No more; the clerk must lick the stamp that he sells.

Ordinarily the new wrinkle of stamp licking is not noticed, but at such times as Christmas and New Year, when the tongues of the overworked clerks become weary from overmuch contact with glue, a wail goes up and the new order comes under the public's observation.

However, there have been drug clerks within the last few days who positively refused to lick any more stamps, says the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin. Their refusal is made on the ground that if they should overdo the operation it would seriously interfere with their speech.

"It's simply awful," declared one clerk in discussing the situation. "A woman comes in here and buys a bunch of stamps. She has her letters in her hands. Sometimes there are 14 or 15. You give her the stamps. Then she counts them out, a stamp to a letter, and politely hands them back to you with the demand, "lick 'em, please"—and you have to do it to hold your job.

Meanwhile the licking demand is made and stamps are being assiduously licked.

PROPHETS WITHOUT HONOR.

In this age of skepticism, when natives of the state of Missouri seem to be surprisingly numerous and the principle of "seeing is believing" has been carried to extremes, the professional prophets who issue almanacs of prognostication have enjoyed a peculiar immunity. Every year the credulous and superstitious hasten to buy their publications and to marvel at the wide range of predictions which they comprise. While the circulation of these almanacs is more extensive in Great Britain than in this country, it is not gratifying to our national pride to learn that 100,000 copies are prepared annually for American consumption. But even at this late day some of the dupes are "getting wise" and beginning to check up the prophets, comparing promise with performance, says Pittsburg Gazette-Times. Zadtel, Old Moore and other of the prognosticators who make their headquarters in London have been subject to this process, and the result should not be without its effect on the circulation of their next year's almanacs. The only time the professional prophets made a hit is after the event. The number of inspired persons who predicted the San Francisco earthquake is beyond computation, but one and all neglected to warn the threatened city until it was too late. If people are going to be so mean as to check up old predictions and see whether they came to pass, it won't be long until the prophet is with out honor not only in his own country, but everywhere else.

The peril which attends travel through some of the Alpine passes is indicated by a tragedy which involved the death of six men who were on their way to Italy from Switzerland. They were smugglers, and their course lay through the Forcola Pass. One of the party gave a shout of farewell to those whom he had left, and this brought down a vast body of snow poised above. The six men were buried by the avalanche, forming a mass 65 feet deep, and there is no hope of recovering the remains until the snow melts in the spring. The poet knew the possibilities when he uttered the warning "Beware the awful avalanche." A snowslide that can be dislodged by a human voice is a terror to avoid if possible.

The weight in pounds of a gnat is .0000006. Its wing area in square feet is .0003, which gives the monster .0204 pounds to the square foot. The scientist who has enlightened the waiting world with this interesting fact does not state the creature's "pounds per horse power." Next time you get one in the eye you may figure it for yourself. It would be interesting to have scientific data as to the mosquito's suction pump; and we think it is generally known that by far the most powerful and terrible of all the wild beasts of the field, in proportion to its size, is the saltatory flea.

The British lords will have to come down from their high perch, the New York policemen have been forbidden to club citizens at pleasure, and now a janitor in that same city has been sent to prison for playfully tapping an inquisitive tenant on the head with a monkey-wrench. It begins to look as though an air of freedom for the down-trodden and oppressed actually were beginning.

A chauffeur in New York who killed a child by his speeding automobile and then raced from the spot is to be tried for murder in the first degree. The endangering of life by the speed mania is so deliberately taken a risk that the law under which murder in such cases is charged seems eminently just. There has been far too much leniency with this species of public danger.

Wisconsin has a university professor and a medical scientist who is not afraid to champion the claims of human nature and heart interests against abstract science. He said recently in a lecture that kissing is risky, but it's a poor sort of fellow who won't take chances at it.

A New York man 85 years of age has refused to enter a home for old people because his mother-in-law, aged 115, is an inmate of the institution. We declare without fear of successful contradiction that this is carrying prejudice against the mother-in-law too far.

A rich man in Boston was arrested for slapping a young girl in the face. The intellectual center of the nation needs some mixture of chivalry with its culture.

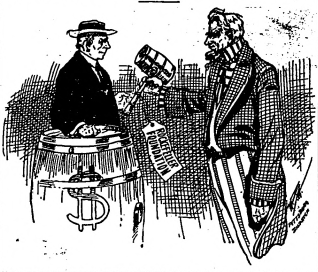
UNCLE SAM: "OPEN THE BARREL, MR. ROCKEFELLER."



GUARD ROOSEVELT AT CAIRO

AUTHORITIES TAKE PRECAUTIONS TO PROTECT EX-PRESIDENT.

Egyptian Capital in Gala Garb for the Visit of Distinguished Americans.

Cairo, Egypt.—Owing to this city being the hotbed of the Egyptian national movement, fears for the safety of Col. Theodore Roosevelt on the part of the British government were demonstrated by the fact that from the moment his train arrived here Thursday until the khedive's carriage had deposited him at the doors of Shepard's hotel, he was guarded by groups of policemen.

Col. Roosevelt's speeches at Khartum and Assouan, in which he pleaded for native co-operation with the British authorities, has aroused the resentment of the Nationalists and in view of their recent assassination of Boutros Pasha, the premier, the government decided that every precaution should be taken to guard the ex-president.

The colonel, himself, laughed at the idea of danger and requested that no special police guard be furnished, but the authorities would not listen to him and scores of policemen mingled with the crowd at the station and stayed close by the colonel all the time. Mr. Roosevelt walked through a double line of Egyptian police from the car to the khedive's carriage. Cairo gave a cordial greeting to the ex-president.

Nearly all the foreign residents assisted in the welcome. American Ambassador Straus and wife arrived from Constantinople to pay their respects, and were among the first to greet the party. Maj. Stack presented the regrets of the sirdar, Gen. Wingate, saying he was unable to be present.

Mrs. Roosevelt was presented with a huge bouquet of violets as she alighted from the train, and Miss Ethel with a smaller bouquet.

So many official carriages were in the procession that the drive to the hotel resembled a cavalcade.

Another big crowd was gathered at the hotel, from the staff of which the American flag floated. They cheered the colonel as he made his way up the steps, and the latter responded by waving his hat in his characteristic informal way.

LABOR MEN OPPOSE SMITH

Ohio Federation and Railroaders Send Protest Against His Appointment to Federal Bench.

Cleveland, O. — The Ohio Federation of Labor, representing 200,000 union men throughout the state, sent a strong protest to President Taft against the proposed appointment of Alexander L. Smith of Toledo as federation judge for the northern district of Ohio. The protest is made on the ground that Mr. Smith is a corporation lawyer and follows a similar communication forwarded to Washington by the organized railroad men of the state.

State-Wide Strike Off.

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—It was decided at the meeting of the executive council of the State Federation of Labor Wednesday not to call a state-wide strike in Pennsylvania in sympathy with the striking street car men of Philadelphia. This action was due to the fact that the textile and other workers of Philadelphia called off their sympathy strike and also to the fact that the votes taken by many unions throughout the state showed that a majority of the men are opposed to a general strike.

Iowa Wreck Dead Now 49.

Marshalltown, Ia.—Two victims of the wreck of the Rock Island Twin City express died in Marshalltown hospitals Wednesday, increasing the list of fatalities to 49.

Dingy Print Brings $900.

Cashier Gone, Theft Charged.

Seattle, Wash.—Arthur Watkins, cashier in the office of a local realty company, has disappeared, and his employer alleges Watkins is short $20,000 in his accounts.

PINCHOT TO MEET ROOSEVELT

Former Forester Slips Away to Europe and News Causes a Sensation in Washington.

Washington.—Theodore Roosevelt has cabled Gifford Pinchot to meet him in Europe, and the fact that Mr. Pinchot sailed last Friday on a Hamburg-American liner, ostensibly for Copenhagen, Denmark, has set all Washington agog. This is the first move made by the former president with respect to things political in the United States since his return to civilization from the African wilderness. Incidentally no one is more concerned over the news than are the close friends of the Taft administration.

According to the understanding of the situation here Tuesday, Mr. Roosevelt upon his arrival in Khartum received such a mass of conflicting mail and so many contrary reports from American tourists with whom he talked that he decided the best way to get at the situation would be to talk it over with a tried and true friend.

Consequently Mr. Pinchot received a cablegram from the former president, it is asserted on excellent authority, and, having finished his testimony before the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation committee, he slipped away to Europe last Friday, leaving word that to rest after the strain he had undergone he was about to visit his sister, Lady Alan Johnston, wife of the British ambassador to Denmark.

600,000 ARE KILLED YEARLY

Senator Owen Advocates Department of Health to Halt Great Destruction of Life.

Washington.—"Six hundred thousand lives are sacrificed annually on the altar of this country's ignorance and neglect of sanitary and health laws," asserted Senator Owen in the course of a speech in the senate in support of his bill creating a department of health with a cabinet officer at its head.

Mr. Owen's address was based on the theory that the various health agencies of the government should be consolidated. He said that while President Taft had not committed himself absolutely on the subject, he was confident he was in sympathy with the movement.

Report Rate Bill Out.

Washington.—The administration railroad bill was reported out from the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce and takes precedence of all Taft measures for consideration in the house. How it is to be handled in the house has not been determined. As the bill leaves the committee it is the most drastic railroad regulation measure ever laid before the house. It will be fought bitterly. The Democratic members of the committee are preparing a minority report in opposition to the committee report.

12 DIE IN FLAMES

CARELESS BOY CAUSES FIRE

Ignites Benzine While Filling Cigar Lighter—Several Persons Are Missing—Ten Bodies Recovered—Woman Jumps to Her Death.

Chicago.—Fire Friday wrecked the six-story building of the L. Fish Furniture Company at the corner of Wabash avenue and Nineteenth street, and 12 persons at least and may be 18, died in the flames.

Ethel Lichtenstein, a stenograapher, plunged to her death from a sixth-story window; ten bodies have been taken from the ruins, and a number of employes are missing, and, it is feared, are dead.

It was a fire of remarkable fierceness, marked by unusual horror and remarkable escapes. The fire department was bitterly criticised for slowness in responding to the first alarm, and still more fatal slowness in trying to reach the men and women encaged by flames on the sixth floor. These charges were denied by Chief Horan, who pointed out that the building had no fire escape in front and only one in the rear.

The financial loss is put at $200,000.

There were forty or fifty employes in the building when a report of an explosion was heard, followed almost instantly by a puff of smoke and some one's wild cry of "Fire."

In the general offices and mailing department on the sixth floor were 20 men and women preparing for the day's work. At the first alarm some rushed for the stairways, while others delayed to lock up the office books. This delay, it is believed, caused the death of a number.

Before the first firemen could run up ladders to the upper floors Miss Lichtenstein appeared at the sixth-story window facing in Wabash avenue. She climbed out on the window sill while firemen shouted not to jump and women in the crowd of spectators shrieked in horror.

The girl hesitated a moment; there was a burst of smoke from below her, and then she jumped to her death.

What befell those who are now listed as missing, in the few minutes of horror after the alarm reached them, may never be known. The one or two who did escape from the sixth floor were saved by remarkable good luck and the presence of mind of employes on the first floor of the building.

These employes threw a score or more of mattresses into the alley, and a man and boy who jumped and alighted upon these escaped not only alive but practically unhurt.

Leo Stoeckel, who was taken into custody after the conflagration, admitted to the police that it was he who started the fire.

Stoeckel appeared heartbroken and told his story with difficulty.

"I was employed as a clerk in the office," Stoeckel said. "Mr. Mitchell gave me three cigar lighters and told me to go to the finishing room on the fourth floor and fill them with benzine. I did so. I used a five-gallon can of the oil. I had filled two of the lighters and was working on the third when there was an explosion. A sheet of flames almost blinded me and I remember only dimly what happened after that. I did not regain my senses fully until I reached the street.

ETNA ERUPTION INCREASES

Fifteen Craters Are Sending Forth Huge Streams of Lava—Villages Are Ruined.

Rome.—The eruption of Mount Etna is increasing in violence hourly. Fifteen new craters, opening laterally, are sending forth blue and gold flames, burning cinders and melted lava, accompanied by terrific earthquake shocks and violent explosions.

A black and scarlet stream of lava, 2,000 feet wide and seven miles long, is flowing down the mountain side at the rate of 22 yards an hour, doing enormous damage. Nicolosi, a small but prosperous town two hours' climb from Catania, appears to be doomed. Borello and Belpasso, their suburbs, are entirely deserted, the inhabitants and the shepherds streaming down to Catania.

No loss of life has been reported as yet, but the property damage is immense. Entire villages are ruined financially.

WOMAN DEAD; GENERAL HURT

WIFE OF MAJ. SLOCUM KILLED IN AUTO CRASH.

Gen. Bell, Chief of Staff U. S. A., Injured When Car Hits His Machine.

Washington.—Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of staff of the army, who was injured in an automobile accident in which the wife of Maj. Slocum met death, was said to be recovering as rapidly as could be expected. No internal injuries of a serious nature had appeared. A coroner's jury will inquire into the collision of trolley car and automobile and endeavor to fix responsibility for Mrs. Slocum's death.

Gen. Bell suffered a broken rib and minor injuries to his right elbow, right hand and scalp.

The chauffeur was Sergt. Edward Ward of the United States signal corps. Motorman W. J. Speinbaugh and Conductor H. J. Norris were held by the police, but were later released to appear when wanted.

Mrs. Slocum was thrown under the seat of the automobile by the force of the collision. Her injuries were concussion of the brain and a fracture at the base of the brain.

Gen. Bell was sitting with the chauffeur and was thrown out. The chauffeur was pinned for awhile under the machine, which was practically demolished.

Gen. Bell kept up heroically, notwithstanding his injuries, hurrying with Mrs. Slocum to the nearest hospital and thence to the hospital at Fort Myer.

An official account of the distressing accident was issued from the office of Gen. Bell. The officials hold that the accident was not due to any negligence on the part of Gen. Bell or his chauffeur. A similar claim is made by the trolley company, it being asserted that the car was going at the rate of only seven miles an hour and that proper signals were given.

Mrs. Slocum came here a few days ago, having been preceded by a letter from her husband to Gen. Bell. She was the guest of her sister, Mrs. Kate B. Greene, who resides at the Wyoming apartment house, where Gen. Bell called for Mrs. Slocum.

Maj. H. J. Slocum, husband of Mrs. Slocum, now inspector general, department of the east, stationed at Governor's Island, N. Y., was telegraphed for immediately.

Gen. Bell and Maj. Slocum were at the Military academy together and joined the same regiment, the Seventh cavalry, on graduation. They and their wives have been lifelong, intimate friends.

SOUTHERNER KILLS TWO MEN

Slays Negro Porter and Conductor—Wounds Others and Is Killed by Police.

Wilmington, Del. — A tall southerner, after some words with a porter on the Royal Blue Limited train on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, shot and killed Samuel Williams, a negro porter, as the train was running nearly a mile a minute. When O. E. Wellman, the conductor of the train, appeared, the southerner turned his automatic pistol upon him, too. The conductor fell shot through the left side near the heart, as the porter had been.

The train ran to Wilmington and a battle between the southerner and the police followed. After two men had been wounded the police killed the southerner who, from papers on his body, is believed to have been J. H. Bethea of Dillon, S. C.

Thirteen passengers, besides Bethea, were in the second car of the limited. They say Bethea boarded the train at Baltimore, and appeared to have been drinking.

My little son, a boy of five, broke out with an itching rash. Three doctors prescribed for him, but he kept getting worse until we could not dress him any more. They finally advised me to try a certain medical college, but its treatment did no good. At the time I was induced to try Cuticura he was so bad that I had to cut his hair off and put the Cuticura Ointment on him on bandages, as it was impossible to touch him with the bare hand. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body that was not affected. He was one mass of sores. The bandages used to stick to his skin and in removing them it used to take the skin off with them, and the screams from the poor child were heartbreaking. I began to think that he would never get well, but after the second application of Cuticura Ointment I began to see signs of improvement, and with the third and fourth applications the sores commenced to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but it finally yielded to the treatment. Now I can say that he is entirely cured, and a stronger and healthier boy you never saw than he is to-day, twelve years or more since the cure was effected. Robert Wattam, 1148 Forty-eighth St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 9, 1909."

Looking Ahead.

Josephine, aged ten, has a decided lisp. She also is very fond of attending the matinee. The other day she was giving a spirited story of the play to Marion, who was aged nine.

"My mamma says it isn't good for little girls to go to the theater," said Marion with an air of self-righteousness, "I'm not ever going till I'm 18."

"Humph," retorted Josephine without any hesitation, "th-pose you die when you're theventeen, then you'll be thtung!"—Woman's Companion.

A HEROIC FATHER

BRAVERY COST HIM HIS LIFE

Only Wife and Baby Left.—They Are in Destitute Condition—Subscription to Be Raised for Them in Duluth.

Duluth.—Fred Anholm, the brave settler homesteading near Kalvida, who tried to rescue his three children from his burning home died of his burns. Of his happy family, only his wife and baby survive him. Two children were burned to death in the house and another, whom he carried out with its clothes on fire, died shortly afterwards on an improvised bed on the ground. Anholm was terribly burned and he suffered untold agony up to the end.

His home was a day's drive over rough roads to Moose Lake, the nearest railroad station. He was hurried to Duluth and to the hospital, but all that the sympathetic nurses could do was to alleviate his suffering.

The house took fire about 4:30 in the morning. Anholm and his wife with one baby and two men boarding with them reached the outside in safety. Failing to see his other three children, Anholm plunged into the flames in an attempt to reach them. He was gone so long that those waiting on the outside gave up hope of seeing him or the children again. In another minute he staggered through the door with one of the children. Both were human torches, and the efforts of those near were turned toward saving them. But they tried in vain, for the child did not live long and now the father is dead.

It is expected that a substantial subscription will be raised at Moose Lake and among Anholm's friends to aid the wife and baby. It is stated that they are absolutely destitute. The stricken mother reached St. Luke's hospital today. The hospital authorities are doing all in their power to help her, but she is without a cent and has no other place than the hospital to stop. Efforts will be made to interest Duluth people in her case.

DEAN OLSEN BADLY INJURED.

Former Minnesota Educator Is Thrown From Horse.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Friends here of J. W. Olsen, formerly dean of the state agricultural college and state superintendent of public instruction have received word that he had been severely injured recently in Mexico by being thrown from a horse. At first it was thought he was not hurt badly, but his condition has been getting worse.

The accident happened while Mr. Olsen was at Chiapas, about 100 miles south of Mexico City. He was riding horseback while looking over some property. As he neared a railroad crossing the horse was frightened by an approaching train, and, in trying to prevent a collision, Mr. Olsen was thrown. His ankle was sprained and he was also injured in the chest. If able to travel, he expects to return to Minnesota early in April.

HOME BURNS; TENANTS ABSENT.

Former Pastor's House Destroyed at Paynesville.

Paynesville.—Fire at 3 o'clock in the morning destroyed the residence of Rev. D. D. Day, now of Lake Benton. The house was occupied by M. Welsman. The fire is of a mysterious origin, as Mr. and Mrs. Welsman have been away for two weeks and no one had been occupying the house during their absence. The house was insured for $2,200.

Winona City Council Calls Them Menace to Public.

Winona.—The Winona city council jabbed the harpoon into the pay-as-you-enter street car system, established here March 15, when they voted to request the management of the company to re-establish the old system. The operation of the pay-as-you-enter regulations is a "menace to public safety and an inconvenience."

NORSE STUDENTS GET HOME.

Minnesota Club Buys Property for a Clubhouse.

Minneapolis.—Norwegians at the University of Minnesota are to have a home and clubhouse of their own. The Norwegian society has purchased the J. T. ROAD MONEY DISTRIBUTED.

Goodhue County to Spend $1,500 on Highways.

Red Wing. — The sum of $1,500 apportioned to Goodhue county by the state for construction and maintenance of highways was ordered to be divided equally in the five commissioner districts and a like amount was appropriated to each district by the county commissioner. J. M. Simmons was re-elected superintendent of county highways.

CAPITOL IS TOO SMALL.

Custodian Has Hard Job Parceling Out Spare Rooms.

St. Paul.—Custodian Downs at the capitol is having his hands full of trouble trying to take care of all the departments that want additional room. Just now two departments, the superintendent of public instruction and the railroad and warehouse commission are after the room in the north wing which Downs has been using as his office. Superintendent Schulz had spoken for the room some time ago, and Downs had told him that if he ever moved out he would get it. Last week the railroad commission wanted the room for its engineers, and Downs decided to move the cigar stand into the corridor and use that room himself. But then he remembered his promise to Schultz, and the railroad commission apparently is no nearer than it was to getting additional room.

One plan that has been suggested is to take one room away from the public examiner, who now occupies the whole west side of the north wing. Since the superintendent of banks was created and that office was given rooms in the basement, the number of employes and callers at the public examiner's offices has greatly decreased, but whether Mr. Schaefer is willing to give up the room he has is another question.

BULL HURTS FARMER.

Vicious Animal Knocks Master Down and Besieges House.

Marshall. — Robert Boulton, living northwest of town, was attacked by a vicious bull on his farm, and is now laid up with serious injuries. Mr. Boulton attempted to drive the animal into the barn, when the bull suddenly turned on him, and, knocking him down, trampled him and rolled him several rods into a river, where he threw the man into the water and held him in.

Mr. Boulton got hold of the ring in the animal's nose and a spirited tussle ensued until the bull tore loose. The bull went out on one side of the creek and Mr. Boulton on the other, and he was able to crawl to the house before the bull overtook him again. Mrs. Boulton was a helpless spectator of the whole struggle, and so vicious was the animal that for hours he maintained an effectual blockade of the house, not permitting Mrs. Boulton to leave the residence, which she repeatedly attempted to do in order to get medical help and assistance.

Finally the animal retreated, and the wife was able to make her way to a neighbor's place and secured assistance. Mr. Boulton is suffering from several broken ribs and other internal injuries.

IRON IN OTTER TAIL.

Mining Man Takes Contract On Very Significant Terms.

Fergus Falls.—The first mining contract ever made in Otter Tail county has just been filed in the register of deed's office in this city. The contract is given by Fred Pothila to Guy E. Harrison, a mining man, and covers Mr. Pothila's land in the town of Newton. It gives Mr. Harrison the right to go on to the farm and explore for iron for three years, and at the end of that time he must begin mining.

There has been a great deal of drilling going on in that locality for the past two years, and a great many options to purchase have been taken, but nothing has ever been given out as to what has been found. The filing of the contract would indicate the drills are finding iron.

Johnson Scholarship Accepted.

Minneapolis. — The $30,000 Gov. John A. Johnson scholarship was accepted by the regents of the state university at a meeting held in the offices of President Northrop. The fund is contributed by personal friends of the late governor. In substance, it is provided that $100 monthly, from the fund be paid to the widow of the governor during her lifetime. After her death or in the event of her marriage the fund reverts to the university and is to be divided into a number of scholarships, the nature and condition of which has not been determined. The proposition was presented by a committee of which F. B. Lynch of St. Paul was the chairman, representing the memorial fund committee appointed by Governor Eberhart some months ago.

Captain of Volunteers Is Gone.

St. Paul. — The St. Paul police were notified of the mysterious disappearance of Captain Timothy Murphy, head of the Volunteers of America in St. Paul. The receipts amounting to $1,250 of the tag day, March 17, are also gone and thus far all search for the man and the money has been in vain. Captain Murphy was last seen on Monday evening. He then left his wife at the Woodlawn Baptist church, stating that he was going to a nearby telephone to call up a friend, and was not seen since.

Want Land Opened.

Cass Lake.—A meeting of the farmers in Cass county will be held here April 8 to discuss the withholding of the government lands in this vicinity from settlement. The call has been made by a large number of the prominent citizens of the county. The direct object of the meeting will be to petition the secretary of the interior requesting him to consider the matter carefully, and, if possible, arrange matters so the lands will be opened to homestead entry as soon as possible.

PHILADELPHIA AND CUBS 1910 CHAMPS?

WISEACRES SELECT MACK AND CHANCE'S TEAMS TO WIN THE PENNANTS.

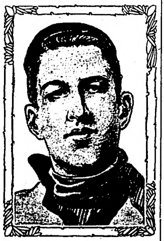
DROP TIGERS AND PIRATES

"Knowing Ones" Think Last Season's Winners Will Not Finish Above Second Place—Baseball Dope Uncertain—McGraw Lauds Marquard.

NATIONAL.	AMERICAN.
Chicago,	Philadelphia,
Pittsburg,	Detroit,
Cincinnati,	Cleveland,
New York,	Boston,
Philadelphia,	Chicago,
Brooklyn,	St. Louis,
St. Louis,	New York,
Boston.	Washington.

This is the season when the fan begins to pick the probable winners of the races in the big baseball leagues and the foregoing is a concensus of opinion as expressed by "experts" in cities where there are major league teams.

It may be noted that Pittsburg is placed in second position this year, most of those who expressed opinions believing the bad luck that kept Chicago from winning the pennant in 1909 will not hit the Cubs in 1910. Frank Chance, manager of the Chicago club, is in good shape thus far this season, and neither foot nor shoulder seems to be bothering him, as they did last year. With Fred Luderus as his substitute Chance, the fans seem to think, has a fine opportunity of gathering in the laurels this year.



Roger Peckinpaugh.

Detroit also is shoved down to second place by the "knowing ones," who think Hughey Jennings and his bunch have won their last championship for the Wolverine metropolis. The fans believe Connie Mack will have the winner. There seems some reason for placing Cincinnati in third place in the National league, as Clark Griffith has a likely bunch of youngsters to sandwich in with his veterans this year. As to Cleveland, in the American, it is hard to figure out how the Naps will beat out Boston. The "Speed Boys" put up a rattling game last year and should be better this season. Cleveland has some new men who promise well, among them Roger Peckinpaugh, utility infielder, but the Boston bunch will have something to say about the result, and it would not be surprising to see them finish ahead of Cleveland.

Reports from California have not been favorable to the Chicago Sox and although Comiskey has spent a large sum to get new material, the wiseacres don't seem to have much confidence in his team.

The others are placed about as they finished last year and the dope on them seems to be better than that on the teams that are expected to be in the top division. Dope on baseball is more uncertain than that on the races, and these selections may be put down as mere guess work at best.

Manager McGraw made the rather surprising remark several days ago that he expects Rube Marquard to be one of his best winning pitchers during the coming season. Since the training season began Marquard has been kept very much in the background. He pitched in very few practice games, and has done comparatively little work of any kind on the side.

"I think we worked Marquard most too hard last spring," explained McGraw. "And he was so anxious to make good that he overplayed his ambition. His first disappointment at not making good after having been talked about all over the country as a $11,000 player took the art out of him and his nerve to a certain extent went with it. If we can get that $11,000 idea out of his head and make him pitch as naturally as he did at Indianapolis, I think the Giants will have a most valuable man.

"They may say what they please about Marquard," said McGraw. "But I know that he is a good pitcher. He has everything that a good pitcher ought to have, and no man could have done what he did before coming to New York without having been a good man."

Marquard has been working on a curve similar to Matty's fadeaway ball, the only difference being that it is thrown from the port side. As it is perhaps well known, the fadeaway is a slow curve thrown by right-handed pitchers. It breaks to the outside of the plate, and that is what makes the fade-away such a puzzle. Marquard is showing wonderful progress in developing the left-handed fadeaway, and if he ever succeeds in controlling it so that he can make it drop away from the batter, just as Matty's curve drops in toward the batter, he will have a wonderful puzzler.

The Giant camp is so enthused over the unexpected pitching brilliancy of Parsons, the former star of Bucknell college, that the annual christening of new curve balls has become a fad.

"They have their sneeze balls, their whiff balls, their sinker balls, their stop balls and all that line of stuff," says Catcher Robinson, "but I ain't kiddin' you when I say that this fellow Parsons has got a curve that is absolutely new to baseball. The only thing I can think of as a name for it would be the fish ball."

It was thus recorded. Parsons has the "fish ball," and if anybody can stop that for a brand-new curve it's just like money in his hand.

Parsons is already known as "Slim" and "Skinny." He is so tall that he has to low bridge on electric fans, and he is so thin that McGraw barred him from the hot baths to prevent him from evaporating.

Sunday Ball in Capital? Hardly.

Washington is aroused over a bill introduced by Representative Coudrey of Mississippi, making Sunday baseball in the District of Columbia lawful. While there is little chance of such a measure running the gauntlet, religious and civic bodies are holding daily meetings and planning an energetic campaign against the proposed legislation.

NAMING OF RACE HORSES PERPLEXING TO TURFMEN

OWNERS' WIVES AND DAUGHTERS SOMETIMES HAVE A VOICE IN THE SELECTIONS.

The question of the naming of horses has always been a perplexing one to turfmen. Annually several thousand colts and fillies have to be named, and at that the jockey club requires that names for these youngsters must be filed for registration on March 1 of their two-year-old form. For failure to comply with this rule it costs an owner $50 whenever he sends his youngster to the starting post.

The jockey club also does not permit the use of a name that has been registered within five years, but back of this period an owner can take any name for present use that is within the lids of the English and American record books.

Of late years none of the great stables has had the uniformity in names that marked the strings of the noted turfmen of days long since past and gone. The late Pierre Lorillard bestowed on his great horses Indian names, such as Iroquois, Parole, Sachem, Papoose, Pequot and Powhattan, while J. W. Hunt Reynolds, the noted Kentucky clubman, chose famous musicians and musical terms for names for his most brilliant race horses, of which Falsetta, the sire of The Picket and Sir Huon, and Mendelssohn were a fair sample.

Few stables have ever raced that were as fitly named as the horses once owned by the late Charles Fleischmann of Cincinnati, and his son, Julius, former mayor of the Queen city. It has always been understood that Mrs. Julius Fleischmann performed this service for her father-in-law and husband. Some of the names she selected were surely hard to beat. For instance, she called a colt out of Promenade Stroller and Smart Set was picked out by her for a colt out of Fashionable.

J. E. Madden has at times struck a few names that fitted as well as those selected by Mrs. Fleischmann, as above noted. For example, he named the produce of Blissful, Single Life, rather a grim selection at that, as he was then soon to pass out of the married state, and it was surely a stab at his divorced wife, now Annie Louise Bell. Good Luck as another bright name he selected, as that son of imported Sandringham is out of Pocketpiece, and Skillful, Jackful, Aceful and Witful, the get of imported Mirthful, were all well named.

J. R. Keene has also struck it happily in naming some of the get of Ben Brush—Birch Broom, Brush By and Sweep—all being by that Suburban handicap winner.

The late Maj. B. G. The Senatorial Fight in The 61st District,

With bankers Hanson of Ada, the present senator, Thompson, of Mahnomen, and Albert Bergh of Baudette, and Al. H. Jester of Bemidji in the race for the senatorship in the 61 st district, which includes Norman, Mahnomen, Red Lake, Clearwater and Beltrami counties, the situation is being watched with great interest throughout the northern part of the state.

With three Norwegian bankers in the race, the friends of Jester are confident he will be the winner and some very potent influences from outside the district are being brought to bear in his behalf. Jester ex-traveling man, now a farmer has a very strong following because of his activities in behalf of the farmers,

The feelinz is particularly strong aginst Bergh. Before Jester was endorsed, at a gathering at Bemidji and before his candidacy had been formally announced, Bergh was communicated with as to his attitude, as Jester would not have entered the race had Bergh declared himself a candidate from the north end of the district Bergh stated emphatically that he did not have the time to take from his business, and that his health would not permit of his entering the fight,

However, within about a week he proceeded to St. Paul and before returning filed as a candidate for the nomination.

It is therfore belived that some "influences" in the cities were brought into play very suddenly during his trip, and the question which the people are unable to solve now is, what interests are behind his sudden determination to enter the fight.

The contest promises to be a merry one, with Jester in the lead because of the division of the Norwegian vote among the three Norwegian bankers.--Crookston Morning Times

We don't know much about the sentiment it other parts of the district, but up this way it is; Hanson "nit."

The recent elections show an increased sentiment aganst the saloons, and very few saloon towns remain in this section. Saloons in this section are most numerous, in these towns: East Grand Forks 49, Moorhead 48 Crookston 22, and Thief River Falls 17.

As the patronage for East Grand Forks and Moorhead mainly comes from Dakota, Thief Rier Falli has more saloons per capita than any place in the Vally.—Ada Index.

Congressman Steenerson, we predict, will make it warm to the uncomfort able stage for the ship subsidy crowd when he gets through with them.

This pernicious lobbying for fat subsidies should be fully exposed and there will be some sensations sprung which will open the eyes of those who have been wondering at the wonderful patriotism (?) of The American Flag publication and the Merchant Marie League.—Crookston Times

The Poor Bridegroom.

"Even the English language emphasizes the insignificance of a man at his own wedding," said the prospective bridegroom disconsolately. "There isn't an independent word to designate him. He is merely called the groom of the bride, as if he were just about on a level with the bridesmaids and a little below the maid of honor. Best man, of course, means the bridegroom's best man, but the phrase itself tends to exalt this individual at the expense of his superior.

"Then there's no adjective to describe what pertains to the male half of the affair. You can't speak of the 'bridegroomal' trousers or necktie. On the other hand, 'bridal' applies not only to the possessions of the girl, but to what relates to both of them equally, like the trip and the bridal chamber. The very words 'matrimony' and 'matrimonial' are from the feminine side only. 'Patrimony' has nothing to do with the nuptials. It applies only to wealth and signifies that a man's part in the affair is to get out and hustle for the cash."—Philadelphia Ledger.

He had been greatly pleased with the beauty and dignity of the exercises and was discoursing to his wife upon the refining influences of college life. Suddenly his impressive monologue was cut short. GUARDED BY ICY WIND

THE COLDEST SPOT ON EARTH

No Precautions Are Necessary Against Escape at Verhoyansk—When the Wind Blows, Half an Hour In the Fierce, Biting Cold Means Death.

The coldest place in the world one would naturally expect to be either the north or the south pole, but it is not. It is a village in the northeast of Siberia named Verhoyansk.

There the average temperature of the three worst winter months is 53 degrees F. below zero, which means 85 degrees of frost. During January the average temperature is 56 degrees below zero, or 88 degrees of frost. On one occasion the thermometer registered the remarkable figure of 120 degrees of frost! The average January figure for London, on the other hand, is 7 degrees above freezing point.

But in Verhoyansk most months are winter months. July, curiously enough is as hot there as in London, but the shadow of the terrible winter hangs over even the warmest months.

Even in midsummer the forests which surround the desolate plain in the center of which Verhoyansk stands are withered and gray. The grass is colorless. The few flowers are odorless. The bare soil of the plain itself refuses to produce vegetables of any kind. The ground is frozen hard to an incredible depth.

No farming, of course, is possible. There are no cattle or poultry. All food is imported. Why, then, does this little village exist? It is a convict station, and its population of 400 is made up of officials and exiles.

No precautions against escapes are needed. Prisoners are known to have gone mad with the loneliness of the place. But no one has ever been mad enough to try to escape. Verhoyansk, strange though it sounds, is guarded by the wind. A gale when the thermometer stands at 30 or more below zero will destroy every living thing that is not under shelter.

One of the many curious facts about cold is that intense cold is in itself easy to bear provided the air is still. One traveler has declared that he has often felt colder in Piccadilly on a damp day in November than during his entire stay in Verhoyansk, where the thermometer sometimes showed 90 degrees of frost.

The reason is that at Verhoyansk the air is intensely dry, and dry cold does not penetrate far. With a tent at night and warm furs in the daytime one can be quite comfortable, however low the temperature.

But let a wind once rise and things are different. As Verhoyansk is the coldest place in the world, the few winds that come must bring warmth. But then all winds carry moisture. And so we have the curious fact that, though one may be quite comfortable with the thermometer showing 60 degrees of frost, if a wind springs up and adds 20 or 30 degrees of warmth to the air one has to fly for dear life to shelter.

Half an hour in that fierce, biting cold means death. But the intense dry cold that is Verhoyansk's normal weather is, if not so dangerous, quite as powerful in its effects. In that icy stillness an iron ax head dropped on the ground smashes like glass. A board of unseasoned wood, on the other hand, freezes hard as iron.

De Windt in his travels in this region carried his milk in solid cubes in a net attached to his sleigh. His thermometers all burst, for at the Verhoyansk temperatures quicksilver freezes and can be hammered like copper. It has indeed been turned into bullets and shot through a deal board.

All he could find of a case of claret were a few lumps of red ice and some splintered glass. But what troubled him most was the discovery that it was impossible to smoke. At 40 degrees below zero frozen nicotine blocks the stem of the pipe, while cigarettes or cigars freeze to the lips.

It must be embarrassing to find, as one does when the thermometer reaches 80 below, that one's very breath falls at one's feet in a fine white powder. A mustache becomes a torture—a heavy, solid lump of ice. To lay a bare hand on metal means that the skin will stay where it touches. A careless traveler once witlessly left a shirt outside his hut to dry. When he picked it up again it bent and almost broke. When swung through the air it made a noise like theatrical thunder.

At these temperatures many usually trusty articles, such as combs and razors and knife handles, shrivel or bend or break.

Verhoyansk is a huddle of mud plastered huts along one straggling street. The windows are of ice, so that candles are needed both summer and winter. Twenty miles away, across a dismal plain of snow, lies a low, black line of pine forests.

On the other side is the frozen river, from which dense, unhealthy mists roll up for weeks together in the autumn. There are not flowers in spring, and summer is dingy. Perhaps they are right at Verhoyansk in looking forward to the long months of winter But it is not a cheerful place.—Pearson's Weekly.

The order of society is founded on human misery and imbecility, and these are foundations which will never

A SOUTH SEA ROMANCE.

The Mutiny Long Ago on the Bounty, a British Man-of-war.

Who has not heard of the mutiny of the Bounty? The romance of it still lingers from one end of the Pacific to the other. The descendants of the mutineers of the British man-of-war and their dusky wives are living and bear English names made famous, or infamous, more than a century ago.

The British man-of-war had gone to Tahiti. The commander, Blythe, was harsh and cruel to his men. The women of Tahiti loved the fair skinned sailors and sought to hide them from Blythe, their oppressor, but they were captured, and the ship sailed away, but only to return. When it returned, in command was Fletcher Christian, midshipman, and a score of mutineers. The brute Blythe and his loyal companions had been set adrift in an open boat. Marvelous to relate, after traversing thousands of miles of open ocean they reached the Australian coast. Here they found a haven of refuge at a British outpost. For twenty years all trace of Fletcher Christian and his companions was lost, although searching expedition after expedition was sent to Tahiti by the British government.

Each of the mutineers save the remorseful Fletcher Christian took unto himself a wife. As it meant death to their husbands to live in Tahiti, they helped the men they loved to man the boat that bore them away to seek some desert island. After sailing for many days in the extreme southern tropical sea the rock of Pitcairn arose before them.

Twenty years later a British merchantman sighted by chance the lone rock in the southern Pacific and sent a boat ashore. To the astonishment of the crew, dusky men and women ran down to the beach to welcome them in their own tongue and claimed to be "English." Only one old man among them, Adams, of pure British blood still survived. He was found, Bible in hand, teaching in the little Sunday school which he had built and where he had educated the children of the colony and taught them the tenets of the Christian faith.

When the news reached England a British man-of-war was sent for the last of the mutineers of the Bounty. Aboard was a king's pardon for Adams, so that, after all, he died a British subject, surrounded by his dusky children and grandchildren. The colony was then removed from the faraway southern isle to Tahiti, but homesickness overcame its members, and they returned to the verdant rock.—New Idea Magazine.

Bolivia.

Bolivia is famous for its silver, but also possesses considerable quantities of gold, which, however, cannot be extracted without great expense. In the seventeenth century an Indian near the town of La Paz found a mass of native gold, supposed to have been detached from the neighboring mountain by lightning. Bolivia is, on the whole, in a backward condition, political changes and internal conflicts having hindered the development of its natural wealth.

LOVE'S DOUBTING.

A Phase of Life Through Which Many Married Women Pass.

The only incidents that marred our happiness were sudden and inexplicable "flare ups." Occasionally, to our amazement, a trifle would make us glare at each other like animals and speak bitterly. Five minutes later we would express our regret and shame. Soon I perceived that these quarrels were due to nerves and to the trials of adjustment. One evening we had an argument that was particularly violent and distressing. It ended by Frank's going to bed. I remained in the seat where I had been reading, and for a long time I pretended to myself that I was going on reading. Presently tears fell on my book. Then I said: "How silly all this is! I am making myself suffer, and I am making Frank suffer too. I will go and tell him that I am sorry." So I stole into the bedroom. He was sleeping peacefully.

That little experience, not without humor as I look back on it, made me first realize how differently Frank and I could be affected by the same cause. It marked the beginning of my uneasiness. Soon I stopped reading aloud to Frank; why, I can't remember. Little things disturbed me. At first the thought of them used to be swept away by my delight on seeing Frank in the evening. Then, too, there would come the feeling that those things were accidents and would not occur again. In the second year of our marriage, just after dinner, Frank would read the newspaper till he began to doze. Then he would rouse himself and try to be agreeable. The effort troubled me. There was also the quiet and efficient deciding of little details without reference to my wishes. And here I felt there was danger. Once I said to myself, "Suppose I should tire him," and I grew cold. Then I thought of the moment when I should discover that I was tiring him. Here my sense of humor came to my rescue, and I felt better. I imagine that many women pass through this phase.—American Magazine.

Barrie and Kipling.

Mr. Barrie was one day at Waterloo station in a hurry to catch a train. He was hastening from the bookstall laden with papers, "a good many sixpenny ones among them," he dolefully relates, when, in rushing around a corner, he fell into the arms of Rudyard Kipling, equally in a tearing hurry. They turned on each other with scowling faces, then smiled in recognition and asked each other whither he went. Then Kipling, exclaiming, "Lucky beggar, you've got papers!" seized the bundle from Barrie, flung him some money and made off. "But you did not stoop to pick up his dirty halfpence, did you?" queried one of Mr. Barrie's hearers amusedly. "Didn't I, though?" returned Barrie, and added ruefully "But he hadn't flung me half enough."—St James' Gazette

Rose Colds From Paper Roses.

"A patient of mine is subject to rose colds," a doctor said. "She caught a bad rose cold last week from a bouquet of artificial roses. That often happens. It is supposed to show the mystic, psychological aspect of disease, but as a matter of fact it is just as natural to take a rose cold from paper roses as from the real kind. Why? Because the paper roses that bring on rose colds are always perfumed. It is the fad, you know, to perfume artificial flowers. The scent used is the essential oil of roses, and it is this oil in the natural flowers that causes rose colds."—New York Press.

A Keen Observer.

Ethel, aged three, had been to visit her cousins, two fun loving and romping boys. She had climbed upon her father's knee and was telling him of her visit. "Papa, every night John and George say their prayers they ask God to make them good boys," said she.

"That is nice," said papa.

Then, thinking soberly for a few minutes, she said, "He ain't done it yet."—Bellingham

The Mess In the Oven.

"How came such a greasy mess in the oven?" said a fidgety old spinster to her maid of all work.

"Why," replied the girl, "the candles fell into the water, and I put them into the oven to dry."—London Tatler.

Just Pleasantness.

Perhaps just pleasantness has not a very heroic sound, but the human heart that, knowing its own bitterness, can yet carry itself cheerfully is not without heroism. Indeed, if that human heart does no more than hold its tongue about its own aches and pains it has a certain moral value that the world cannot afford to lose. "Pleasantness" does not sound as well as self sacrifice or wisdom or spirituality, but it may include all these great words. And certainly just to start one's husband out to his work cheerfully, to make the hobbledehoy of a son feel a gentler and sweeter sentiment toward women because of his own mother's sound, sweet gayety and strength, to help one's servants to put good humor and friendliness into their services—these things make for righteousness in the world.—Margaret Deland.

LEONARD WOOD The Doctor who became a General

By JAMES CREELMAN

Copyrighted by Pearson Pub. Co.

MAJ. GEN. LEONARD WOOD in his forty-ninth year, one of the most picturesque figures in the whole United States army, this month assumes the duties of chief of staff of the army.

When Leonard Wood ceased to be a doctor in order to be a soldier he may not have considered the profound difference in philosophic viewpoint of a profession trained to keep men alive and a profession trained to kill them.

The born adventurer seldom analyzes himself, but seeks glory where the world gives it; and if he should "choose brave death in a red coat before brave life in a black one," the responsibility must rest upon society, which gives such unequal honors to those who heal and those who slay.

Twelve years ago Leonard Wood was an assistant army surgeon. To-day he is the senior general of the United States army, and chief of staff.

"Gen. Wood is easily the ablest soldier the nation has produced since the civil war," said former President Roosevelt. "If we should become involved in war to-morrow I don't know where I should look for a man to take his place. He would be the one man to take command."

It is said that even Lord Cromer, the great British regenerator of Egypt, was so impressed by Gen. Wood's work in Cuba that he expressed regret that he could not have such an administrator and organizer to succeed him in office.

Leonard Wood is an adventurer of the true Elizabethan type. Whether chasing murderous Apaches through the mountains, creating a government in Cuba, or forcing order and civilization upon the Mohammedan savages of Mindanao and Sulu by armed force, he has always been a master.

Dr. Wood might have proved a failure. Gen. Wood has been a success.

He is tall, straight and broad-shouldered. He has a small waist, the bulging, muscle-padded chest of a gorilla, arms like a blacksmith, and thick, powerful hands. He can walk like a bull moose; jump with the quickness of a cat; box, wrestle and fence like a professional. Although he is 49 years old, it is doubtful if there is a man in the whole army to-day possessed of more strength, energy, skill and endurance.

Scotch, Irish and English blood mingles in Leonard Wood. His father descended from William White, who died on the Mayflower, through Peregrine White, the first-born of Plymouth colony, and from William Wood, who was a Plymouth freeholder in 1629. His mother's strain goes back to the Hagar family, who came from Ireland in 1634 and settled at Watertown, Mass., and to that patriot greatgrandfather, John Nixon, who commanded a company at Lexington, a regiment at Bunker Hill, and a brigade at Saratoga.

His father and uncle were country doctors, the sons of a stout New England farmer who kept a tavern and owned much wooded land. His father served as a private soldier in the civil war and was sent home from the field permanently invalided. To get rid of malaria the doctor-soldier moved his family to the sandy soil of Cape Cod.

In 1880, when Leonard was a stalwart, quick-witted youth of 20 years, the Wood family debated whether he should enter Harvard university. That was the very time when Theodore Roosevelt was graduated from Harvard. The iron-muscled young Yankee, who was already a notable cross-country runner, wanted to enter the army or navy. The spirit of adventure was strong in him. But the wishes of his sober old father prevailed, and, having obtained a scholarship, he entered the Harvard Medical school.

In the third year after he entered the study of medicine he won in a competitive examination for service in the city hospital of Boston. After 15 months in this position he had a row with the hospital superintendent and resigned. Then he served in the North End dispensary of Boston.

In following the story of this singular man it is interesting to know that, although he followed his father's wishes by entering a medical school, he there became the chum of a son of an army captain, and, while studying medicine, he actually began to prepare himself for a military career by reading military science, and in every way possible sought to fit himself for the army entrance examinations.

After leaving the Boston dispensary, the young doctor went into general practice in that city.

In 1885 the young Boston doctor who was destined to become the senior general of the United States army went to New York and passed the army examinations for military surgeons, standing second among the competitors.

There was no vacancy for him, but presently he got a letter from the surgeon general at Washington, offering him a contract as a civilian surgeon with the army, at a hundred dollars a month, with free quarters and rations, and forage for his horse.

As the letter suggested service in the west, the doctor joyfully accepted the contract and, under orders, went to join Gen. Crook at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, about 20 miles from the Mexican frontier.

This was a change from Boston! Picked troops under Miles and Lawton were to pursue Geronimo and his fierce Apaches till they were captured or destroyed.

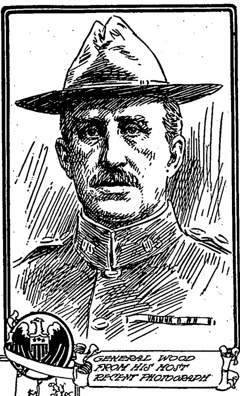
It was an extraordinary campaign, full of perils and hardships. The Apaches had robbed and murdered the people of Arizona and Sonora, Mexico, so long that each little village was surrounded by walls. Being mountaineers of great muscular power, the Indians, who could live on cactus and various roots, were accustomed to make journeys on foot through the roughest regions with a speed that defied pursuit.

Leonard Wood proved to be the strongest and most persistent man in the expedition. It was found that he could actually "walk down" an Apache even in the mountains. At the end of a desperate chase the officers would one by one drop out, utterly exhausted, and the young Boston doctor would be leading the soldiers and directing them.

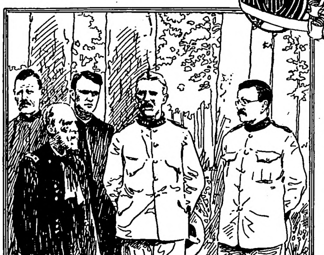
Finally, at his own request, the iron-muscled young surgeon was put in command of the infantry, and from that time on he regularly led soldiers like a line officer; nor did he fail to do his full duty as a medical man.

The hardest part of the trip was when the expedition crossed the Southern Pacific railway and moved into the San Rita mountains. It occurred to Lawton that he might cut off Geronimo's band by striking across the Mexican border. To do this he required additional orders and he was puzzled how to send back a dispatch asking permission, for the country in his rear was known to be full of hostiles.

In this emergency the doctor offered to be Lawton's messenger. Leaving the camp with a single companion, who dropped out after 20 miles, he rode in one night 73 miles and got back with an answer at eight o'clock in the morning, in time to get breakfast and then walk 34 miles with the troops, till a camp was made at nine o'clock that night. On the day before his ride he had traveled 25 miles on foot with his scout. That made a total of 132 miles traveled in about 36 hours.



GENERAL WOOD FROM HIS MOST RECENT PHOTOGRAPH



GENERAL WOOD WITH THEODORE ROOSEVELT AND GENERAL WHEELER BEFORE THE BATTLE OF SANTIAGO

When, at last, Geronimo and his swarthy cutthroats were captured in September, 1886, Dr. Wood, who had now received his commission as an assistant surgeon, accompanied Lawton with the prisoners to San Antonio. The Indians had killed 700 Mexicans and 98 Americans, including some soldiers, before they were literally run down.

In 1898, Lawton wrote of the Geronimo campaign and the doctor's part in it to Gov. Wolcott of Massachusetts:

"When through exposure and fatigue the infantry battalion lost its last officer, Capt. Wood volunteered to command it, in addition to his duties as a surgeon. In this duty Capt. Wood (he reached the grade of captain afterward while still a surgeon), distinguished himself most. His courage, endurance and example made success possible. I served through the War of the Rebellion and in many battles, but in no instance do I remember such devotion to duty, or such an example of courage and perseverance. It was mainly due to Capt. Wood's loyalty and resolution that the expedition was successful."

Leonard Wood's enemies have charged that he reached his distinction in the army largely through his skill as a courtier and the favoritism of President McKinley and President Roosevelt, but no criticism can wipe out the words of Lawton, one of the noblest and sincerest soldiers who ever carried the sword of the republic.

When Geronimo and his men were disposed of, Wood returned to Arizona and was assigned by Gen. Miles to command a special expedition to capture or kill seven escaped Indian prisoners who had fled to Sonora, Mexico. He was in the field from October, 1886, till the following February, and penetrated Mexico ten days' journey south of the Yakui river.

Then, after a month or two on duty at Los Angeles, he went back to Arizona and again took the field with the expedition against "Apache Kid" during 1887 and 1888. Then he was stationed at the Presidio, San Francisco, where he spent four years, including one summer camping with troops in the Yosemite country.

Soon after President McKinley was elected, Dr. Bates, the regular attending surgeon of the White House, died. The president asked Wood to take Dr. Bates' place. In that way the Indian trailer, who had a high standing as a surgeon, came into familiar and affectionate relations with Mr. McKinley.

When Theodore Roosevelt became assistant secretary of the navy, he and the doctor met and became fast friends. There was much to attract these two singular men together. They were devoted to boxing, fencing, wrestling, riding and walking. Dr. Wood had struggled to rise from the pale anxieties of his profession by serving as a soldier; Mr. Roosevelt had tried to live down the effete influences of a Harvard course, and fashionable New York social connections, by becoming a ranchman on the plains of North Dakota. Each was eager for distinction, mad for manly adventure. There was but two years' difference between their ages.

Together the man who was to be president of the United States and he who was to be chief general of the American army walked and talked, day after day, punched each other's bodies, whacked each other's heads with singlesticks, wrestled, ran, rode side by side and lived the strenuous life to the utmost.

The earth danced beneath the feet of the comrades as they talked of everything that might open the path of useful adventure and glory to their strength and courage. They looked into the seeds of time for signs of dangers to be desperately encountered and honors to be won.

Then, as the prospects of a war with Spain seemed to approach reality, the spirits of the two rose. Day after day and week after week Leonard Wood and Theodore Roosevelt racked their brains to see how they might get into the war both felt sure was coming.

They tried to get into the Seventy-first regiment of New York as majors. It was useless. Dr. Wood attempted to get the governor of Massachusetts to give him command of a regiment. He filed an application with the secretary of war for a volunteer regiment in case of war.

When the war with Spain broke upon the nation Secretary Alger sent for Mr. Roosevelt and offered him the coloneley of one of three volunteer regiments to be raised and equipped.

"I don't want to be colonel," said Mr. Roosevelt. "That position should go to Leonard Wood. I don't know how to organize or equip a regiment for the field. He does. He knows the practical way to prepare cavalry for actual war conditions in the shortest possible time. Let him be colonel and I will gladly serve with him as lieutenant-colonel until I am fit to command a regiment."

So Leonard Wood got his commission as colonel of the First United States Volunteer cavalry, known as "Roosevelt's Rough Riders."

Twenty-one days after he received his colonel's commission his regiment, gathered from four frontier countries, was being drilled in San Antonio.

When the Rough Riders were ordered to advance from the seashore at Siboney, Cuba, to meet the enemy at La Guasimas—the first fight of Shafter's army—Col. Wood moved out with the head of his regiment at such a pace that almost half of his men were left far in the rear.

After the Spaniards surrendered Santiago, Gen. Shafter recommended that the now promoted Gen. Wood be put in command of the conquered and panic-stricken city, with Gen. Lawton in command of the province.

How soon war changes the fortunes of men! In December, 1898, just a year and seven months after our two adventurers took the Rough Riders to the Caribbean sea, Leonard Wood, the poor surgeon, was a major general of volunteers and appointed military governor of Cuba; and Theodore Roosevelt was the governor-elect of the great state of New York.

It was no light-hearted, adventurous youth who sailed for the Philippines in March, 1903, but a grave, observant man of 43 years. His experience in Cuba had taught him much, and, above all things, the extreme importance of careful preparation in dealing with alien races.

Early in 1906 Gen. Wood took command of the entire Philippines division, which includes nearly 18,000 troops. For more than two years he put his tremendous energy to the task of emphasizing the training of soldiers for actual conditions of war, treating administrative methods, not as an object, but as means. At the end of his long and brilliant service in the Philippines he returned to the United States to assume his first military command on the American continent since the days when, as a surgeon, he led troops against the Apaches.

HINDUS ALARMED AND ASTIR

Spread of Christianity Threatens Whole Structure of Hinduism With Overthrow.

Hinduism is awakening to the fact that if the great sub-strata of Hindu society known as the depressed classes be raised by Christianity, the whole structure of Hinduism is theatened with overthrow. This awakening is being followed by efforts in various parts for the improvement of these poor people. The latest is a movement in Ahmedabad. In that city, on August 29, a meeting was held at which the attendance of the depressed classes was encouraged and in which they were allowed to sit beside caste people. Resolutions were passed for the formation of a Central Hindu association, which should have for its objects the raising of the depressed classes and their readmission into Hinduism after being converts to foreign faiths. As to the means to be adopted for realizing these objects, the following suggestions were made: (a) Starting schools, clubs and associations; (b) establishing preaching missions; (c) publishing papers, periodicals, magazines and leaflets; (d) adopting such other means as may be conducive to the above objects.

ANY WOMAN CAN HAVE BEAUTIFUL HAIR.

(From French Beauty Monthly.)

"No woman should use water upon her hair oftener than once in two months," says M. Fournier, the noted French scientist. "Dry powder only should be used. Moisture causes the hair to lose its color and in time become thin.

"Any woman desiring abundant, lustrous hair should use a dry shampoo every two or three days. Mix four ounces of powdered orris root with four ounces of therox. Sprinkle about a tablespoonful of this mixture upon the head; then brush the powder thoroughly through the hair. This will keep it light and fluffy, and beautifully lustrous. You will soon see new hair starting to grow. This treatment is the only thing that I am sure will produce a growth of hair.

"While plain orris root is used as a dry shampoo by many women, still, no such results can be obtained as by using the formula I have given."

MARY McCANN'S ASSISTANT

By LORA GOODRICH

Although it had two bulging windows, that peered out like a pair of short-sighted eyes from under the faded flap of awning, the little shop was rather dark within. It was a very little shop, indeed, tucked in between two large buildings, yet because it chanced to have that particular location a good many persons entered it in the course of the day.

It was kept by a pale, big-eyed little woman who said little, but tried to make up for her lack of words by a sociable smile. She was a very timid woman, who never should have tried to keep shop at all, and would not have had to if her husband had not lost both his legs and his job of braking at the same time in a railroad accident.

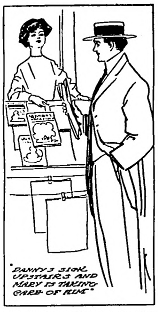
Marean had fallen into the habit of slipping in there every morning on his way to his office for a paper or magazine.

Marean was a young lawyer struggling into a practice. He had grit and vim and humor; he liked his fellowman better than he liked himself and gave him the best of his knowledge.

But he did not intend to be poor; he intended to succeed and to win his share of fortune by his wits. Hitherto he had not found time nor felt in a position to consider marriage, but now he had begun to look for the right woman. He had a very clear idea of the kind of woman he wanted, but he was certain that she was not to be found among his acquaintances. The sisters and daughters of his colleagues, given as they were to the spending of much money and frivolous habits generally, would not, he knew, make good wives for men who were bound for some years to go very carefully.

Marean did not talk about his ideas concerning marriage to his friends; he did not talk about anything that lay closest to his heart. "Close-mouthed," they called him, but a "rattling good fellow," which last is the highest compliment that can be paid from man to man.

Marean was a plain chap, yet his face was more attractive than many a handsome one. His eyes were clear, his color good, his teeth perfect. When he looked at you, you trusted him; when he smiled at you, you all but loved him.



"DANNY'S SICK UPSTAIRS AND MARY IS TAKING CARE OF HIM"

A heavy rain caught him one morning on his way to his office. As he chanced to be near the little news store, he hurried in with the two-fold purpose of getting his paper and being sheltered until the storm should lessen. The bell above the door jangled pleasantly as he entered. At the farther end of the store a woman sat at the desk writing. She apparently finished a sentence before she rose and came toward him. Then he saw that she was not the woman he had expected to find there. The pale little proprietress had been replaced by a girl midway of the twenties, a tall girl with very direct eyes, a good color and smooth brown hair. She wore a dark skirt and a simple shirtwaist, faultlessly laundered.

"Good morning!" she said. Her voice was cheerful, as well suited to the rainy dark spring morning as a robin's song.

Marean selected a paper, paid for it and made a remark about the weather.

After that the girl was always tending shop when Marean stopped for his morning paper. Always she wore the dark skirt and apparently the same exquisitely laundered waist; always her voice was cheerful, her smile bright. Marean began to notice things about her. Clearly she was an unusual type, most unlike the ordinary shop girl. One morning he asked her what had become of the McCanns that they were no longer in the store.

"Danny's sick upstairs," she explained, "and Mary is taking care of him. You did not, perhaps, know that they live in rooms above? Oh, it is not a real illness, though it makes Danny just as helpless. You see, he has always had trouble with his legs since they were amputated, and they have been especially bad lately. I think he has tried to walk too much. So at last he has had to take off his artificial limbs and go to bed. He is discontented and restless and won't let Mary leave him. So that is how I come to be here tending the store."

In course of time Marean found out that her name was Viola Heath and that she came from a little country town, that she liked the city very well, but did not know much about it, excepting the churches. She went to a new one every Sunday for variety. "I have Sundays off," she said.

"Can't you take an evening off also and go with me to the musical show to-morrow night?" Marean asked. He was speaking after thoughtful consideration. He had never seen a girl that interested him so much as did this one, and he believed he knew her well enough to ask her to go with him. She thought a moment, but he could see that she was pleased.

"I'll ask Mary," she said, "and let you know to-morrow morning. Will that do?"

Marean said that it would. He had to admit to himself that he was, however, a little anxious about the outcome. Suppose the McCanns should not let the girl off? Next morning he was a half hour earlier than usual at the shop and he carried with him a bunch of sweet peas.

"For your desk," he said as he gave them to her.

She took them eagerly and put her face to them.

"Thank you," she said. "I'll wear them to-night."

"Then you are going?" Marean's heart leaped.

"Mary says I may."

That was an evening ever to be remembered. The show was not very good, the company being of the summer stock variety, but that did not matter since it afforded such an admirable opportunity for becoming better acquainted. The sweet peas were followed by other floral offerings. Marean's calls at the shop became longer and more frequent. He and Viola became fast friends.

One Sunday they passed a long delightful afternoon in the park after they had attended church together and lunched at a restaurant, in a delightfully unconventional and friendly manner. That day Marean decided to propose to Viola the next time he saw her if he could make an opportunity.

But next morning when he stopped at the store as usual he found Mary tending it.

"Where is Miss Heath?" he asked.

"She's gone home—went this morning on an early train. Mary counted out his change carefully. "You see, my husband is better; he can come downstairs now. And Viola had to go."

Marean turned dejectedly away. Gone without saying one word to him! But he would follow her. She should see that she couldn't get away from him like that. At the door he paused to ask for her address.

"Just Sharon. You ask for Miss Heath. Do you think of going to see her?" Mary asked, innocently.

"I've got business down that way and I thought I might look her up," Marean lied.

"Viola is a sweet girl. Danny and I think our eyes of her," Mary said.

Marean meant to seek out Sharon at once, but it was two weeks before he could get away. One wilting June day he alighted at the Sharon station. The man on the platform of whom he asked information told him that Miss Heath lived on the next street—"to'ds the upper end."

Marean set forth. Sharon's population was scattered over the greatest possible area and the next street was the longest Marean, in his eagerness, ever remembered having traversed. There were no door plates to guide him. Near the end of the street he paused in bewilderment. He had failed to ask his informer what kind of a house Miss Heath lived in.

There was one set far back from the street upon a mighty lawn—an old-fashioned brick residence, with comfort and wealth peeping from every window. Of course she would not be there. That little drab house now looked more like what her home would be. He was on the point of going up and ringing the bell of the drab house when from a mass of rhododendron bushes on the lawn of the big brick house a figure emerged—a tall girl in blue who had shining brown hair. Marean never remembered how he got to her—whether he flew or ran or merely walked in a becoming manner. He know only that he stood at last before her with her hands in his.

"I've found you!" he exulted.

"But I thought you never would," she said, with a weary smile.

They walked across the turf to a shaded seat and sat down together. Presently it occurred to Marean to ask:

"What are you doing here, Viola?"

"Why, I live here," she said. "This is my home."

Marean stared.

"Your home!" he stammered. "But I thought—you tended shop for the McCanns."

"Oh, yes. Mary used to work for my mother. And it's my shop, you know. Danny bought it from me and he is trying his best to pay for it. It means so much to him and Mary. When he got sick she wrote to me and I went up to help them. It was great fun for me and it did them both a lot of good."

"But I thought you were poor—a glorified kind of shop girl," Marean said. "And I find that you not only own the shop, but a red brick residence beside. Don't you see, Viola? You are a princess and I a beggar. I came down here to ask you to marry me, but now I don't dare."

She laughed and leaned toward him, her wide gray eyes shining.

"Oh, you faint heart!" she said, softly. "If you won't ask me then—I shall have to ask you, for you see, Dick, dear, I'm just determined to marry you."

The DAIRY

DAIRY NOTES.

Do not allow any foul air around the cow stable or places where milk and cream are kept.

Even with the greatest care it is hard to keep the cow stable ventilated as it should be.

Cleanliness first, last and all the time, should be the watchword of every dairyman.

Milk and cream are the first foods of this world, and should be the purest and most sanitary product we consume.

To induce the greatest possible milk flow in heifers their calves should be removed from them the first week after calving.

By saving the calves from his best producing cows and breeding his best cows to high-grade males, any dairy farmer can build up a paying herd cheaply.

Vigilance and common-sense are what we need in the dairy, whether the product is sold to the city trade, made into butter on the farm, or used in the home kitchen.

The cows milked daily in the United States yield an average of 3,560 pounds of milk a year, which makes the annual total output for the country about 70,000,000,000 pounds.

It is well to consider that the heifer which is not worth more than $30 to $40 when two years old has not been of very much profit to the owner. Good stock does not eat more food than poor stock.

Don't forget that dairy success depends much upon the individuality of the cow. With the same feed and care in every way one cow may bring her owner a clear profit of $30 a year, while another will not pay expenses.

MILKING THE KICKING COW

Stout Chain Securely Fastened to Wall and Tied Around Animal's Leg Serves Purpose.

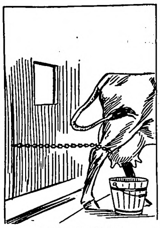
Get a lag screw five or six inches long and have the blacksmith put an eye and ring on the end. Bore a hole in studding directly behind the cow and fasten screw in place. Get a stout chain five or six-feet long with a hook at each end, one hook large enough that the chain will run through in a slip noose. Tie the cow in her stall, put slip noose around cow's leg, run the other end through ring in wall and draw back till the foot just stands on the ground. The cow soon finds out what you want, and in a few days you can milk in safety without the chain.



Securing the Kicker.

Hardy Dairy Breeds.

An occasional farmer offers as an excuse for not introducing into his herd some of the improved dairy blood the reason that he does not want a lot of thin-skinned, weak animals that cannot endure the cold and vigorous climate. What folly. This lack of so-called hardiness in the case of dairy stock is a matter of individuality rather than breed. A fine milch cow is not a Rocky mountain goat. The great Lambert family of Jerseys was developed in the far north and is as hardy as any dairy bred animal need be. The dairy breeds are inclined to hardiness rather than weakness, anyway.

Demand for Dairy Butter.

There is always a good local demand for really good farm dairy butter. There is a sentiment connected with home-made butter which is not attached to that made in butter factories which impels people to buy it at something above the going price.

Knowing Each Cow.

No man can succeed in dairying unless he knows that each cow is paying him a profit. A dairy cow that does not more than pay for feed and care is a robber that should not be allowed to live.

Muslin Window Best.

Cows should not stand facing a window unless the window be covered with muslin. By the way, the muslin window in a cow stable is better by far than glass. It gives a subdued light and furnishes ideal ventilation.

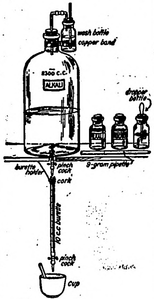
HOW TO USE AN ACIDEMETER

Directions for Arrangement of Apparatus to Determine Acidity in Milk and Cream.

In a convenient place erect a small shelf to support the large bottle. Cut a notch in the front or back of the shelf to allow the brass pipe to pass through.

Then add the contents of the small bottle of alkali to the large bottle, rinsing the small bottle several times, and each time pouring the rinsings into the large bottle. Then add soft water to the large bottle until the level reaches the mark filed on the bottle. You will then have 2,300 cubic centimeters of a one-tenth normal alkaline solution.

The small wash bottle attached to the neck of the larger one should be half filled with this solution. Then the rubber and glass connections are made between the two bottles.



Determining Acidity.

The burette holder is fastened underneath the shelf so that the alkali from the large bottle can enter it. The dropper bottle is then filled with indicator.

Measure with a pipette nine grams of the substance (milk, whey, cream, or starter) which you wish to test, and place it in the white cup. Add two drops of the phenolphthalein indicator. Then allow the alkaline solution to run into the cup from the burette, one drop at a time, until the fluid in the cup, which is being constantly stirred, shows a very faint pink color. By reading the grduations on the burette we can ascertain the amount of acid in the substance tested. Each one-tenth cubic centimeter of alkali represents one one-hundredth per cent. of acid in the fluid.

FASTENING THE COW'S TAIL

Illustrations Practically Explain Good Method of Treating Troublesome Animals.

I give a simple, but most convenient and effective method of fastening a cow's tail while milking, writes F. W. Browne in Orange Judd Farmer. The illustrations practically explain themselves. A is a bent wire hook made from a bit of ordinary binding wire. To this is attached loop, B. Behind each troublesome cow is fastened from above a piece of twine having a fair-sized loop at its lower end. These should not hang down lower than a point some six feet from the barn floor. To make the fastening, wind the end of loop B a couple of times around the animal's tail and draw A through it. Then catch the hook into one of the loops hanging from above. If the twine used is reasonably coarse the operation of making or undoing the fastening can be accomplished almost instantly. I have made use of the above device for several years, and have found it a great convenience.

"Creamery Shark."

A few years ago the "creamery shark" infested the land and organized creamery companies among farmers in order to equip the creameries with machinery at about five times what it was worth. This business died as such enterprises must. Now comes the condensary with golden-tinted stories of what farmers might make by organizing co-operative condensing factories.

Have You Tried?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Cresson, Pa.—"Five years ago I had a bad fall, and hurt myself inwardly. I was under a doctor's care for nine weeks, and when I stopped I grew worse again. I sent for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, took it as directed, and now I am a stout, hearty woman."—Mrs. Ella E. Aikey, Cresson, Pa.

Baird, Wash.—"A year ago I was sick with kidney and bladder troubles and female weakness. The doctors gave me up. All they could do was to just let me go as easily as possible. I was advised by friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am completely cured of my ills, and I am nearly sixty years old."—Mrs. Sarah Leighton, Baird, Wash.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

He was a doctor and was patiently waiting for his first patient. Thought he: "If the mountain will not come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain. And as patients will not seek me out I must needs seek them out." He strolled through the cheap market and presently saw a man buy six nice cucumbers. "Here's a chance!" said he, and followed him home. Patiently he waited for four long and lonely hours and about midnight the front door quickly opened, and the man dashed down the steps. He seized him by the arm and cried earnestly: "Do you want a doctor?" "No!" replied the man roughly. "Want more cucumbers!"

That Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is to-day and has, for over 40 years, been the standard Blood-purifyer, Stomach Strengthener and Liver Invigorator sold by druggists. It's not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known composition — a medicine so good that the best physicans prescribe it knowing that its ingredients, which are printed on its outside wrappers and attested under oath, are the best known to medical science for the diseases for which it is advised.

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not his greater profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

TEXAS RANGER SERVICE ☆ ☆

A CHAPTER FROM THE MEMOIRS OF CAPTAIN "BILL" McDONALD, OF TEXAS. By ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

THE early history of Texas was written in blood and fire. Her counties preserve the names of her martyrs. Parker, Coleman, Crockett, Fannin, Travis, Bowie and a hundred others have the map for their monument; their names are given daily utterance by those for whom their deeds have little meaning.

In the beginning, after the Indian tribes—friendly at first—became hostile, the warfare was almost solely with the savages. For a full half-century every settler who built his campfire on the frontier did so at the risk of his property and his scalp. Those who established homes and settlements must have been a daring race indeed, for raids upon horses and herds were always imminent and massacres were as regular as the seasons.

The mother of Chief Quanah Parker (still living) for whom the town of Quanah, Tex., was named, was Cynthia Ann Parker, a little white girl captured by the Tehaucano Indians, during a raid on what was known as the Austin colony, in 1836. A brief story of that raid will serve as an example of a thousand others of a similar sort. The Austin colony settled in what is now Grimes county and consisted of something more than a score of persons, including women and children. The Indians who dwelt in the neighborhood seemed friendly enough until a small party of unknown settlers came along and attempted to steal their horses. Immediate trouble was the result and the loss of Tehaucano friendship for the entire settlement. When the reader considers what follows, I believe I shall be forgiven for hoping that those newcomers who stirred up the first trouble received the sort of a reward which only an Indian would know how to confer.

As the Austin colony consisted chiefly of the Parker family, a rude fortification which they erected was called Fort Parker, a name that to-day still suggests something of shuddering horror to those who have heard its history.

It was a fair May morning when that history was made. The early risers noticed that a body of restless Indians had collected within about 400 yards of the fort. A white flag was hoisted by the savages to signify their peaceable intentions and a warrior approached as if for conference. Benjamin Parker, commander of the fort, went out to meet him. He came back presently with the word that he believed the Indians intended to fight. He returned, however, to the hostile camp, where he was at once set upon and literally chopped to pieces by the savages, who then with wild yells and blood-curdling warwhoops charged on the fort. Some of the inmates had already left the stockade. Others were trying to escape. John Parker and wife and a Mrs. Kellogg were overtaken a mile away. Parker was killed and scalped; his wife was spared and Mrs. Kellogg was made captive. Other members of the colony were butchered right and left and mutilated in the barbarous fashion which seems to give an Indian joy. Silas Parker was brutally killed and his two children, one of whom was the little girl, Cynthia Ann, were carried away. A Mrs. Plummer—daughter of Rev. James W. Parker—attempted to escape, carrying her little son in her arms. A huge painted savage, begrimed with dust and blood, overtook her, felled her with a hoe, and seizing her by the hair dragged her, still clinging to her child, back amid the butchery and torture of her friends. She and the others who were living were beaten with clubs and lashed with rawhide thongs. That night such of the captives as remained alive, and these included three children, were flung face down in the dust, their hands bound behind their backs, while the Indians, waving bloody scalps and shrieking, danced about them and beat them with their bows until the prisoners were strangling with their own blood. Later they took the infant child of Mrs. Plummer and slowly choked it before her eyes. When it was not quite dead they flung it again and again into the air and let it fall on the stones and earth. Then they tied a rope around its neck and threw its naked body into the hedges of prickly pear, from which they would jerk it fiercely with demoniacal yells. Finally they fastened the rope attached to its neck to the pommel of a saddle and rode round and round in a circle until the body of the child was literally in shreds. The poor fragments were then thrown into the mother's lap. For some reason the little girl, Cynthia Ann Parker, received better treatment, and lived. She grew up an Indian, forgot her own race and tongue, married a chief and became the mother of another chief, Quanah, surnamed Parker, to-day a friend of the white race.

It was the massacre of Fort Parker and events of a similar nature that resulted in the organization of the Texas Rangers. The Rangers were at first a semi-official body, locally enlisted and commanded, with regulations and duties not very clearly defined. Their purpose, however, was not in doubt. It was to defend life and property, and their chief qualifications were to be able to ride and shoot and stand up against the warfare of bloodthirsty savages.

"Exterminate the Indians" became a watchword in those days and the warfare that ensued and continued for 40 years can be compared with nothing in history unless it be with the fierce feuds of the ancient Scottish clans.

Early in 1836 Texas fought for and gained her independence, the only state in the Union to achieve such a triumph. In the following year the Texas congress recognized the Ranger movement and authorized several persons to raise Ranger companies to scour the country and annihilate marauding bands. Indians and low class Mexicans ("greasers") often consorted and the work, desperate and bloody, continued along the ever widening and westering frontier up to within a period easily remembered to-day by men not beyond middle age. Many names of those early Rangers have been preserved in Texas annals and in local song and traditions, and it would take as many volumes to recount their deeds.

As the years went by and the Indian was conquered or driven away, the Ranger's work changed, but his personality remained the same. The Ranger of 70 years ago is the Ranger of to-day—only his duties have altered. Long before the conquest of the savages a new element of disorder had entered the field. The desperado who had stirred up the first Indian troubles had survived and increased, to plunder his own race. The new and sparsely settled land invited every element of lawlessness and every refugee of crime. Local authorities would not or could not contend with them. It was for the Rangers, now much reduced in numbers, to solve the problem of destroying the disturber in their midst as they had driven the savage enemy from their frontiers. They were made peace officers and became a mounted constabulary, their duties being to quell disorders, to prevent crime and to bring criminals to justice. It was new work—less romantic than the wild Indian warfare of the frontier; work full of new dangers and what was still worse, it was work which, instead of inviting the encouragement and enthusiasm of a community, was of a sort to incur its displeasure, for the desperadoes of a neighborhood were either the heroes or the terrors of it and in either case to molest them was likely to prove unpopular. So it was, during this new order of things, that the Ranger service had to contend not only with the offenders but sometimes with the very people whom they were hoping to prctect. This made the work hard and discouraging, as work always is hard and discouraging when it is done amid enemies who wear the guise of friends.

For this kind of service Capt. Bill McDonald was eminently qualified. Already he had been appointed a special Ranger in Company B, commanded by Capt. S. A. McMurray, but his duties as U. S. deputy marshal in No-Man's Land and in the Cherokee strip had been his chief work. Nevertheless he had, on occasion, engaged in bandit hunting in his own state, during this period, either alone or in company with other officials, usually with good results.

Events of this sort kept Bill McDonald's name fresh in the Texans' minds and made him seem peculiarly eligible for regular service. The resignation of Capt. S. A. McMurray, who had long and bravely commanded Company B, became his opportunity and he hurried to Austin to try for that command.

His old friend, James Hogg, was now governor of the state. Since the settlement of their differences so long before there had been no discord of any kind and each had admired the other's career, proud to remember the friendship. Arriving at the capital now, McDonald was shown in to the governor's room. Greeting him, he said:

"Well, I hardly know what to call you, since you got to be governor. I don't know whether to call you 'Jim' or 'Mister.' I'll have to call you 'Governor,' I guess, as I want to get a place."

They shook hands cordially. Gov. Hogg said:

"What is it, Bill? What can I do for you?"

"Why," said McDonald, "I came down to get to be Ranger captain—to take McMurray's place in Company B."

Hogg looked at him reprovingly.

"Why didn't you let me know sooner?" he said. "There are two other applications for the place, both from good men, with long petitions and fine indorsements."

The applicant for position forgot his old friend's title.

"Why, Jam, I never thought of it until a day or two ago. I didn't have time to get indorsements, but I can get 'em, if you want them. I have been working mostly in No-Man's Land and the Territory lately, but have done work in Texas too, and I can get about any kind of indorsement you want."

Hogg laughed. He had a robust sense of humor.

"That's all right, Bill," he said; "you have already got the best indorsement I ever saw."

McDonald looked puzzled.

"I don't understand," he said, "I didn't know anybody knew I wanted the place."

"All the same you have got the indorsements," insisted Hogg.

He turned to his desk and got out a bundle of letters.

"Look over these," he said. "You probably know some of the writers."

McDonald took the letters and read them one after another. They were from well-known criminals, their lawyers, their friends and their associates. They had been received by Hogg while he was attorney general and each was a protest and a complaint against McDonald, declaring him to be a ruthless and tyrannical official, whose chief recreation was hounding good citizens for the sake of revenge or glory, and adding that it was not unusual for him to put the said citizens in jail or in box cars, declaring further that he sometimes hitched them to posts with chains and that he was a menace to legitimate settlement and society in general.

McDonald looked over some of these documents and grinned.

"That's so, Jim," he said, "I do put 'em in box cars when there ain't a jail; the way I used to do back in Mineola—you recollect, when the jail was full—and I lariat 'em out with a chain and a post when there ain't a box car handy; but I don't reckon they're innocent none."

Hogg nodded.

"Those indorsements are good enough for me," he said. "They carry the flavor of conviction. I appoint you Ranger captain on the strength of them."

McDonald returned to Quanah with his appointment as captain of "Company B, Frontier battalion." The headquarters of the company were then at Amarillo, in the southern part of Potter county, near the Randall county line. This was almost the exact center of the Panhandle and in a locality sparsely settled, untamed and lawless.

Since the early days of "Ranging" there had not been much change in Ranger regulations and equipment. The character of the work, however, had changed and the force had been reduced in numbers. Company B now consisted of only eight members all told. These were supposed to range over all that vast section known as the Panhandle and were subject to orders that might take them to any other portion of the state where their assistance was needed.

It was in January, 1891, that Bill McDonald received his appointment as Ranger captain and his first official service was not long delayed. He arrived at Amarillo about midnight and was received with congratulations, for the news had traveled ahead of him. He was tired, however, and the hour was late, so he presently slipped away to bed. He had hardly fallen asleep when he was rudely awakened and handed a telegram which stated that the Indians had made a raid across the border and were killing and robbing in Hall county, near Salisbury.

Capt. McDonald read the telegram and laughed. There had been no Indian troubles in Texas for a number of years. White renegades there were in plenty, but Indian outbreaks had long since ceased.

"I guess the boys are trying to have some fun with me on my first night," he said, and turned in once more to sleep. But a few minutes later another telegram came; and another; this time from the superintendent of the railroad company—a Mr. Good, whom McDonald knew as a man not given to practical joking.

The Ranger captain dressed himself, hurried over to the telegraph office and got the operator there to talk over the wire to the operator where the scare had originated. He learned that it seemed to be genuine and that everybody was leaving the neighborhood.

Still Capt. Bill could not believe it a genuine Indian incursion. Hall county was in the second tier from the Territory line and the Indians would have had to cross Childress county to get to it. He did not believe that they would undertake to do this or that they could have undertaken it without previous alarms. Still it was his duty to investigate. He got a special train, loaded in men, horses and pack mules, and set out on a hunt for Indians. It was about a hundred miles to Salisbury and they reached there early in the day. Not a soul was in sight anywhere. The inhabitants were hidden, some in dugouts, some in haystacks, some in the tall grass. Here and there, as the train pulled in, McDonald saw a head stick out from a sod house far out on the prairie, then suddenly disappear, like a prairie dog dropping into his hole. He set out to interview some of these wary settlers and learned that the Indian alarm had been given by a man—a new settler just arrived in the country—who had ridden his horse to death and lost one of his children—having left him far behind somewhere—in his wild eagerness to escape the savages who, he declared, were burning and scalping not far away. Capt. Bill found this man and after a little talk with him was convinced that what he had seen was nothing more nor less than some cowboys on a round-up, disporting themselves around their campfire at night, as cowboys will—dancing and capering in the mad manner of young plainsmen whose ideas of amusement are elemental and whose opportunities for social diversions are few. The man and the neighborhood remained unconvinced, so it was decided to visit the scene of the disturbance.

Horses, men and pack mules unloaded themselves from the freight car and went racing over the prairie, the pack mules, as usual, plunging and braying with tail in air, their tinware clattering in a manner calculated to put a whole tribe of Indians into a panic and send them capering across the eastern horizon into their own domain. But there were no Indians. It was as Capt. Bill had thought; a gang of cowboys, the night before, had rounded up some cattle, killed a beef, carried it to their camp nearby, where they had built a great fire and roasted it, doing a wild war dance of celebration and shooting off their six-shooters in their prodigal expression of joy. Viewed from a little distance, through a sort of mirage condition which had exaggerated the whole effect, the scene to the newcomers was a horrifying picture of savages about a burning home, with the inhabitants fleeing for their lives.

The man who had just moved in had stampeded for his own safety and started a general alarm, which did not subside even when the cowboys themselves came in and testified to the truth. The panic spread throughout that section of the country and other reports of Indian outbreaks were circulated, becoming magnified until it was believed that the Indians had broken out and were making a general raid on the Panhandle. The inhabitants of one town, south of Amarillo, threw up breastworks, got behind them, and put out pickets in preparation for the arrival of the Indians. Every man seen loping across the prairie was reported as an Indian, and all this happened as late as 1891, when there had been no Indian outbreaks for years and when there was scarcely a possibility of anything of the sort. It was a big joke, of course, afterward, but it seemed no joke at the time and it was Bill McDonald's initiation as captain.

TURN PEARY DOWN

House Committee Refuses to Honor Pole Discoverer.

Representative Macon Openly Hints He Has Doubts Whether Naval Officer Found "Top of the World."

Washington.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook no doubt has gotten much solace out of the fact that the subcommittee of the house naval committee has refused to bestow a reward upon Commander Robert E. Peary.

The house committee wants proof. Peary has refused to submit it for the reason that it would interfere with his lectures and magazine articles. Evidently Peary thinks more of the money he can make by writing and lecturing than he does of a reward bestowed by congress, so there the matter rests. Representative Macon of Arkansas was the chief objector to conferring congressional honor upon Peary until the commander produces the proof of his claim that he found the north pole.

"I confess that I am exceedingly skeptical about Mr. Peary's ever having discovered the pole," declared Mr. Macon before the committee, "and I am going to protest against any honor being conferred upon him by congress until he has established beyond a reasonable doubt that he did discover it, and it must be established in the open and not in the dark." He expressed himself as being "indignant at the thought of being called upon as a representative of the American people to confer a high honor upon any one of its citizens in the dark." All legislation by congress, he said, ought to be open and above board.

Mr. Macon said he wanted to direct attention to one "discrepancy" in Mr. Peary's story. This was the speed which the explorer declared he made from the time Capt. Bartlett left him until he reached the pole. Mr. Peary said that for five days he made 26.4 miles per day; but, Mr. Macon said, this appeared very singular in view of the fact that the Peary party had made but 9.06 miles per day up to the time Bartlett left.

Diagram of Peary's Route.

"The astonishing part of Mr. Peary's statement," said Mr. Macon, "is the number of miles he traveled every day after Bartlett left him and when no white man was with him as witness, his only companion being his negro valet and four Eskimos. His greatest marches, singularly, were all north of the Bartlett camp. From that time forward, going to the pole and returning to Cape Columbia, he claims to have made an average of 26.4 miles per day until he reached the pole, 44 miles per day on his way back from the pole to Bartlett's camp and 28.6 miles per day from Bartlett's camp to Cape Columbia.

Mr. Macon declared that Mr. Peary's own statements showed that he equaled this speed but twice during the entire journey to the pole. The first day he started from land he made 26 miles in 14 hours of forced march, "which Mr. Peary has told us was about the limit of human endurance."

Mr. Macon quoted Lieut. Shackleton, Gen. Greely and others to show that "ten or twelve miles per day, or slightly more, perhaps, is considered the limit of human endurance, traveling over polar seas."

The only member of the committee who did not vote to defer action on the bill was Representative Englebright of California, who said he was convinced that Mr. Peary had discovered the pole and that the committee had sufficient proofs before it.

Representative Bates of Pennsylvania, heretofore considered a supporter of Peary, offered the resolution, which was adopted, declaring that the committee must have further proof before proceeding.

Uncle Sam Has New Dishes in Cook Book

WASHINGTON.—Are you hungry? And do you think the cost of living is too high? Then listen.

Go out to the back yard and run a nice fat, unsplintered sirloin bone into the corner near the fence. If it squeaks, sprinkle a few grains of salt and cayenne pepper on the exposed spots. Stop all further cries by covering both ends with a bit of dough—boil it a little while and serve on toast. It's great! It's cheap and also it is nutritious. Uncle Sam, culinary expert, says so, and he ought to know.

Uncle Samuel's new cook book is just out and it gives cards and spades, a couple of right bowers and also a few straight flushes to the high-priced beefs of the country and even then comes out winner.

The title of the new cookbook is "Economical Use of Meat in the Home," and it is modestly listed as "Farmers' Bulletin 391."

It was prepared by C. F. Langworthy, Ph. D., expert in charge of nutrition investigations in the office of experiment stations, and Miss Caroline L. Hunt, A. B..

Uncle Sam puts his official foot right down on the vegetarian craze and comes out boldly as an advocate of the food values of meats.

"For many reasons," says the volume, "it seems fair to conclude with the majority of the physiologists that this widespread habit of eating animal foods is the result of experience and that it has its foundation in bodily needs."

"When rendering the drippings of fat meat, add a small onion (do not cut it), a few leaves of summer savory and thyme, a teaspoonful of salt and a little pepper. This is enough for a pint of fat. Keep the drippings covered and in a cool place."

Maybe you never knew about braising ribs of beef, broiling the beef ribs or sirloin bones and sprinkling them with salt and cayenne pepper. Well, try it. Also try boiling marrow bones with a bit of dough at the end and then serving them on toast.

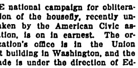
In utilizing the cheaper cuts of meat the following is recommended:

Casserole Roast.—Three or four pounds of round rump of beef; a slice of salt pork; a few pepper corns; one-fourth each of a carrot, a turnip, an onion and a head of celery cut into small slices.

Mock Venison.—Cut cold mutton into thin slices and heat in a brown sauce made according to the following proportions: Two tablespoonsful butter, two tablespoonsful flour, one tablespoonful of bottled meat sauce (whichever is preferred), one tablespoonful red currant jelly and one cupful water or stock.

Brown the flour in the butter, add the water or stock slowly, and keep stirring. Then add the jelly and meat sauce and let the mixture boil up well.

Nation-Wide Anti-Fly Fight Started



THE national campaign for obliteration of the housefly, recently undertaken by the American Civic association, is on in earnest. The organization's office is in the Union Trust building in Washington, and the crusade is under the direction of Edward Hatch, Jr., of Lord & Taylor, New York.

The department of agriculture plans an immediate country-wide crusade. Hundreds of scientists, aided by an army of laborers, tons of chemicals and many mechanical devices, will attack the pest.

Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the bureau of entomology, told part of the plans to the house committee on expenditures. The first fight will be begun in rural districts. A special farmers' bulletin is being prepared, which not only will give fly-killing prescriptions, but will display in colors the diseases spread by the fly.

The moving-picture feature, introduced in Washington to illustrate lectures by government officials and others, has scored. Chairman Hatch has perfected arrangements whereby motion views will be shown in theaters all over the country. He said hundreds of requests for the moving picture and stereopticon show had been received from universities, colleges, schools and churches and Y. M. C. A. branches.

The health board of Florida has prohibited the keeping of horses or mules within 500 feet of a dwelling, unless precautions are taken to prevent breeding of flies. Similar rules have been passed by Georgia, Wisconsin and Indiana.

The American Consumers' league has joined the American Civic association in fighting the fly evil, as have many state anti-consumption associations. Mrs. Robert S. Bradley, chairman of the food committee of the Woman's Municipal league of Boston, is spreading the propaganda in New England.

Owners of stables here who violate sanitary regulations will be prosecuted, and householders are advised to put their fly screens in shape and help the health department.

Bar Tips in the Senate Restaurant

DURN SUCH A PLACE
NO TIPS GO HERE

ON THE menu card of the senate restaurant there is a stamped admonition not to tip the waiters. Now, this restaurant used to be a concession. Then the government took it over and paid the steward to run it. It is supposed to be under the supervision of the committee on rules. It cannot be learned whether the committee reported out this no-tipping rule. Anyway it is supposed to go. But what is this? A senator has finished his luncheon. He gives his waiter a bill. The waiter brings the change. There is a pause while the senator counts, jingles and folds his money. Then there is a motion toward the waiter with a deft turn of the senatorial wrist.

"Green-Eyed Monster" Invades Congress

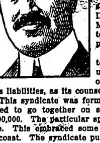
JEALOUSY between the house and senate has broken out in a new form. This time it has nothing to do with procedure or legislation. It has been discovered that Representative Adamson of Georgia can dispose of more food at one sitting than any other member of the house. Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia, who stands high on the list of millionaires in the senate, has the reputation of being able to eat more at one meal than most of his colleagues can get away with at two sittings. Mr. Adamson is strongly backed by the southern members of the house while the senators are willing to back Mr. Elkins. The sporty members of congress are anxious to arrange a contest at which the question will be settled. The plan is to have Dick Shaw, the caterer of the senate restaurant, make all the necessary arrangements.

The "dope sheets" in the possession of senators seem to show that Mr. Elkins is in better form than Mr. Adamson. His best performance of which there is an authenticated record was made at Hot Springs, Va., where he went to see Mr. Taft, before the latter became president. The morning of his arrival the senator ordered two plates of peaches and cream, a box of crackers and a quart of milk, a whole chicken, broiled; half a dozen "flannel cakes" and a large pot of coffee. As he left the table the senator remarked that it was strange how his appetite disappeared as soon as he left his home in West Virginia.

Mr. Adamson, like Mr. Elkins, likes to begin the day with a good breakfast. Whenever he appears in the house restaurant the chef is tipped off. In a short time there is placed before the Georgian a large platter containing half a dozen immense sausages and enough potatoes to feed a whole family.

WHO'S WHO—AND WHY

SENATE'S WEALTHIEST MAN



Senator Simon Guggenheim, brother of the members of the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate whose operations in Alaska have figured so prominently in the Ballinger-Pinchot-Glavis inquiry is regarded as the wealthiest man in the upper branch of the United States congress. The value of this syndicate's holdings in Alaska alone has been estimated at $2,[illegible]00,000,000. There are seven of the Guggenheim brothers and three, Daniel, Murray and S. R., with the J. Pierpont Morgan company compose the syndicate. Senator Guggenheim's personal fortune has been placed at $200,000,000, but it is probably more.

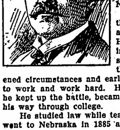
The syndicate is a novel one. It has no charter, and it has never been incorporated. It exists under an understanding something in the nature of a "gentlemen's agreement." It assumes enormous liabilities, as its counsel naively expressed it, "just by word of mouth."

This syndicate was formed in 1906. The Guggenheims and Mr. Morgan agreed to go together on some Alaskan speculations. Each side pledged $5,000,000. The particular speculation then in view was the Bonanza copper mine. This embraced some highly valuable property about 190 miles from the coast. The syndicate put up cash and bought what it wanted.

Up to date the syndicate has built 102 miles of railroads in Alaska at a cost of about $10,000,000. About 90 miles remain to be constructed of the original project, to cost $5,000,000 more. Spurs are contemplated to reach new properties which have since been acquired, so that the total cost of the road promises to be about $20,000,000.

Mr. Steele, counsel for the syndicate, testified that he thought there was about 50,000,000 tons of coal in sight on the land of the claimants, and that this would net a profit of about $25,000,000. Following up this lead, Senator Beveridge asked some questions about the values of coal lands in sight of the syndicate's railroad. Mr. Birch talked glibly of gigantic values which made the heads of the members swim. He said he thought there was $900,000,000 worth of coal in that one district alone. It could be mined, he thought, at a net profit of $200,000,000. Senator Beveridge believes Mr. Birch underestimated the values. The Indianian says the property probably is worth [illegible] times this amount, or nearly $2,000,000,000.

MAN WHO DOWNED CANNON



Washington.—George W[illegible] Norris, representative from the Fifth district of Nebraska, who started the battle that curbed the power of Speaker Cannon after one of the fiercest fights ever witnessed on the floor of the house, is one of the country's self-made men.

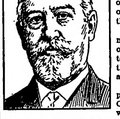
Election to the senate may be Mr. Norris' reward for the winning fight he put up, talk of his succeeding Elmer J. Burkett as senator from Nebraska already being heard.

Representative Norris started out in life's battle under a handicap just as he entered the battle against Cannon rule with the odds against him. He was born on a farm in Sandusky county, O., in 1861. His father died when Mr. Norris was a small child and his eldest brother was killed in the war. This left Mr. Norris' mother in straitened circumstances and early in life the man who won against Cannon had to work and work hard. He got used to hard knocks from the first, but he kept up the battle, became a school teacher and earned the money to pay his way through college.

He studied law while teaching and was admitted to the bar in 1883. He went to Nebraska in 1885 and settled at McCook. He became prosecuting attorney and served two terms as a district judge. He was elected to congress in 1889. Of his battle for a change of the house rules Mr. Norris said:

"My fight was not against Cannon; it was against Cannon's control of the committee on rules, and the injustices likely to flow therefrom. With the assistance of others who believed with me that the power of the speaker should be curbed and restricted, and through Democratic aid, we have won. I am making no warfare on the Republican party. I am a Republican, working for party success. I believe what we Republicans have done will make for party success."

SCHIFF CALLS "JAP" ENEMY

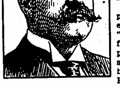


"The most difficult problem the nation has to deal with is the far east problem," said Jacob H. Schiff, the New York financier, in a recent speech. "I am sorry to say it, but we are in danger of war over this same question. As a friend of Japan, one who helped to finance its late war, I regret this inevitable conclusion.

"During the last few weeks a test has been made in the direction of finding out the attitude of the nation toward us. This test, I must say to my personal mortification, developed the fact that Japan has joined hands with the enemy of all mankind.

"Russia and Japan have evidently one purpose—at present, at least—and that is to keep China as a lesser state. And perfidious Albion, which has always professed to be an enlightening friend of mankind, is a party to this coalition. If we are not careful, if we do not show the right statesmanship, we will be drawn into a controversy with this arrangement in a most disagreeable manner.

NEW MASSACHUSETTS SOLON



Eugene Noble Foss of Boston, who has just been elected to congress on the tariff issue in a Democratic landslide in the Fourteenth Massachusetts district, is head of the B. F. Sturtevant Company, with branches in Philadelphia, Chicago, New York and London. He was born in 1858 in West Berkshire, Vt., and is a brother of Congressman George Edmund Foss of Chicago.

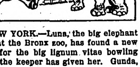
In 1902 Mr. Foss was a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress from the Eleventh district of Massachusetts on a platform of "Canadian reciprocity, free iron, free coal and free hides." He won, but was defeated at the polls, partly through the growth of Democratic sentiment in the district and partly through the hostility of some opponents within his own party. He then began an educational campaign upon the subject of Canadian reciprocity, which made his name and the issue known all over New England.

In the spring of 1904 Mr. Foss sought to have the Republican state convention adopt a resolution favoring reciprocity with Canada and became a candidate for delegate at large to the Republican national convention, but "machine" influences were too strong for him and he was defeated. Again he was beaten for congress.

Mr. Foss turned to Democracy last year and became a candidate for lieutenant-governor. He was beaten by 8,000 votes. His congressional district, in which he succeeds the late William C. Levering, includes Brockton, a shoe manufacturing center. It never before has elected a Democrat to congress.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

This Elephant Has Odd Dinner Call



NEW YORK.—Luna, the big elephant at the Bronx zoo, has found a new use for the big lignum vitae bowling ball the keeper has given her. Gunda, her husband, has a big cage in the other corner of the building, but Luna can never catch sight of him. So to amuse her and keep her from making too many eyes at Pete, the fat hippopotamus, whose cage is across the room, the keeper got her a bowling ball bigger than a man's head.

Luna never learned to bowl, and the round, hard, inedible thing was a curiosity to her.

When they put an empty beer barrel in her cage for her to play with she solved the mystery by finding that if she blew into the bung hole it made a whistling noise that attracted the attention of Pete and sometimes woke him out of an afternoon nap, but this hard, round polished ball was no good as far as she could see.

Now Luna is particular about her meals. If her hay isn't brought at the precise moment she toots and trumpets and makes a fuss.

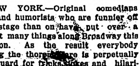
The other day when she got hungry and ordered her dinner and it didn't come she flew into a passion and walked rapidly about sputtering and tooting. Suddenly her feet touched the big bowling ball. She picked it up and fairly hurled it against the wall with all her force.

"Bangety-bang-whang!" it went, bounding from side to side and filling the elephant house with clamor. She stopped, amazed, and picked it up again.

"Bang-whang-bangety-bang!" went the ball, and the kepers, thinking that she was tearing down the pen, came on the run.

Seeing that at last she had attracted attention she kept throwing the ball with energy till the keper brought her dinner. Now, when she wants to eat she throws the ball against the wall until her order is brought, and it always comes in a hurry.

Story of Gotham Peddler's Revenge



NEW YORK.—Original comedians and humorists who are funnier off the stage than on have put over a great many things along Broadway this season. As the result everybody along the thoroughfare is perpetually on guard for tricks, jokes and hilarious quips. [illegible] thing has gone so far that a Comanche Indian, having drunk from a Wild West show, would probably be taken for a joking actor made up for a bit of fun, and you couldn't convince the mob that the savage was a real one.

An instance of this belief was shown in front of the Cadillac, where a number of players and their friends had gathered for harmless discussion. Up to the group came a typical peddler. His derby hat came down over his ears and rested on the bridge of his nose, his coat and trousers fitted him, not exactly as they do upon the stage, a scrubby black beard jutted from his chin and a little tray full of collar buttons hung from his shoulders.

"Gentlemens," said he, "vouldn't you buy somedings?"

A wild shout of laughter came from the crowd and several of them whacked the peddler on the back. "Great stuff, old man, great stuff," they whooped. "Best make-up we ever saw. Pretty near stung us, but we are wise to that crepe beard, old boy!"

The peddler stood bewildered.

"Gentlemens," said he, "you all been schicker, I thinks. Vat funny business iss dis you makes it mit me?"

Another shout of glee.

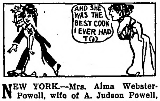
He broke away, followed by enthusiastic cheers, and not even when he returned with Officer Hughey Jones could the crowd be convinced that it wasn't some joyous actor playing the best impersonated joke that has been seen in years on Broadway. It was no joke, however—the peddler was as real as Essex street, and the crowd had to buy 90 cents' worth of his collar buttons before he would be pacified.

Two Poor Girls Palmed Off as Rich



AND SHE WAS THE BEST COOK I EVER HAD TOO

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Alma Webster-Powell, wife of A. Judson Powell, a rich piano manufacturer of Brooklyn, was the chief speaker at a suffragette mass meeting and told this story:

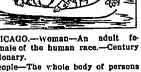
"I brought two young women—poor girls—from the east side to my residence last week, and after dressing them in my most beautiful gowns, introduced them into a select, aristocratic assemblage that had come to my home for the evening. Although members of a poor, self-supporting class, these two young women, genteel and nicely educated, deported themselves during the reception so charmingly that two gentlemen present—who, like the other guests, possessed no knowledge of the true social position of the girls—were much smitten with them and requested permission to call on them in their homes. One of these men was a count, the other was possessed of riches to the extent of $2,000,000.

"All of this strengthens my claim that wealth and false pride alone make the social barrier. The wearer of a shirtwaist is good enough for me."

Mrs. Powell said it was not the first time she had fooled her friends by introducing among them persons not affluent like themselves.

"Once," she said, "I dressed up my cook Mary in one of my gowns and she mingled with my guests. Her figure is beautiful, and she made a stunning appearance. But she did not feel at ease in the strange company and stayed only a short time. Back to the kitchen she went."

Women Are Not "People" Now 'tis Said



WE'RE IN THE SAME BOAT, LO

CHICAGO.—Woman—An adult female of the human race.—Century Dictionary.

People—The whole body of persons who compose a community, a tribe, race or nation.—Century Dictionary.

But behold—

Women are not people.—Prof. Charles Zueblin of the University of Chicago.

Whatever may be the feminine status, politically or otherwise, the declaration of Prof. Zueblin in a lecture at Music hall, that women, under present governmental ideals are not people, has served to precipitate an unprecedented commotion in the ranks of the fair sex.

"If we are disfranchised to the extent that we may not even be numbered among the people, then what are we?" was the cry that went up from club women, suffragettes, pretty women, plain women, old women and young women alike.

And Prof. Zueblin's answer, intrenched behind a bulwark of logic, smashing traditions and upsetting definitions compiled by the lexicographers, is this:

"When we analyze the political platitudes that we make almost a part of our being we discover that women are not people. Our great platitude, Lincoln's definition of democracy, 'a government of the people, by the people and for the people,' serves, without further ado to put women entirely out of the people class."

"From Prof. Zueblin's interpretation of the situation it would appear that we are like the Indians," said Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of schools. "The Indians don't vote and neither do we, but personally I am more interested in the study of children than in the status of my sex."

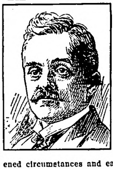
Mr. Steele, counsel for the syndicate, testified that he thought there was about 50,000,000 tons of coal in sight on the land of the claimants, and that this would net a profit of about $25,000,000. Following up this lead, Senator Beveridge asked some questions about the values of coal lands in sight of the syndicate's railroad. Mr. Birch talked glibly of gigantic values which made the heads of the members swim. He said he thought there was $900,000,000 worth of coal in that one district alone. It could be mined, he thought, at a net profit of $200,000,000. Senator Beveridge believes Mr. Birch underestimated the values. The Indianian says the property probably is worth three times this amount, or nearly $2,000,000,000.

MAN WHO DOWNED CANNON



Washington.—George W[illegible] Norris, representative from the Fifth district of Nebraska, who started the battle that curbed the power of Speaker Cannon after one of the fiercest fights ever witnessed on the floor of the house, is one of the country's self-made men.

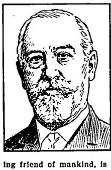
Election to the senate may be Mr. Norris' reward for the winning fight he put up, talk of his succeeding Elmer J. Burkett as senator from Nebraska already being heard.

Representative Norris started out in life's battle under a handicap just as he entered the battle against Cannon rule with the odds against him. He was born on a farm in Sandusky county, O., in 1861. His father died when Mr. Norris was a small child and his eldest brother was killed in the war. This left Mr. Norris' mother in straitened circumstances and early in life the man who won against Cannon had to work and work hard. He got used to hard knocks from the first, but he kept up the battle, became a school teacher and earned the money to pay his way through college.

He studied law while teaching and was admitted to the bar in 1883. He went to Nebraska in 1885 and settled at McCook. He became prosecuting attorney and served two terms as a district judge. He was elected to congress in 1889. Of his battle for a change of the house rules Mr. Norris said:

"My fight was not against Cannon; it was against Cannon's control of the committee on rules, and the injustices likely to flow therefrom. With the assistance of others who believed with me that the power of the speaker should be curbed and restricted, and through Democratic aid, we have won. I am making no warfare on the Republican party. I am a Republican, working for party success. I believe what we Republicans have done will make for party success."

SCHIFF CALLS "JAP" ENEMY

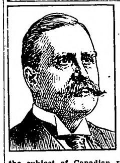


"The most difficult problem the nation has to deal with is the far east problem," said Jacob H. Schiff, the New York financier, in a recent speech. "I am sorry to say it, but we are in danger of war over this same question. As a friend of Japan, one who helped to finance its late war, I regret this inevitable conclusion.

"During the last few weeks a test has been made in the direction of finding out the attitude of the nation toward us. This test, I must say to my personal mortification, developed the fact that Japan has joined hands with the enemy of all mankind.

"Russia and Japan have evidently one purpose—at present, at least—and that is to keep China as a lesser state. And perfidious Albion, which has always professed to be an enlightening friend of mankind, is a party to this coalition. If we are not careful, if we do not show the right statesmanship, we will be drawn into a controversy with this arrangement in a most disagreeable manner.

NEW MASSACHUSETTS SOLON



Eugene Noble Foss of Boston, who has just been elected to congress on the tariff issue in a Democratic landslide in the Fourteenth Massachusetts district, is head of the B. F. Sturtevant Company, with branches in Philadelphia, Chicago, New York and London. He was born in 1858 in West Berkshire, Vt., and is a brother of Congressman George Edmund Foss of Chicago.

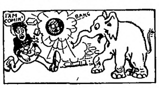
In 1902 Mr. Foss was a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress from the Eleventh district of Massachusetts on a platform of "Canadian reciprocity, free iron, free coal and free hides." He won, but was defeated at the polls, partly through the growth of Democratic sentiment in the district and partly through the hostility of some opponents within his own party. He then began an educational campaign upon the subject of Canadian reciprocity, which made his name and the issue known all over New England.

In the spring of 1904 Mr. Foss sought to have the Republican state convention adopt a resolution favoring reciprocity with Canada and became a candidate for delegate at large to the Republican national convention, but "machine" influences were too strong for him and he was defeated. Again he was beaten for congress.

Mr. Foss turned to Democracy last year and became a candidate for lieutenant-governor. He was beaten by 8,000 votes. His congressional district, in which he succeeds the late William C. Levering, includes Brockton, a shoe manufacturing center. It never before has elected a Democrat to congress.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

This Elephant Has Odd Dinner Call



NEW YORK.—Luna, the big elephant at the Bronx zoo, has found a new use for the big lignum vitae bowling ball the keeper has given her. Gunda, her husband, has a big cage in the other corner of the building, but Luna can never catch sight of him. So to amuse her and keep her from making too many eyes at Pete, the fat hippopotamus, whose cage is across the room, the keeper got her a bowling ball bigger than a man's head.

Luna never learned to bowl, and the round, hard, inedible thing was a curiosity to her.

When they put an empty beer barrel in her cage for her to play with she solved the mystery by finding that if she blew into the bung hole it made a whistling noise that attracted the attention of Pete and sometimes woke him out of an afternoon nap, but this hard, round polished ball was no good as far as she could see.

Now Luna is particular about her meals. If her hay isn't brought at the precise moment she toots and trumpets and makes a fuss.

The other day when she got hungry and ordered her dinner and it didn't come she flew into a passion and walked rapidly about sputtering and tooting. Suddenly her feet touched the big bowling ball. She picked it up and fairly hurled it against the wall with all her force.

"Bangety-bang-whang!" it went, bounding from side to side and filling the elephant house with clamor. She stopped, amazed, and picked it up again.

"Bang-whang-bangety-bang!" went the ball, and the kepers, thinking that she was tearing down the pen, came on the run.

Seeing that at last she had attracted attention she kept throwing the ball with energy till the keper brought her dinner. Now, when she wants to eat she throws the ball against the wall until her order is brought, and it always comes in a hurry.

Story of Gotham Peddler's Revenge

POOR MAKE-UP THAT

NEW YORK.—Original comedians and humorists who are funnier off the stage than on have put over a great many things along Broadway this season. As the result everybody along the thoroughfare is perpetually on guard for tricks, jokes and hilarious quips. The thing has gone so far that a Comanche Indian, raving drunk from a Wild West show, would probably be taken for a joking actor made up for a bit of fun, and you couldn't convince the mob that the savage was a real one.

An instance of this belief was shown in front of the Cadillac, where a number of players and their friends had gathered for harmless discussion. Up to the group came a typical peddler. His derby hat came down over his ears and rested on the bridge of his nose, his coat and trousers fitted him, not exactly as they do upon the stage, a scrubby black beard jutted from his chin and a little tray full of collar buttons hung from his shoulders.

"Gentlemens," said he, "vouldn't you buy somedings?"

A wild shout of laughter came from the crowd and several of them whacked the peddler on the back. "Great stuff, old man, great stuff," they whooped. "Best make-up we ever saw. Pretty near stung us, but we are wise to that crepe beard, old boy!"

The peddler stood bewildered.

"Gentlemens," said he, "you all been schicker, I thinks. Vat funny business iss dis you makes it mit me?"

Another shout of glee.

He broke away, followed by enthusiastic cheers, and not even when he returned with Officer Hughey Jones could the crowd be convinced that it wasn't some joyous actor playing the best impersonated joke that has been seen in years on Broadway. It was no joke, however—the peddler was as real as Essex street, and the crowd had to buy 90 cents' worth of his collar buttons before he would be pacified.

Two Poor Girls Palmed Off as Rich

AND SHE WAS THE BEST COOK I EVER HAD TOO

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Alma Webster-Powell, wife of A. Judson Powell, a rich piano manufacturer of Brooklyn, was the chief speaker at a suffragette mass meeting and told this story:

"I brought two young women—poor girls—from the east side to my residence last week, and after dressing them in my most beautiful gowns, introduced them into a select, aristocratic assemblage that had come to my home for the evening. Although members of a poor, self-supporting class, these two young women, genteel and nicely educated, deported themselves during the reception so charmingly that two gentlemen present—who, like the other guests, possessed no knowledge of the true social position of the girls—were much smitten with them and requested permission to call on them in their homes. One of these men was a count, the other was possessed of riches to the extent of $2,000,000.

"All of this strengthens my claim that wealth and false pride alone make the social barrier. The wearer of a shirtwaist is good enough for me."

Mrs. Powell said it was not the first time she had fooled her friends by introducing among them persons not affluent like themselves.

"Once," she said, "I dressed up my cook Mary in one of my gowns and she mingled with my guests. Her figure is beautiful, and she made a stunning appearance. But she did not feel at ease in the strange company and stayed only a short time. Back to the kitchen she went."

Women Are Not "People" Now 'tis Said

WE'RE IN THE SAME BOAT, LO

CHICAGO.—Woman—An adult female of the human race.—Century Dictionary.

People—The whole body of persons who compose a community, a tribe, race or nation.—Century Dictionary.

But behold—

Women are not people.—Prof. Charles Zueblin of the University of Chicago.

Whatever may be the feminine status, politically or otherwise, the declaration of Prof. Zueblin in a lecture at Music hall, that women, under present governmental ideals are not people, has served to precipitate an unprecedented commotion in the ranks of the fair sex.

"If we are disfranchised to the extent that we may not even be numbered among the people, then what are we?" was the cry that went up from club women, suffragettes, pretty women, plain women, old women and young women alike.

And Prof. Zueblin's answer, intrenched behind a bulwark of logic, smashing traditions and upsetting definitions compiled by the lexicographers, is this:

"When we analyze the political platitudes that we make almost a part of our being we discover that women are not people. Our great platitude, 'Lincoln's definition of democracy, 'a government of the people, by the people and for the people,' serves, without further ado to put women entirely out of the people class."

"From Prof. Zueblin's interpretation of the situation it would appear that we are like the Indians," said Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of schools. "The Indians don't vote and neither do we, but personally I am more interested in the study of children than in the status of my sex."

FOR A NEW EDUCATION.

An eminent upholder of dramatic art, apparently in dispair of holding said art high enough by the use of existing facilities has offered to be one of ten men to make up a fund of $250,000 with which to endow a Chair of Playwriting at Harvard university. That is certainly a great scheme, and no doubt the other nine contributors will come forward with agility—whether or not with grace doesn't really matter. A Chair of Playwriting is what this country long has sought and grieved because it had not, or, words to that effect, says New York Times. To be sure, all the great, near great, and tolerably large builders of plays whose names we recall at the moment somehow managed to get along without listening to lectures by any practitioner of their trade or by any professional expounder thereof, endowed or other, but because a thing can be, and has been done pretty well in one way is no proof that it cannot be better and more easily done in another, and doubtless Harvard will make good use of the $250,000—when it gets the money. Possibly, on reflection, the university will devote the fund to the training of "angels"—of men who for one of several reasons are willing to spend money for the bringing out of plays—and players. The theatrical managers, if all tales are true, would appreciate the improvement and increasing of that class even more than a multiplication of learned playwrights.

The King's speech delivered by His Majesty Edward VII. at the opening of the British Parliament meant more than such utterances have signified in many years. The voice of the address was the king's, but the hand that wrote the real meaning into the words was that of the Liberal ministry, says Troy Times. His majesty personally could take no part in the controversy now raging in his realm, but when he said that proposals would be laid before the legislators "to secure the undivided authority of the house of commons over finance and its predominance in legislation," and that this was "the opinion of my advisers," it indicated that the house of lords is to have its wings clipped if the government is to have its way.

Another great scheme in the line of conservation is that which proposes to construct two big dams in the upper Mississippi, by which means it is designed not only to improve the navigation of that part of the stream but to create about 800,000 horsepower to be utilized in various ways. The deepening of the channel is imperatively necessary if that section of the Mississippi is to retain usefulness for steamboats, and the additional benefits derived from "harnessing" the power of the river will be of enormous economic importance. And eminent engineers who have been connected with other enterprises of similar character say there is no doubt as to the feasibility of the project.

Tree pests, like the gypsy moth, the browntail moth, the elm tree beetle and others, are not the only ones. Australia has a plague of rabbits, those animals being so numerous and destructive that they do vast damage to the farmers' crops. So, while Massachusetts and other eastern states are paying out sums which have amounted to millions of dollars since the fight against the insects began, the Australian state of Victoria appropriates $500,000 annually for the purpose of killing off the superfluous "bunnies." The antipodes have troubles of their own.

Further test of the Edison storage battery street car has been so gratifying that an administrative official of one of the street car railway companies of New York city declared the car would supplant the horse cars on his line. This remark reveals the fact that the horse has not been entirely released from the thralldom of urban car service, even in the east, which is supposed to lead the west in everything progressive.

The much talked of increase in the cost of living is felt in every direction. A New York lady divorced from her husband has sought the courts to get her alimony increased because living expenses are so much greater than when the decree was granted. And it looks like another discourager of matrimony.

One of the advantages attaching to a job as chauffeur is that you can't be arrested and dragged before a justice on the charge of cruelty to animals.

We believe that $100 and costs is even more efficacious than the hatpin or umbrella.

PEACE IN WAGE WAR

BOTH SIDES MAKE MOVES TO BRING ABOUT A SETTLEMENT.

LONG ILLINOIS SIEGE SEEN

Miners to the Number of 300,000 Are Out and Wage Negotiations Are Undertaken—Issues Will Take Time to Adjust.

Indianapolis, Ind.—When the 300,000 miners in the soft coal fields walked out Friday both sides were making moves to bring about peace in the big wage fight.

The miners demand that their new contract must provide for a wage increase of 5.55 per cent. a ton on screened and an equivalent increase on "run-of-the-mine" coal.

Conferences between the miners' organizations in the various districts and the corresponding operators' associations have been arranged. Adjustment of the difficulty may take weeks or days. In the Brazil block coal district of Indiana there will not be a suspension, for the operators conceded the demand of the miners.

In Illinois and western Pennsylvania, where the powder question and who shall pay the shot-firers enter the controversy, a prolonged contest is likely.

At hundreds of meetings in large and small miners' communities, where the people dependent on the industry assembled to listen to the speeches of their union leaders, the "strike" was the one subject of discussion. National officers and members of the executive board of the United Mine Workers of America, who had been in secret session at their headquarters in this city, departed for their districts to advise the local organizations in the negotiations with the mine owners.

BIG ROW IN PINCHOT QUIZ

Chairman Nelson Accuses Glavis Attorney of Misleading Committee—Jones Called Falsifier.

Washington.—There was a lively row at the Ballinger-Pinchot congressional inquiry Friday.

Testimony for Secretary Ballinger was begun, and it soon developed a clash between Chairman Nelson of the committee and Atorney Brandeis, counsel for L. R. Glavis. The chairman accused Mr. Brandeis of concealing certain evidence and trying to mislead the committee. Brandeis resented the charge and demanded a withdrawal, which was refused.

Democratic members of the committee took the side of Brandeis in urging withdrawal, but Nelson was obdurate, and finally the record was allowed to stand.

Elmer E. Todd, United States district attorney at Seattle, Wash., when called, contradicted certain statements made by Special Agent H. L. Jones when he was testifying for Louis R. Glavis.

The witness declared that Jones' statement that he had advised against criminal action in the Alaska cases "because Judge Hanford was constitutionally opposed to land fraud trials generally," was absolutely false.

The cross-examination of the witness as to a letter Glavis had written to the department at Washington urging criminal prosecution in certain cases soon led the committee into a quarrel and brought out anew the strength of the partisan feeling which has grown up.

KELLNER GIRL IS FOUND

Rich Uncle Goes to Meet Her Abductors and Give Them the Money.

Louisville.—Alma K. Kellner, eight-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kellner, Jr., of this city, kidnaped December 8, 1909, while on her way to church and held for $25,000 ransom, probably will be in the arms of her overjoyed parents Sunday. Her return will end a nationwide hunt of 82 days, in which thousands of detectives, stimulated by the large rewards offered, participated.

The abductors, if they have not already received it, will be paid $10,000 and promised immunity from prosecution by relatives.

Negotiations for the restoration of the stolen child are being arranged by Fred Fehr, an uncle, who is a wealthy business man here, and who Alma's parents admitted has been in personal communication with the kidnapers for several days.

Tries to Burn Sick Wife.

Mahanoy City, Pa.—Samuel Reed, 50 years old, a contract stone mason, poured a gallon of kerosene on his invalid wife and then set her oil-soaked clothing on fire. Attracted by the screams of the woman, neighbors rushed in and tore the flaming garments from her, but she was so severely burned she is not expected to survive. Reed was jailed.

MAKE WAR ON BUCKETSHOPS

ATTORNEY GENERAL PREPARES TO EXTERMINATE THEM.

Warrants Will Be Issued Shortly for Arrest of Dozen Proprietors in Prominent Cities.

Washington.—Attorney General Wickersham's hand has fallen heavily on the bucket-shop industry of the United States and within a few days a blow will be struck that will practically wipe the bucket-shop gamblers out of existence.

From an authentic source it has become known that indictments have been prepared against three score of the most prominent bucket-shop proprietors in a dozen prominent cities of the country. These indictments await only the approval of Oliver E. Pagan, indictment expert of the department of justice. Warrants of arrest, based on the indictments, have already been prepared. Every detail has been carefully looked after.

At a given time only several days distant, these warrants will be served simultaneously on the accused men in the big cities where they are located. It is planned by the department of justice to make a clean sweep. New York, Jersey City, Baltimore, Boston, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Chicago and St. Louis are all included in the list of cities to be cleaned up and it is learned that the men listed for indictment and arrest in these cities include several millionaire operators, a group of well-known bookmakers and other pseudo financiers who have been deriving a profitable business through the operation of bucket shops.

M'VEAGH FEARS NO PANIC

Banks Are Well Supplied with Money—Credit of Country Will Not Be Disturbed.

Washington.—Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh has no fear that a decision against the Standard Oil Company or the tobacco trust by the supreme court will bring on a panic.

His information, gleaned from the leading bankers of the country, is that the banks are well fortified with money and even if a slight disturbance was made by the announcement of a decision it will not disturb the credit of the country.

Mr. MacVeagh says that fear in the minds of some is not because of the two decisions but because of the speculation which will follow the announcement. If a considerable part of the population believe that the two decisions will bring on an avalanche of attacks on corporations, there will be trouble. The fact that the two big corporations are convicted will not damage the financial condition of the country, but suspicion that there is to be a govermental onslaught on capital will.

Secretary MacVeagh is viewing the financial situation in the country with complacency. He is giving little thought to a bond issue and says that if things go along as smoothly as they have been there may be no need for an issue of bonds.

No Expedition for Estrada.

New Orleans.—Following the announcement that Nicaraguan insurgent representatives here have abandoned the proposed expedition to strengthen the Estrada army, it was reported Friday that about 100 men had been recruited. Gen. V. D. B. Gordon will probably return to the front by the next boat. Gordon, who had command of a company of sharpshooters in Gen. Chamorro's army, recently came to New Orleans with the avowed purpose of recruiting forces for the insurgent army.

16 NEW GRAFT INDICTMENTS

Grand Jury at Pittsburg Return Bills Against Councilmen—Head of Health Board Caught.

Pittsburg, Pa.—The grand jury which has been investigating the councilmanic graft cases threw another broadside into the ranks of the "system" Wednesday by handing down 16 more indictments against councilmen who are alleged to have sold their votes for money. Five of those indicted are members of the present city councils.

The sensation of this lot of indictments, however, was the introduction of the name of Dr. E. R. Walters, now head of the department of health and charities and leading man in the cabinet of Mayor Magee. The grand jury, in indicting Walters, insists it has proof that while he was president of Pittsburg councils, he solicited and accepted a bribe of $1,000 for his vote in councils.

Sixteen members of the office force of the Farmers' Deposit National bank appeared before the jury, under the escort of detectives, and were put through a warm session of quizzing before they were dismissed.

Capt. Johnny Klein, former common councilman, whose confession of graft "pulled out the props and let the sky fall" in the present graft crusade, was taken to the Western penitentiary to begin serving his three and one-half years' sentence.

ROOSEVELT CHANGES ROUTE

Former President Will Witness Eruption of Mount Etna and Then Proceed to Naples.

London.—Dispatches from Catania say that Col. Roosevelt, who is sailing from Alexandria to Naples aboard the Prinz Heinrich Friday, changed his route and will stop at Taormina, Italy, and witness the eruption of Mount Etna. Taormina is about twenty-five miles from Etna. If this plan is followed the trip to Naples will be made by way of the Strait of Messina. The foreign residents of Taormina sent wireless messages to the Prinz Heinrich, urging the colonel to pay a visit to Taormina.

MOST PEOPLE DO NOT KNOW CAUSE OF THEIR SICKNESS

Does human health depend on one organ alone? This question is becoming widely discussed since L. T. Cooper first advanced his theory that the stomach is the true seat of life and all health dependent upon it.

Mr. Cooper, who has met with remarkable success in the sale of his new medicine, believes that the stomach is responsible for most sickness, and that this organ is weak in the present generation. While discussing this theory recently, he said: "I am asked time and again to tell why my medicine has made such a record wherever I have introduced it. My answer always is, 'because it restores the stomach to a normal condition.' No one will deny that today there are more half-sick men and women than ever before. Nothing critical seems to be the matter with them. They are just half-sick most of the time. They don't know really what is the matter with them. I have talked with thousands during the past two years, and few knew indeed what their trouble was. One said nervousness, another said kidney trouble, another liver complaint, some constipation, or heart trouble, or lung trouble. Many had treated, as they called it, for most of these diseases at different times. A very common complaint is 'all run down,' or 'tired all the time,' or 'no appetite.'

"I know positively that every bit of this chronic ill health is caused by stomach trouble and nothing else. My New Discovery puts the stomach in sound condition in about six weeks. Mighty few people can be sick with a sound digestion. That is why my medicine is selling at such a tremendous rate. I have convinced many thousands of people that these things are so, and the number is growing by leaps and bounds."

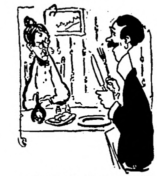
Among more recent converts to Mr. Cooper's beliefs is Mrs. Lottie L. Miner, living on Rural Route No. 2, Henniker, N. H., who says: "I was in poor health for six years, from stomach trouble and indigestion. Quite frequently my stomach was so weak that it would not retain solid food. I had vomiting spells every morning, and was subject to frequent attacks of dizziness. Life became such a burden that I often felt it was not worth the living. I tried everything I could hear of, but found nothing that would afford relief.

"For some time I had been reading of the Cooper remedies, and finally decided to give the New Discovery preparation a trial. After taking the first bottle, I noticed a marked improvement. Five bottles made me entirely well. I can eat anything I wish, and have not been troubled with my stomach since. The dizzy spells disappeared long ago.

"My mother, Mrs. Susan Parkins, is a nurse of long experience. Both she and my father have used the Cooper remedies with splendid results. I will be glad to answer any personal correspondence in regard to my case."

Cooper's New Discovery is sold by all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, we will forward you the name of a druggist in your city who will. Don't accept "something just as good."—The Cooper Medicine Co., Dayton, Ohio.

WHAT DID HE MEAN?



Landlady—I had to pay 25 cents a pound for this steak.

Star Boarder—That's tough.

Money and expense are not essential to artistic homes and attractive rooms. One dollar and fifty cents' worth of material will completely transform a crude, inartistic room into a graceful, dainty apartment.

Really it is good taste and skill that makes the home homelike. That dainty touch is worth twice as much as money.

Wall paper is expensive—it costs money to buy it, to hang it and again to remove it. With the use of the alabastined wall there is only the slight cost of the material—any one can brush it on—and it is not necessary to wash it off the wall when a fresh coat is required.

It is very easy to mix, very simple to apply, but the results are simply beautiful. A whole house can be done at just a little more than the cost of a single room when ordinary materials are used.

And this is true, that now that we have so much better materials for use in the decoration of our homes, that wall paper, common kalsomine and paint are now as much out of date as the old time whitewash, tallow candles and rough hewn floors. Mere money is no longer an essential in good housefurnishing in artistic home making.

The new materials and labor-saving machines are most welcome to us all—and every thoughtful woman, every woman who cares for her home, is quick to utilize them.

A Call for Cough Drops.

"I tell you I must have some money!" roared the king of Maritania, who was in sore financial straits. "Somebody will have to cough up."

"Alas!" sighed the guardian of the treasury, who was formerly the court jester, "all our coffers are empty."—Tit-Bits.

MINN. DEMOCRATIC?

LEADERS HOPE TO CAPTURE INSURGENTS AND CARRY SEVEN DISTRICTS.

FRANK DAY PLANS BIG INVASION

Hope for Tidal Wave to Sweep the State—Foss of Massachusetts Accepts Invitation to Speak at Jefferson Dinner.

Minneapolis. —The Minnesota Democrats are laying plans to capture the "insurgent" republican vote of the state and carry seven of the nine congressional districts this fall. The third and the sixth districts are the only ones they will leave alone, because Congressmen C. R. Davis and C. A. Lindbergh are such radical insurgents that they suit democracy down to the ground.

Congressman-elect Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts has accepted the invitation of Frank A. Day, and will be one of the speakers at the Minnesota "dollar dinner" on Jefferson's birthday, April 13.

The democratic plotters are hoping for a tidal wave, like the one that swept over the country in 1890, and gave the democratic party six of the seven house members from Minnesota. A determined campaign will be made this time in seven districts, and the party leaders really think they have a good prospect to win in the first, second, fourth, fifth and ninth districts. In the seventh and eighth, they admit there is only a fighting chance.

Depend on Insurgents.

All these hopes are built on the republican insurgents. When Frank A. Day invited Eugene Foss, the new Massachusetts congressman, to address the Jefferson day dinner at St. Paul April 13, he sent his message on behalf of the democrats of Minnesota and "50,000 insurgent republicans." The democratic soup depends on cooperation by these 50,000.

Conferences have already been held to plan the campaign. Since the house crisis a week ago at Washington, where Tawney, Stevens and Nye of Minnesota voted with the "regulars," the democratic bosses have the idea that they can capture the twin city districts. They concede that Fred C. Stevens of St. Paul is strongly intrenched, but the district is naturally close and they have a man for the race in Thomas R. Kane, former county attorney of Ramsey county. He made the effort once before, but at a less auspicious time. He is a fine campaigner, and has just showed his vote-getting qualities by leading the poll of candidates for the St. Paul assembly.

After Frank Nye, Too.

Minneapolis Democrats think Frank M. Nye can be beaten by a strong candidate, since his vote to sustain Speaker Cannon. He is sure to have opposition in the primaries that will stir up insurgent sentiment, and that will benefit the Democratic candidate in November.

Efforts are being made to get Judge F. C. Brooks into the race. Judge Brooks has refused an invitation to run for governor, and says he resigned from the bench to enjoy private life and practice law, but his friends are trying to convince him that if he will run for congress it will be easy. In default of Judge Brooks there is Harry S. Swenson, one of the younger men and an able speaker, who, it is believed, would stand a show. One candidate has already filed for the primary election. This is Thomas P. Dwyer, the boilermaker, who got the nomination last time in a three-cornered fight.

Buck Versus Tawney.

Judge H. L. Buck, of Winona, who was agreed on by first district Democratic leaders in session at Rochester Thursday, is expected to give James A. Tawney the fight of his life. The strength of insurgent Republicanism has been measured in that district.

It was not enough to beat Mr. Tawney in the primaries two years ago, but it gave T. V. Knatvold 8,484 votes to 11,451 for Tawney, and enough of the Knatvold vote jumped the fence in November to give Mr. Tawney 2,856 majority over Andrew French, though President Taft got 9,424 majority in the district. This is an off year, which makes a light Republican vote, and since the row over the tariff bill and the house rules, the Democrats are hoping to round up the insurgents bodily and elect their man.

Henry W. Libby, of Winona, who was a Republican house member in 1907, and may run for the legislature again this fall, was at the state capitol today, and when asked about the candidacy of Judge Buck, he said:

"Judge Buck will give Mr. Tawney a hard run. No one has any doubt of Mr. Tawney's nomination. The Kelly candidacy is not taken very seriously and he cannot be beaten in the republican primaries, but Judge Buck will give him a hard fight. He is a good campaigner and popular, and I think as good a candidate as the Democrats could have put up.

The Democrats are cocksure of reelecting W. S. Hammond in the second district. That is a hotbed of the insurgents and in the last two elections Mr. Hammond has had their votes. This was due to the feeling against J. T. McCleary. This year Republicans are hoping to redeem the district. State Treasurer Clarence C. Dinehart is a candidate also F. E. Ellsworth of St. James. The winner will have to fight Congressman Hammond, and the situation will be different this year, because either Republican will be anti-Cannon and will be entitled to ask for united party support. The district is normally Republican, and, strangely enough, was the only district in the state to stand fast at the time of the landslide of 1890. The Republican congressman it elected that time was John Lind, then of New Ulm.

Another queer circumstance is that the third and sixth districts, where the Democrats are not going to make any fight, are normally the nearest to being Democratic of all the districts in the state. The third used to be represented by a Democrat before Joel P. Heatwole. But the action of C. R. Davis, who has trained with the Democrats and refused to join the Republican caucus, has won him the good will of the Democratic organization. The same is true of C. A. Lindbergh in the sixth. The democratic plotters assume that he will beat P. H. McGarry in the primaries, and they haven't figured on the possibility of a McGarry victory at all.

No real fight has even been made by the democrats in the eighth district, but this year, if they can get the right sort of candidate, they hope to retire Clarence B. Miller. The choice seems to be Charles d'Autremont, a millionaire mining man, and a radical democrat, but it is doubtful whether he could be induced to run. Other possibilities are P. H. Nelson of Hibbing and Andrew Nelson of Duluth.

Congressman Volstead is strongly intrenched in the seventh district, and Victor Lawson, editor of the Willmar Tribune, as an independent candidate. He has been a populist and has been a strong advocate of prohibition, which is popular in that district, and he would bid for the anti-saloon vote of the district.

The prospect in the ninth district depends on whether Ole. O. Sageng will run. He has said that he will probably try for the senate again, and in that case the republicans will have easy sledding. Congressman Steenerson has a republican opponent in Henry O. Bjorge of Lake Park, but is expected to win a renomination. Senator Sageng ran two years ago and cut the Steenerson plurality down to 2,947. It was predicted then that he would try again this year and win, but Mr. Steenerson has been "insurging" and has also strengthened himself at home by starting the ship subsidy investigation. His chances now look better and Senator Sageng may not start. If he runs, it will be as an independent, the same as before.

TWO AVIATION MEETS.

To be Held in Twin Cities This Summer.

Mr. Cosgrove has just returned from Chicago, where he and Mr. Wilmot have been in conference with Frank Shelley, N. I. Barnard and other representatives of flying machine men.

The arrangements for the Wrights and Curtiss to come to the fair is contingent on the adjustment of a bond by Curtiss covering the results of suits now pending over alleged infringements by Curtiss on the Wright patents. Mr. Cosgrove says the state fair meet will take place whether the June event is a success or not.

The dates of June 22-24 have been formally fixed for the earlier met. Mr Cosgrove said he could not state positively that the meet would materialize. The airship men all demanded enormous sums at first, but showed inclination to reduce their figures when they learned that Minneapolis has $25,000 to offer in the form of a bona fide guarantee.

Paulhan, the Frenchman, has given up his contest with the Wrights, and will not come to Minneapolis. He is said to believe that under the circumstances he cannot make a flight here. Much of the plan depends upon some adjustment of differences between the Wrights and Curtiss.

STATE CONVENTION JUNE 23-4.

Republicans Decide to Have Short Campaign.

St. Paul.—The Republican state convention will be held June 23 and 24, and the place will be St. Paul. This has been decided upon through correspondence from the state central committeemen and Chairman A. D. Brown.

It was expected that June 15 would be the date, but advocates of a short campaign objected. As a compromise June 23 has been decided upon and the clans will gather in the St. Paul Auditorium.

"Prexy" Stays Till Jan. 1.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Dr. Cyrus W. Northrop will continue as head of the University of Minnesota until the first of next September at least, and perhaps until Jan. 1, 1911. In speaking of the presidency of the state university Dr. Northrop said: "I shall stay in office until next September, when my year is up, and, if necessary, I shall remain until Jan. 1. We expect to have a successor appointed by that time, at the farthest. "I shall try to perform the duties of the office until that time," the president concluded.

Governor Talks To Winonans.

Winona.—"Our Industrial education and the public health are the two great problems in Minnesota today, and upon the two methods which the state adopts in solving these situations, which to a degree stand in the way of the advancement of the state, depends the future." This is the theme carried in the address of Governor Eberhart on "Some Responsibilities in Good Citizenship," delivered before the Men's club of Central Methodist church here. He had a large and interested audience.

SAYS MEAT WILL GO HIGHER

COUNSEL OF CATTLE MEN SO INFORMS SENATE COMMITTEE.

Declares Decreasing Production and Increasing Population Are Cause for High Prices.

Washington.—"Unless some one can find a way to repeal the law of supply and demand there is no remedy for rising prices," asserted Samuel H. Cowan of Fort Worth, Tex., counsel for the Cattle Raisers' association of Texas, before the senate food investigating committee. "The people of the United States need never expect cheap meat again."

Mr. Cowan told the committee that it would be necessary for cattle raisers to maintain as high or even higher prices to keep pace with the increased cost of grazing land and feed.

Like other witnesses before the committee, Mr. Cowan said the present price of beef was caused by the decreasing production and the increasing population. He said cities were turning young men away from farms to such an extent that it was almost impossible to get sufficient help to make the production keep pace with the demand. The only way to attract men to the country, he said, was to increase the incentive by giving them high wages, which, with the advanced price of land and feed, made it necessary for stockraisers to receive more for their cattle.

GROSSCUP IS THREATENED

Movement Is Started Looking to Judge's Impeachment—Sabath Wants an Inquiry.

Washington.—Behind a sweeping resolution sent to the house of representatives by Congressman A. J. Sabath of Chicago a movement has been started looking to an attempted impeachment of United States Circuit Court Judge Peter S. Grosscup.

Congressman Sabath's resolution directs the attorney general to furnish the house with the names of all persons connected with the department of justices, and particularly the United States circuit and district courts, who receive compensation other than a fixed salary.

Mr. Sabath said that he desired mainly to break up the "court cliques in Chicago that have got a corner on bankruptcy proceedings and receiverships."

Other federal courts of Illinois, Mr. Sabath charges, have been ignoring the requests of interested litigants and their counsels, and apparently throwing all their receivership and bankruptcy cases to some one firm or favored friend of the court.

Prosecutor Garven Files Requisition Papers for Extradition of Big Chicago Packers.

New York.—Requisition papers for the extradition of J. Ogden Armour of Chicago were filed with Gov. Fort at Trenton, N. J., by Prosecutor Garven of Hudson county. This action was taken in accordance with the findings of the Hudson county grand jury in Jersey City recently, which returned indictments against three Chicago beef magnates, J. Ogden Armour, Louis F. Swift and Edward Morris. Requisition papers for the Messrs. Swift and Morris were filed several days ago. Gov. Fort first will hear arguments, it is understood.

CONGRESS MAY END MAY 15

Aldrich Says Adjournment Will Be Set for That Date—Other Senators Dissent.

Washington. — Congress may be able to adjourn May 15, is the belief of Senator Aldrich. The senate leader issued his prophecy on leaving the White House, where he conferred with President Taft on pending legislation in which the administration is interested.

This is the first prognostication of importance yet made as to the date of adjournment. Several influential members of congress believe it is too optimistic, and that opposition to certain features of the administration program may develop that will carry the session much further along.

22 DEAD IN GERMAN WRECK

Over 200 Soldiers Are Injured in Collision Between Express and Military Trains.

Mulheim-Am-Rheim, Germany.—It appears that upward of 200 persons received more or less serious injuries when the steamship express ran down and wrecked a military train bound for Strassburg. The total dead now number 22. The victims were soldiers.

The signal men have been arrested and are charged with having given both trains the right of way at the same moment.

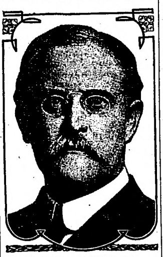
SAYS THE SOCIALISTS GAIN

Dr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler Talks of Movement in Germany, Whence He Has Just Returned.

San Francisco.—Dr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, who has just returned from a six months' stay at the University of Berlin as Roosevelt exchange professor, is himself a graduate of the University of Heidelberg, where he took his degree of doctor of philosophy in 1885. Previously to his call to the presidency of the University of California, a post he has occupied since 1889, he was professor of comparative philology and Greek at Cornell and was later professor in the American school at Athens. He is a native of Massachusetts.

"The socialists as a political party are gaining strength in Germany. They gained a little after the fall of the late Von Buelow ministry, and they have won considerable strength from the very recent suppression of the populace in the agitation for the reform of the suffrage basis in Prussia," said Dr. Wheeler.



Dr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler.

"The socialists are much less theoretical than they used to be, and are therefore milder. You could more appropriately call them the progressive or radical political party of Germany—say the party to the left. Since they have become more practical they have drawn over to them many persons who, while willing to take rides with a radical party, would not care to be classified with the outright theoretical socialistic movement. To-day the socialist party in Germany is doing things, and it is temporarily satisfied with many reforms which would never be accepted by the theoretical socialists of other days.

"Why, Germans cannot understand what they are talking about in England," he said. "There is no thought of war in the German mind. The army, it is true, is a splendid fighting machine, but it is a greater training school than it is a weapon of war. Every German is a trained man. An army may not be the best kind of a training school, but is better than nothing."

When in Berlin President Wheeler several times personally met Emperor William, who, he says, is in the best of health.

THIS THEATER ON WHEELS

In Case of Fire the Auditorium Could Be Rolled Into the Street.

Woodstock, Ill.—A real fire-proof theater has been invented if the plans of Theodore M. Lilleberg of Woodstock are realized.

It is Lilleberg's plan to separate the foyer and auditorium from the stage in case of fire and transport them into the street. The movable part of the building is to rest on heavy trucks propelled by motors.

In case of fire those making up the audience are warned to sit quietly in their seats, the electric motor is turned on and in from 20 to 30 seconds the entire auditorium can be rolled to the street and the audience saved from danger of a panic.

EXCELLENT TRADE IN WESTERN CANADA

SPLENDID CROPS, BIG PRICES, AND PROSPEROUS OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE.

Throughout all of Canada, and especially in the Western Provinces of Canada, there is a buoyancy in every line of business that is fully warranted by every condition. The crops of the past year were what was expected, and the prices for grain of all kinds, put the farmers in a class by themselves. Many of them are independent, and many others have got well started on the road. The latest reports are that seeding is well under way in almost every district, and the prospects are that a vastly larger area than that under crop last year will be seeded early this spring. In the Lethbridge district, in Southern Alberta, steam and gasoline outfits, hundreds of them, are breaking up the prairie at a tremendous pace, but they work night and day. As soon as it becomes dark, gangs are changed, a head light attached, and on, on through the night until the first streak of dawn, these giant monsters with their seven or eight gangs of breaking plows, keep up the work. Then the more modest farmer is putting in the longest hours possible with his teams of horses or oxen. And what will the Country be like in August, when these fields have become yellowed with the literally golden grain. There will be one vast expanse of wheat field. And there will be a market for it, because it is the best grain grown, and the demand will be everywhere. As previously intimated business throughout Western Canada is sound and good. The grain production of 1909 has been the great factor in establishing the reputation of Western Canada, and it is worth talking about. It surpassed all previous records, both in regard to quality and quantity, and such an achievement was by no means easy. The limit has not been reached, and a large average increase may be expected during the next ten years. There will be odd seasons when a falling-off will occur, and it is the falling-off that causes alarms and panics in the commercial world. The plains have done their duty so far in the out-put of grain and it would be reasonable to make occasional allowances for slowing-up. The faster the rate of increase is now, the sharper will be the check when the production diminishes. But there are some unreasonable people who wonder why the growth of one year is not continued during the next, and at an even faster rate. These same unreasonable people are the ones who see flaws in the situation as soon as an indication is given that the startling advances have not been maintained.

Murphy.

The prisoner at the bar was of swarthy complexion and was charged with peddling without a license. "What is your name?" asked the magistrate.

"He says his name is Murphy," repeated the policeman on the bridge.

"An Irishman peddling bananas, eh? What part of Ireland do you come from?"

"He says he was born in Italy," again repeated the bridge policeman.

"Umph! The Murphys are numerous, but I didn't think they had spread to Italy," said the judge as he made the fine $1 and asked the man to spell his name.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1907, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The Detroit Gaiver is dishing up some spice for its readers on the congressional situation in the 9th. district. It is a Socialist paper and Steenerson and Michelet had ought to subscribe for it just to read what their great friends say about them.

There will be no lack of timber for state senator from this district, this year, with three bankers and a farmer in the race, but as money is quite plentiful and the price of all farm products high, we think it is the surest money to gamble that the farmer wins.

John Eastman says that Thief River Falls is the largest city in this legislative district. The legislative manual says Bemidji casts the most votes, but John had ought to know, especialy if he has some of the town board from Highlanding to help him count.

The Thief River Falls News has discovered that there is to be a great fight made in Polk county to down Senator Stephens, to prevent the delegation from indosing Kaiser, of Clearwater County for state treasurer. The fact of the mtter is that no great opposition to Mr. Kaiser for state treasurer exists in his old home county of Polk, where he has friends enough to see to it that he will carry that convention with an overwhelming majority

There is no use denying the fact that H. O. Bjorge, of Lake Park is going to be the popular candidate of the common people of his legislative district for congress, as they honor him for the great fight he made for them in the legislature against the steel trust. It would be useless to talk to them that he has not as much ability to represent them in congress as Steenerson, for they are firmly convinced that he has got plenty of ability to represent them in any legislative body.

BELIEVES G. N. WILL BUILD.

Aug Peterson of Bagley, was in the city yesterday and stated that there was crew of surveyors surveying a line from that village toward Thief River Falls and in as much as he had learned that the Great Northern had stored at Thief River Falls a large number of ties, he felt certain that the object of the company was to build a road from that place to Bagley and thus make a short line from Thief River Falls to Duluth so as to be able to compete successfully with the soo line in the carrying of freight from this section into the most important city in the middle west, Duluth

That the Great Northern is contemplating the building of some new roads during this season is certain and it is very probable that Mr. Peterson has located the first one to be constructed

It seems that the line will be built along the line surveyed by the Great American R. R. Co. last summer and thus in all probability that work was not done without an object.—Crookston Times Deduction.

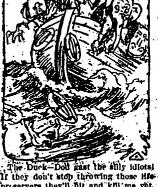
Scott—Is Jones married? Mott—I guess not. I never heard him blame his wife for anything.—Boston Transcript.

If a man look sharp and attentively he shall see fortune, for, though she is blind, she is not invisible.—Bacon.

"Man Overboard" on the Ark.



The Duck—Doggast the silly idiots! If they don't stop throwing those life preservers they'll hit and kill me yet.—Harper's Weekly.

A LAUGH ALL AROUND.

And, as Usual, Those Who Laughed Last Laughed Best.

"Common decency is cheap abroad," said the man who had just returned from his first trip to Europe. "During all the time I was on the continent I was subjected to discourtesy in but one instance, and I think I got away with it, then, at that "We were crossing one of the Swiss passes by diligence, or coach, and stopped off for luncheon at some little town. It was hot, and I suppose I made rather a comical sight in my shirt sleeves and black glasses, with a handkerchief over my collar, as I stepped out of the vehicle to the road. I suppose, too, that the brand of French in which I tried to ask questions was pretty ragged.

"Anyway, a group of young Frenchmen waiting in a carriage while their team was changed saw in me their long lost original scream, and the way they laughed was convincing, if not flattering. They weren't backward about pointing out the real, easy bits in the picture either, and they only laughed harder when I glared at them mildly. Another American and I trudged off for lunch, and when we came back there was the bunch ready to take up the howl at me again. I looked at my compatriot and he at me. I don't think either of us put the plan in words, but we began.

"We began to laugh. We fell into each other's arms and laughed. We held each other up and laughed. We laughed till the tears rolled down our cheeks. We laughed till we couldn't stand. We rolled into our coach, still laughing, taking inspiration for each outburst from a glance at the Frenchmen.

"Well, sir, that bunch of Frenchmen just wilted. First they closed their mouths; then they lost their grins; then each one began squinting at the other, trying to make out what was wrong. Before we'd been at it two minutes they all discovered they needed a drink and sneaked off to the little hotel. We laughed till we saw the last of them, and then we laughed at the way we had turned the trick."—Chicago Tribune.

MAKING ICE.

The Process Is Simple, Though It Puzzled the Negro.

A small boat in which were a white man and several negroes had just left the wharf near an ice factory at the foot of Main street, Annapolis, and was headed out the mouth of Severn River, toward a point on the Chesapeake.

"Yes-sir, suh," an old time colored man was saying. "I like to git a job workin' round that air ice plant and see 'em make ice with fire."

"I'll tell you how it is done, if you would like to hear my explanation," said the white man.

"Yes-sir, suh; I like to hear 'bout it."

"Well, in the first place, they have a tank of ammonia, to which a small amount of heat is applied. It does not take much heat to convert the ammonia into vapor, and even that heat is used up in causing the liquid to expand into a gas, or, become latent, as it is called, so that the temperature is not materially affected.

"Now suppose the ammonia gas becomes a hundred times as much space as the liquid. It is evident that the liquid contains a certain amount of heat, which is afterward distributed over a hundred times the space first occupied. A cubic foot of the liquid becomes a hundred cubic feet of gas, and it is plain that a cubic foot of gas will contain only one-hundredth part of the heat originally in a cubic foot of liquid; hence the gas is much colder than the liquid.

"Now, this gas or vapor is allowed to flow through pipes covered with salt water, which becomes extremely cold, but does not freeze, owing to the presence of salt. The fresh water desired to be frozen is put into large metal cans and placed in the cold salt water and allowed to freeze.

"There is nothing mysterious about the process. It is, in fact, very simple. Do I make myself clear? Do you understand my explanation?"

"Ye-s-sir, thir, yo' esplanation's plain, but I suttenly would like to see 'em make that air ice with fire."—Washington Star

His Quaint Suggestion.

A Frenchman who appears to have been of a thrifty turn of mind conceived the idea in 1878 that too much valuable time was being wasted in cleaning sardines when preparing them for the market. He found a way of preparing them without cleaning them and on this he took out letters patent. Apparently he had some slight misgiving as to whether the public would be perfectly suited with his invention, and so in his claim he makes this parenthetical entry:

Fish put up by this process may be slightly unpleasant to the customer at first, but he soon gets used to it.

A Wife's Early Lesson.

A curious custom used to accompany an Anglo-Saxon betrothal. After the giving of the ring the father gave the son-in-law one of his daughter's shoes, with which the son-in-law hit his wife on the head to teach her subjection. Later on a more moderate (?) castigation was suggested, and three blows with a broomstick became the custom.—"The Months of the Year," by Rev. Pemberton Lloyd.

A New Scheme.

"Sued for breach of promise, eh?"

"Yep."

"Any defense?"

"Temporary insanity, and I expect to prove it by the love letters I wrote."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

POINTS REGARDING CENSUS

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States censts, 1910."

The law requires every adult yersot to furnish the prescribed information, but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The Census Bureau, prior to April 15, will disribute to every farm owner and tenant in this state a blank or schedule containing the census questions relative to farm operations and equipment. This should be filled up, it possible, not later than the morning of April 15, but if anyone has been unable to fill it up by that time, he should do it as soon afterwards as he can.

People who do not speak english or who do not understand the schedule completely should get help from others, if possible, in filling it up.

The President has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to cooperat wich the Census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with taxation, army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquiries.

It is the utmost importance that the farm census of this state be complet and correct. Therefore every farm owner and tenant should promptly, fully, and accurately fill up the "Advance Farm Schedule" and carefully preserve it for the enumerator when he calls.

Pensions From Napoleon.

Paris has a dozen old soldiers who draw pensions that come to them from the great Emperor Napoleon I. These are not heroes of his epoch, for the last of those died long years ago. But Napoleon by his will devised several millions of francs to his companions in arms, and this capital in default of heirs of the grand army was deposited in the public treasury. Today the revenue this fund produces is paid out in the form of pensions of 200 francs each to old soldiers in French territory, and Paris has twelve of these beneficiaries to whom at the first of the year these little pensions are remitted.—Paris Figaro.

A Paradoxical Reply.

"Doctor, do you think eyeglasses will alter my appearance?" inquired Mrs. Gunson anxiously.

"I shall at least expect them to improve your looks," replied the physician.—Lippincott's.

An Apt Answer.

The dangers associated with the fishing industry on the Newfoundland banks are many and grave. Foremost among them is that the dories may be upset while fishing, which involves almost inevitable loss of their occupants. Callous captains, secure themselves from the necessity of going, frequently order their men out when the weather does not warrant it, and disastrous are the results. One of these brutal skippers was aptly answered once by a bank man of whose courage or capacity there was no question.

"Out with you!" shouted the captain. "Hurry up there! It's a fishing day!"

"Oh, no, skipper!" replied the doryman. "It's too stormy today for a boat to fish."

"Nonsense, man!" rejoined the skipper. "If my old grandmother was here today she'd get her dory out."

"Then, skipper," said the man, "if her grandson will come out with me now I'll haul my trawl."

It is needless to say no dories were launched from that schooner on that date.—Philadelphia Ledger.

An Arbitrary Classification.

"So you think every patriot has a more or less clearly defined ambition to hold public office?"

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum. "As a rule, patriots may be divided into two classes—the appointed and the disappointed."—Washington Star.

Doors In China.

In China doors are often round, leaf shaped or semicircular. In placing them the builder usually avoids having one opposite another lest evil spirits find their way from the street into the recesses of the building. The doorways separating the courts of a garden are usually of an elaborate kind, and the octagonal form is one of the most popular. Religious superstition asserts itself in Chinese architecture, and the universal sacredness of the numerals 3 and 9 is shown in the arrangement of temple doors. There is a triple gateway to each of the halls of the imperial palace, and the same order prevails at the Ming tombs. The Temple of Heaven has a triple roof, a triple marble staircase, and all its mystic symbolism points either to 3 or its multiples.

Pilkerton Won the Race

At one of the regattas of the National Association of American Oarsmen during the early eighties Jacob Pilkerton, for many years the champion sculler of America, was matched to row double against another team. He and his mate were the champions, and the general belief was that they would win without effort. But the night before the regatta public opinion suddenly and mysteriously changed. Mr. Pilkerton knew that this was not caused by any new development of strength in his opponent or any loss of skill on his own part. After making some quiet inquiries he discovered that there was talk of his rowing mate having been bought up by the other side and of an arrangement to throw the race.

He didn't say anything about his suspicions, but when the two men were seated in the shell and were well out into the deep water he leaned over to his mate and said:

"Look here, you blooming cutthroat! You've got to swim, drown or win this race! You know me!" He won.

He Was.

"Owen Flannigan! Are you Owen Flannagan?" said the clerk of the court.

"Yes, begorra," replied the prisoner with a merry twinkle in his eye. "I'm owin' everybody."—London Mail.

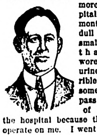
IN HOSPITAL FOR NINE MONTHS.

Awful Tale of Suffering From Kidney Trouble.



Alfred J. O'Brien, Second St., Sterling, Colo., says: "I was in the Baltimore Marine Hospital for nine months. I had a dull pain in the small of my back that completely wore me out. The urine was in a terrible state, and some days I would pass half a gallon of blood. I left the hospital because they wanted to operate on me. I went to St. Joseph's Hospital at Omaha and put in three months there without any gain. I was pretty well discouraged when I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so and by the time I had taken one box, the pain in the back left me. I kept right on and a perfect cure was the result."

Mrs. A., who had a shiftless colored maid, was hurrying through her morning's work in order to go out with a friend in the afternoon. As she flew about from room to room she heard the colored woman chuckling to herself as if very much enjoying something. Impatiently she said:

"What in the world is it that amuses you so, Isabel?"

"Well, Mis' Bessie, when I heard you gallopin' aroun' upstairs I jes' t'ought if you'd been de Lawd it wouldn't 'a' took you no six days to make de hebbens an' de yearth!"—S. A. Rice, in Woman's Home Companion.

In New Hampshire.

That irresponsible Manchester Union man gave himself a surprise party by going to church last Sunday and this was the result: "On this first Sunday of Lent, while George Bailey of the Houston Post is sacrilegiously fishing for eels in a Texas bayou, and the (married) paragrapher of the Kennebeck Journal is tapping his boots, and the Ging-Ging Goophus of the Springfield Union is playing seven-up, we, in common with other good New Hampshire people, shall dutifully attend church."—Springfield Union.

"Is your wife home?"

ROSY COLOR

Produced by Postum.

"When a person rises from each meal with a ringing in the ears and a general sense of nervousness, it is a common habit to charge it to a deranged stomach.

"I found it was caused from drinking coffee, which I never suspected for a long time, but found by leaving off coffee that the disagreeable feelings went away.

"I was brought to think of the subject by getting some Postum and this brought me out of trouble.

"It is a most appetizing and invigorating beverage and has been of such great benefit to me that I naturally speak of it from time to time as opportunity offers.

"A lady friend complained to me that she had tried Postum, but it did not taste good. In reply to my question she said she guesed she boiled it about ten minutes. I advised her to follow directions and know that she boiled it fifteen or twenty minutes, and she would have something worth talking about. A short time ago I heard one of her children say that they were drinking Postum now-a-days, so I judge she succeeded in making it good, which is by no means a difficult task.

"The son of one of my friends was formerly a pale lad, but since he has been drinking Postum, has a fine color. There is plenty of evidence that Postum actually does 'make red blood,' as the famous trade-mark says."

When a Rhinoceros Tosses You

By W. COTTON OSWELL

By permission of Longmans, Green & Co., New York. Copyright, by Ben B. Hampton.

ONE evening I was returning to camp with a number of Kafirs, tired and hungry after a long day's spooring elephants, which we never overtook. I saw a long-horned rhinoceros standing close to the path. The length of his horn, and the hunger of my men, induced me to get off and fire at him. The shot was rather too high, and he ran off. I was in the saddle in a moment and, passing the wounded beast, pulled up ten yards on one side of the line of his retreat, firing the second barrel as he went by from my horse, when, instead of continuing his course, he stopped short and, pausing an instant, began to walk deliberately towards me. This movement was so utterly unlooked for, as the white rhinoceros nearly always makes off, that, until he was within five yards, I sat quite still, expecting him to fall, thinking he was in his "flurry."

My horse seemed as much surprised at the behavior of the old mahoho as I was myself, and did not immediately answer the rein, and the moment's hesitation cost him his life and me the very best horse I ever had or knew, for when I got his head round a thick bush was against his chest, and before I could free him the rhinoceros, still at the walk, drove his horn in under his flank and fairly threw both him and his rider into the air. As he turned over I rolled off and fell in some way under the stirrup-iron, which scalped my head for four inches in length and breadth. I scrambled to my knees and saw the horn of the rhinoceros actually within the bend of my leg; but the animal wavered and, with the energy of self-preservation, I sprang to my feet, intending to run, for my gun was unloaded and had fallen from my hand. Had I been allowed to do so, this story might have never been told, for, dizzy as I was from the fall, I should have been easily caught.

He passed within a foot without touching me. As I rose for the second time my after-rider came up with another gun. I half pulled him from his pony and, mounting it, caught and killed the rhinoceros. The horn now hangs over the entrance of my door.

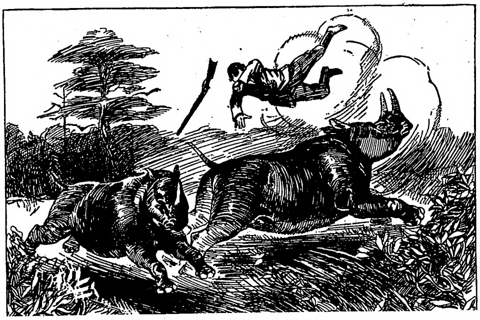
That day a companion happened to be hunting in the same direction as myself and, hearing the reports of my gun, hoped I might have come up with the elephants I had started after in the morning. He found me sitting under a bush, hatless, and holding up the piece of my scalp, with the blood streaming down my face, or, as he afterwards described it to Livingstone: "I saw that beggar, Oswell, sitting under a bush holding on his head." A few words told him what had happened, and then my thoughts turned to Stael, my horse. That very morning, as I left the wagons, I had talked to him affectionately, as a man can talk to a good horse, telling him how, when the hunting was over, I would make him fat and happy, and I had played with him and he with me. It was with a very sore heart I put a ball through his head, took the saddle from his back and started wagonwards, walking half the distance (ten miles) and making my after-rider do likewise. Unless a man was situated as I was then, it is difficult to make him understand all that the loss of a good horse means. You cannot even fill up his place in quantity, let alone quality. In this part of Africa, at all events, your success depends enormously upon your steed, for the country is generally too open for stalking, and he carries you up to your game, in most instances, as near as you like, and it is your fault if you don't succeed. Had I been the best shot that ever looked along a rifle, and made of steel, I could have done but a trifle without horses, in comparison with what I accomplished with them. Armed as I was with a smooth-bore, not very true, with heavy charges at over 30 yards, it was a necessity to get as near my game as possible. I am not vain of my shooting—I can do what I intend pretty well at from ten to twenty-five yards—but I would have given the best shot in the world without horses very long odds; besides, from the saddle you see so much more at your ease, and your attention for everything that surrounds you is so much more free.

The horses were unshod and sure-footed. Introduce them, if possible, gradually to their work by letting your after-rider use them a few times. He is always out of danger, and if once accustomed to the sight of an animal at a respectable distance, they can soon be driven up alongside of it, and get as eager in pursuit of elephant and large game as their riders.

By neglecting this rule, I very nearly came to grief on an afterwards capital pony. It was his debut, and a wounded elephant, charging with a scream, so terrified him that he was paralyzed with fear and stood stock-still after turning round; spurs had no effect, and how we escaped I cannot now tell. The bull came within a few feet of his tail and then wheeled. I can only suppose he got the scent of the human being, for he was quite near enough to have swept me from the saddle with his trunk. By a little careful treatment this pony became a very valuable one and I once in after days shot $600 worth of ivory from his back in half an hour. Have nothing to do with a vicious or uncertain-tempered horse. If you find you have been taken in with such a one, shoot him; the first loss may not be so bad as the last. Never ride a stumbler up to anything that bites or butts. I had one, and he twice fell with me before a charging elephant. Luckily I did not come off, and pulled him up just in time to escape. Horses used to be cheap enough, but I dare say the price has risen. I mounted myself well from $40 to $75 apiece. Your ponies—for they are hardly more—ought to be quick getting their legs, and a turn of speed is desirable, for though in the open it is easy sailing away from an elephant, in bush or broken ground for 200 yards he will sometimes press a slow horse.

I was once, in particular, hard put to it by a smart though rather small bull. I had fired both barrels, and on he came. I might have had 20 yards' start, but for the first 100 he gained on me, and I had to ride as if in a close finish. A good Hantam horse is an exceptionally tough beast. Whilst at "Oologs Poort," a farm then in the occupation of a Mr. Nelson, I was buying mounts when a Hottentot riding a neat, round-ribbed bay, came in with a return letter from the town of Cradock, as far as I remember, 70 miles distant. The horse's appearance pleased me much, and though I found the owner, a Mr. Cock, at first unwilling to part with him, I purchased him for $75, a large price then; but he was worth it. It had just done 140 miles in 30 hours, including five hours off saddling at Cradock. I was unfortunate with my horses and lost this one early in the campaign. I had shot an eland or two just beyond the first chool, and, being alone, had tied "Vonk" (Spark), as the men called him, to a tree whilst I gave the coup de grace to the game. This done I walked up to loose him and remount; but as I thoughtlessly placed my hand on the rein he got scent of the blood and, suddenly starting back, broke away. I followed him a long while, every moment hoping to catch him, as he let me come quite close and then trotted on, feeding quietly till I came up to him again. At length I grew weary and angry, and twice covered him with the gun that I might at all events save my saddle and bridle; but twice I relented—the creature was too good and too tame to shoot, and there was a chance that I might find him next morning, if he were not killed by a lion during the night. So I let him go, and just before sundown set my face towards the wagons, the encampment lying ten miles off. I walked really, I think, for once by instinct; it was soon dark, and after three hours, afraid of going astray, I decided upon making a fire and camping out, knowing I should find the wheel-tracks next morning if I did not overshoot them. I took out my tinder-box and, trying to strike a light, dropped the flint, and was on my knees feeling for it on the ground with my head down, when a muffled shot, which I at first took for a lion't pant, made me start to my feet, and within 100 yards of where I was standing, though hidden by a belt of thorns, by a second shot I was directed to the wagons. I had come quite straight down upon them through the night. We searched for the horse next morning in vain; his spoor was over-trampled by a large herd of quaggas, and for two years I never heard any more of him, when I ascertained a wandering party of Barolongs had found him in the veldt and, unable to catch him, had driven him before them for 30 miles to their kraal, and had killed many giraffes and other game from his back, one or two of the tribe who had gone into the colony for work having learned to ride.

One day it was three in the afternoon We had followed a herd of elephants since 8 a. m., and the traces of the dew of the previous night were still visible on the trail. Our chances of coming up with them were so small that we abandoned the pursuit and turned in the direction of the wagons. After an hour or two the natives began to make pathetic appeals as to the state of their stomachs, suggesting that they had met with hard usage, and that, as we had not found the elephants, they were not above breaking their fast upon quagga, giraffe, or even rhinoceros. I tried to persuade them that elephant was the only dish worthy of them or likely to fill those almost bottomless cavities to which they had alluded; that we might have better luck the next day, and that they might put off dining till then. If you wish to be successful in hunting for large tusks it it as well to keep your men on an elephantic diet and not pamper them with dainties, or they become lazy and careless in seeking the larger game. Whether on this particular occasion I was unusually tender-hearted, or their appeals were too touching, I do not remember; but whilst, with my very poor stock of Bechuana words, I was trying to explain my views, in an open glade of the forest through which we were passing, their hungry eyes fell upon two rhinoceroses of the keitloa variety, and the eager cry of "Ugh, chukuru, mynaar"—the last word a corruption of the Dutch mynheer, lengthened plaintively into a kind of prayer—was too much for me, and I dismounted to do their pleasure. Fifty yards before the animals ran a scanty fringe of dwarf thorn bushes, on outliers of which they were feeding away from us. I made a long detour and came out a hundred yards in front of them, the little scrubby cover lying between us. A handful of sand thrown into the air gave the direction of the wind; worming my way I gained the thorns and, lying flat, waited for a side chance.



"I WAS SAILING THROUGH THE AIR."

The rhinoceroses were now within twenty yards of me, but head on, and in that position they are not to be killed except at very close quarters, for the horns completely guard the brain, which is small and lies very low in the head. Though alone on the present occasion, I was traveling with Maj. Vardon, the best rhinoceros shot I ever knew, and his audacity, and our constant success and impunity alone and together in carrying on the war against these brutes, had perhaps made me despise them too much. I had so frequently seen their ugly noses, when within eight or ten yards of the gun, turn, tempted by a twig or tuft of grass to the right or left, and the wished-for broadside thus given, that I did not think anything was amiss until I saw that if the nearer of those now in front of me, an old cow, should forge her own length once more ahead, her foot would be on me. She was so near that I might possibly have dropped her with a ball by the nostril, and, had she been alone, I should probably have tried it; but the rhinoceros, when he charges, nearly always makes straight for the smoke of the gun, even though the hunter is concealed, and I knew that if No. 1 fell, No. 2, who was within four or five yards of her, would, in all probability, be over me before the smoke cleared. In the hope that my sudden appearance from the ground under her feet would startle her and give me a chance of escape, I sprang up; the old lady was taken aback for a moment and threw up her head with a snort. I dashed alongside of her to get in her rear; my hand was on her as I passed; but the shock to her nerves was not strong enough, for before I had made ten yards she was around and in full chase.

I should have done better to fire into her as I went by, but it had not occurred to me, and it was now too late; in my anxiety to escape, to put it as mildly as may be, I had neglected my best chance, and paid the penalty. I was a fast runner, the ground was in my favor, but in 30 yards from the start she was at my heels. A quick turn to the left saved me for the moment, and, perhaps, by giving my pursuer my flank instead of my back, my life, too. The race was over in the next; as the horned snout came lapping round my thigh I rested the gun on the long head and, still running, fired both barrels; but with the smoke I was sailing through the air and remember nothing more, for I fell upon my head and was stunned.

The day was fast drawing to a close when, though in that addled state which prevents a man from deciding whether to-day is yesterday or to-morrow, my brain seemed stirring again in a thick fog. By degrees I became aware that I was on my horse, that a native was leading it, and another carrying my gun beside my stirrup. It all appeared strange, but with the attempt to think it out the mist came eddying thicker, and I was content to let it be. Presently a dim confused impression that I was following some animal was with me, as in a dream; the power of framing and articulating a sentence returned, and I drowsily asked the nearest Kafir which way the trail led. He pointed in the direction we were going; his manner struck me; but I had had my say, and no other remark was ready. Men met us, among them I recognized two of my Hottentot drivers carrying a "cartel," or cane framework, which served as a swinging bedstead in my wagon. "Where are you going?" I asked in Dutch. They stared stupidly. "Why, we heard you were killed by a rhinoceros." "No," I answered. Without a thought of what had occurred my right hand fell faintly from the pommel of my saddle to my thigh, with the restlessness of weakness I drew it up again; a red splash of blood upon my cuff caught my eye. I raised my arm to see what was the matter; finding no wound on it, I sought with my hand for it down my leg, through a rent in my trousers, and so numbed was all sensation, that I actually dabbled down to the bone in a deep gash, eight inches long, without feeling any pain—the smaller horn had penetrated a foot higher up, but the wound was not so serious as the lower one. The limb stiffened after I reached the wagons and, unable to get in and out, I made my bed for nearly four weeks under a bush—the rip, healing rapidly, covered with a rag kept constantly wet.

The rhinoceros, as I afterwards learned from the men who were with me, was running so fast when she struck me, and lifted me so high, that she had shot ahead before I fell and, on their shouting, passed on without stopping. The horns, as is generally the case in this variety, were of nearly an equal length, so that one to a certain extent checked the penetration of the other—as it would be more difficult to drive a double-spiked nail than a single one. The bone of the thigh, however, providentially turned the foremost horn, or it must have passed close to, even if it had not cut, the femoral artery.

There have been queer stories of a variety of gigantic white rhinoceroses as large as elephants, a few of which remained when white men first entered the Nyanza country, but there are no authentic stories to set down. A hunter named Armbruster had an unfortunate encounter with a white bull which all who saw it agreed must have been a giant of its kind. His wagon had just reached the last rise to the top of a low hill when a man in advance came running back making the finger signs of a bull mahoho.

Creeping up to the crest of a hill Armbruster saw in a glade below one of the finest specimens he had ever beheld, and immediately set out to stalk him on foot.

The rhinoceros was feeding quietly and the wind was favorable for a direct approach. However, before he had got near enough, having to make his way through thorns, he lost sight of the quarry, which had entered the brush inclosing the glade. The hunter made the mistake of judging the location of the creature by a movement in the brush. A young cow rhinoceros was feeding there and not the bull. When within 30 yards of the movement, Armbruster stepped around a clump of mimosa directly into the presence of the big bull, standing head on. It is likely that the old fellow would have wheeled and departed on being startled, but, firing from the hip, Armbruster sent his first barrel into the neck and, with a great snort, the wounded animal charged. The unfortunate sportsman started to dart behind the mimosa, but tripped and fell headlong, and the huge engine of ferocity was upon him before he could rise or roll to one side. The long horns were thrust so deeply through his body that it was borne along some little distance until the bull tossed it off, and then he plunged away through the brush and was gone.

REAL WISE BOY WAS WILLIE

May Not Have Known Proper Answer to Question, But He Knew the Fair Sex.

"Flattery," said William Faversham, at a rehearsal in New York, "has great weight with women.

"This fact was brought home to me in my boyhood. Before entering Chigwell grammar school I attended a kind of kindergarten. My teacher was a very pretty young lady.

"'Willie,' my teacher said to me one morning, 'why was Solomon the wisest man in the world?'

"'Because, ma'am,' said I, 'he had so many wives to advise him.'

"'Well,' said my teacher, with a pleasant smile, 'that is not the precise answer given in the book, but you may go up head.'"

My Creed

I do not fear to tread the path that those I love have long since trod;
I do not fear to pass the gates and stand before the living God.
In this world's fight I've done my part; if God be God he knows it well;
He will not turn his back on me and send me down to blackest hell
Because I have not prayed aloud and shouted in the market place.
'Tis what we do, not what we say, that makes us worthy of his grace.

Talbot's Recovery

By RICHARD BARKER SHELTON

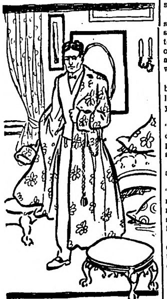
(Copyright, 1909 by Associated Literary Press.)

The trees in the little park just across the avenue were coming to leaf. Tireless robins flitted to and fro among the branches, piping blithely in the first mellow warmth of the coming spring. Up and down the asphalt rolled trim carriages, whizzing motors, and smart high-seated traps, and in the carriages and the motors and the traps care-free people laughed and chatted and drank in the glory of the perfect day.

And because of all this, Talbot, stretched on the couch by the window of his apartments was heavy of heart. He had the grace to be aware that he should be thankful just to recline there and watch the sunshine and the robins and the whirl of traffic on the pavements below. He had been very ill, and even now the doctor was cautioning the nurse to keep Talbot very quiet and to be sure he didn't overexert himself now that he was convalescing.

But the splendor of the day without bred in the pale young man a decided sense of unrest. He turned away his head and made a wry face as he listened to the doctor's instructions and the nurse's assurances that he would follow them out to the letter. Then Talbot glanced at the calendar on the desk in the corner, saw that the date, the seventh of April, had a circle about it, and his lips set stubbornly. He had been striving might and main to get on his feet by that date, and here was the doctor telling the nurse that the patient must be kept very quiet for another two weeks at least.

The young man's mouth widened in a certain grim smile; but out of the corner of his eye he watched the doctor take his departure, and listened anxiously until the elevator gate down the corridor clanged and the car went whirring down to the street floor. Then he yawned wearily.



Threw Off the Gorgeous Bathrobe.

"Jim," he said to the nurse, "what is there to read?"

Instantly the nurse collected a pile of books and magazines and bore them to the couch. Talbot sniffed.

"Those!" he said in fine disgust. "Read 'em all long ago. They're no good anyway."

He pulled a handful of silver from his pockets. "Go out and get me some fresh ones," he instructed. "All you can pick up. And say, don't come back without a copy of that English review, the what's-its-name; you know the one I mean," he added with a chuckle, well knowing the nurse would have to travel to a certain little shop a half mile or more distant to procure it. "Be sure to get that."

"Yes, sir. You shall have it if there's one in town," the nurse declared, changing his white coat for one of tweed and picking up his hat.

No sooner had the nurse departed than Talbot was off the couch. He was still rather weak. His legs were wabbly beneath him, and his head was altogether too much inclined to lightness; but he set his teeth, glanced at that date on the calendar, threw off the gorgeous bathrobe which swathed his tall frame, and began to dress with a nervous haste. Whatever else happened, he must be out of the apartment before the nurse returned.

Dressing proved rather more of a task than he had anticipated, but for all that, he stuck to it doggedly, and when he stood finally before the long mirror, surveying himself in the street clothes which had been hanging on their forms in the closet for the past two months, he was aware of a decided glow of triumph. He caught a carnation from the well-filled vase on the center table and stuck it jauntily into his buttonhole. Then, walking rather unsteadily and with eyes preternaturally bright, he slipped into the hall, went down the corridor and rang for the elevator.

The elevator boy stared at him in unbelief, whereupon Talbot chuckled delightedly, dropped an eyelid, and thrust a hand into his pocket. A moment later a bit of gold found its way into the palm of the elevator boy.

"You haven't seen me, of course, Mike," he suggested. "Do you get the idea?"

"Sure. I get it," Mike chuckled as the car stopped at the street floor and Talbot wabbled out of it toward the sunlit street.

At the curb he summoned a hansom, climbed in and gave an address to the cabby. Then the equipage rattled off, and Talbot settled himself on the cushions with a long sigh of relief. His little ruse had worked; he had made his escape from Jim's watchful eyes.

At the first corner they turned, he saw on the sidewalk Jim himself, hurrying along with a huge bundle of magazines. Talbot leaned far back in the hansom and chuckled again.

Uptown they whisked through the mellow sunlight of the spring afternoon and stopped finally before a certain house. Talbot alighted, paid the cabby, gave him instructions to wait, and then mounted the steps and rang the bell.

A few moments later Talbot, seated in a big, dim library, heard the swish of skirts and a little stifled cry. He got unsteadily to his feet, just as a girl came into the room.

"Ted!" she was saying, alarm, reproof, wonder, all in her tones at once. "What does this mean? What are you doing here?"

"Barbara," he replied, "what day is this?"

"What day is it? Why, it is the seventh of April, but—"

"I told you three years ago to-day," said Talbot quietly, "that on the seventh of every April I should come to you to renew my pleading. Just once every year I said I should come, and on the seventh of April. I always keep my word."

"But Ted, you crazy boy, you have been ill. They told me you wouldn't leave the house for another month yet."

"Did they, indeed?" said he calmly. "Well, very probably I shouldn't have done so, but you see, this very important date happened to arrive on schedule time, and so—"

"Where was Jim? How did you manage to bribe him?"

"I didn't bribe him," Talbot laughed. "There are no sins of corruption on my head. I sent him out to get some magazines, and when he went I—well, sneaked seems to be the word best fitting my exit."

"I shall telephone Dr. Harper at once," she declared severely. "I shall tell him that you have disobeyed orders; that you are here and—"

"Are you going to tell him why?" Talbot suggested.

The girl's face reddened. "No, of course not," she said.

"Well, you might also inform him that so long as I am here I intend to stay here until—well, until a certain matter that has been pending altogether too long, is settled up either one way or other," said he. "Barbara, I am going to ask that question once more, and I want a final answer."

"And you don't care what sort of an answer it is, so long as it is final?" she mocked.

"Don't I?" cried Talbot getting to his feet, with a suddenness that left him faint and giddy.

The girl saw him swaying. She ran to his side.

"Ted, Ted, you foolish, foolish boy," she said, "you are still very ill and weak, and to think of your coming here to-day."

"You haven't given me the answer," he said, trying to keep his voice steady.

She pushed him gently back to his chair.

"The answer?" she said softly. "Why, why if you must have it, if you must—"

She turned away her eyes.

"Oh, Ted, I didn't know until you were ill and in danger, and—"

He caught her hand and drew her to him.

Talbot was asleep on the couch. The doctor, whom the nurse had hurriedly summoned, was frowning in puzzled fashion.

"Crazy idiot," he snapped, "going out like that. By good rights it should be the death of him. But somehow he seems rather better for it."

"Yes, he certainly does seem better," said the mystified nurse.

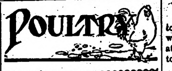
An Off-Hand Archeologist.

"I wonder what these figures signify?" said the professor.

"Those carved representations of fighting men."

"Yes."

"Oh, you've probably gotten hold of some prehistoric sport page."



POULTRY NOTES.

Poultry keeping is a decidedly healthful occupation.

The early spring pullets make the fall and winter layers.

Allow one male of the large breeds to 12 hens, and one to 15 hens of the smaller breeds.

The Bourbon Reds are said to be quiet and easily handled, non-roving in habit and yet very hardy.

No one can succeed well with poultry who permits them to live year after year in filthy places.

Keep the chicks absolutely free from insects to grow them to maturity as quickly as possible.

Keep the pigeons' flying lofts clear of bolts as the birds are apt to injure themselves by flying against them.

For the man in the business of egg production, with fowls of the Leghorn type, incubators and brooders are a necessity.

Unless one has the time and patience to attend to the incubator properly, he had better let the hen hatch his chickens.

Buckwheat is a good food, similar in composition to corn. It is best used in connection with some more nitregenous food.

One can learn many things from books but one of the things one cannot learn all about is pigeon raising. That takes experience.

Duck eggs should be set under hens if early broods are wanted. Hens make better mothers, at least, for the early broods, than ducks.

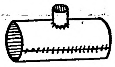
Have the laying and setting rooms well cleaned, the partitions whitewashed and the nest boxes dusted with tobacco dust to check the lice.

There is not as profitable an adjunct to any farm, be it large or small, or even the tenant, for the amount invested, as a nice lot of poultry.

TEST EGGS FOR FERTILITY

Simple Arrangement by Which Task May Be Accomplished in Short Space of Time.

In starting the incubator it is essential that the eggs be tested for fertility, which may easily be accomplished with the simple and quickly made tester illustrated herewith. A strip of cardboard is bent into a circle and sewed together so it will set over the chimney or globe on an ordinary lamp; into the side of this cylinder cut a hole about two inches in diameter and make a second tube to fit same, of carboard, attach this by sewing onto the larger one and the tester is complete. It is placed over the lamp and the intensity of the light shows through the smaller cylinder on the side; by placing the egg up against same it can be tested in a moment's time, much time being saved by having both hands free to handle the eggs.



Egg Tester.

LAYERS ARE MONEY MAKERS

Careful Selection of Flock, Eliminating Drones, Is Sure to Increase Productiveness.

(By W. E. VAPLON, COLORADO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.)

Do not blame your pullets next winter when they are not laying; you should have been busy on the problem during the present winter. You should know which hens are furnishing the eggs from which these pullets will be hatched; the chances on the average farm are that the eggs from the poorer layers and slower maturing pullets are being used for this purpose, and that the hens that have been laying all winter are being used to hatch these eggs. Culling, selection, elimination, kept constantly in mind, and continually practiced, will mean healthier fowls, livable chicks, earlier pullets and eggs when they are most wanted.

Do not set eggs from the whole flock, but dispose of all males not used in this breeding pen, and from the remainder of the flock gradually eliminate the drones. It is surprising how large a proportion of the average flock is useless, or worse than useless, for these non-producers are in the way of the workers and are preventing them from doing their best. If you cannot make up such a breeding pen this spring, try this for next season. Next fall mark or band the first thrifty pullets to begin laying; also the yearling hens that are doing well this season. During the early winter carefully note their performance, and from these banded hens and pullets make up your next year's breeding pen. You will be surprised at the increased vigor and productiveness of your flock.

Care of Droppings.

During the summer when not enough coal ashes are produced for the hen roost, dry loam is a good material for sprinkling the droppings. It will keep down odors and absorbs fertilizing elements. Never use wood ashes, as they cause more odor and destroy the fertilizing value of the droppings.

Farmers should eat more oatmeal.

Although the farmer of today is able to buy almost anything he wants to wear or eat he isn't paying enough attention to food values when it comes to his own table.

He feeds his stock carefully, avoids over-feeding and selects the stock food that he believes will give the best returns in strength and general efficiency.

If he has been watching the extensive researches and experiments on the question of the best human food for muscle and brain he will heed the advice from all sides to "eat more Quaker Oats."

Quaker Oats is mentioned because it is recognized in this country and Europe as the best of all oatmeals. Feeding farm hands on Quaker Oats means getting more work out of them than if you feed them on anything else. 61

NOT LOOKING FOR TROUBLE

Young Man Unnecessarily Alarmed Over Question Put to Him by Old Gentleman.

A quiet, bashful sort of a young fellow was making a call on a Capitol hill girl one evening not so very long ago, when her father came into the parlor with his watch in his hand. It was about half past nine o'clock. At the moment the young man was standing on a chair, straightening a picture over the piano. The girl had asked him to fix it. As he turned the old gentleman, a gruff, stout fellow, said:

"Young man, do you know what time it is?"

The bashful youth got off the chair nervously. "Yes, sir," he replied. "I was just going."

He went into the hall without any delay and took his hat and coat. The girl's father followed him. As the caller reached for the doorknob the old gentleman again asked him if he knew what time it was.

"Yes, sir," was the youth's reply. "Good-night!" And he left without waiting to put his coat on.

After the door had closed the old gentleman turned to the girl.

"What's the matter with that fellow?" he asked. "My watch ran down this afternoon and I wanted him to tell me the time so that I could set it."—Denver Post.

BABY'S SKIN TORTURE

"When our baby was seven weeks old he broke out with what we thought was heat, but which gradually grew worse. We called in a doctor. He said it was eczema and from that time we doctored six months with three of the best doctors in Atchison but he only got worse. His face, head and hands were a solid sore. There was no end to the suffering for him. We had to tie his little hands to keep him from scratching. He never knew what it was to sleep well from the time he took the disease until he was cured. He kept us awake all hours of the night and his health wasn't what you would call good. We tried everything but the right thing.

"Finally I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies and I am pleased to say we did not use all of them until he was cured. We have waited a year and a half to see if it would return but it never has and to-day his skin is clear and fair as it possibly could be. I hope Cuticura may save some one else's little ones suffering and also their pocket-books. John Leason, 1403 Atchison St., Atchison, Kan., Oct. 19, 1909."

Sickness Insurance in Germany.

The compulsory state system of sickness insurance instituted in 1884 in Germany has proved a powerful factor in combating tuberculosis. No less powerful have been the public sanatoria, the number of beds in which have increased during the past 15 years from 243 to 8,422. Of the 200 tuberculosis sanatoria and hospitals in Germany, 85 are supported by the carriers of sickness insurance. The statistics of the imperial insurance department show that as many as 42 per cent. of the number of persons treated in these institutions remained in good working health five years after being dismissed from the sanatorium.

GLADNESS COMES~

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of illness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact that it is the only remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is, therefore, all-important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to purchase and note that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

It is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and assists in overcoming habitual constipation permanently, also biliousness and the many ills resulting therefrom. The great trouble with all other purgatives and aperients is not that they fail to act when a single dose is taken, but that they act too violently and invariably tend to produce a habit of body requiring constantly augmented doses. Children enjoy the pleasant taste and gentle action of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the ladies find it delightful and beneficial whenever a laxative remedy is needed, and business men pronounce it invaluable, as it may be taken without interfering with business and does not gripe nor nauseate. When buying note the name, California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of every package. Price, 50 cents a bottle.

Preserving the Declaration of Independence

By WALDON FAWCETT

PHOTOS COPYRIGHT BY WALDON FAWCETT

WHEN, a few weeks ago, the newspaper dispatches from Washington made mention of the fact that a descendant of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence had applied to the president for permission to look at that famous document the public received its first hint of the extraordinary care exercised by Uncle Sam for the safe keeping of what is, in a way, the nation's most prized possession. Probably no relic in the world is more carefully guarded than this self-same piece of parchment with its roster of significant autograph signatures.

Every time an exposition is held anywhere in the United States the projectors conceive the idea of borrowing the Declaration of Independence as their chief drawing card in the way of an historical exhibit, but all hopes of this kind are doomed to disappointment. The Declaration was transferred to Philadelphia for the Centennial in 1876, but never before nor since has it been out of its depository at the national capital and it is pretty safe to predict that it will never in future be disturbed.

DECLARATION

STATE DEPARTMENT BUILDING AT WASHINGTON

DESK ON WHICH THOMAS JEFFERSON WROTE THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

During the past decade there has been a redoubling of protective measures looking to the safeguarding and preservation of the invaluable document. Some years ago the secretary of state issued an order that the Declaration should be hermetically sealed in a light-tight, fire-proof, burglar-proof safe, and that this safe should not be opened except upon his written order. How resolute is the determination of the officials to keep the document in that seclusion that is believed to be essential for its preservation may be surmised from the fact that never in the seven years since the "retirement order" was issued has any person been able to induce the secretary of state to issue the necessary order to obtain a peep at the important document.

The Declaration of Independence has had a most interesting history since it came into existence on that memorable fourth of July in Philadelphia one and one-third centuries ago. The penned document that now reposes in the library of the state department at Washington is the one and only official instrument. So far as known, there was no duplicate or extra copy of the declaration made for "printers' copy," as would now be done in the case of any important document the contents of which were to be perpetuated. It is believed that the copy in the hands of Secretary Thomson at the close of the session on that first Independence day went to the official printer, John Dunlap and was used by him as copy. The next day, in making up the journal of the continental congress, the secretary wafered in a blank space left for this purpose a copy of the broadside print.

Copies of the printed broadside were also sent out in compliance with the resolution of congress to "assemblies, conventions, councils of safety," etc. Other editions differing somewhat in style were printed by Dunlap to meet the demand for the Declaration and a few copies were printed on vellum. Meanwhile the original document was most carefully preserved. Under an act of congress approved July 27, 1789, the Declaration was deposited in what was then known as the department of foreign affairs. A few months later the name of this branch of the government was changed to department of state and the secretary of state was declared to have charge and custody of the Declaration.

The Declaration has virtually been in the custody of the state department continuously from that date to the present time. To be sure it reposed in the patent office at Washington from 1841 to 1877, but the patent office, it may be recalled, was for many years a part of the department of state and occupied what was believed to be a fireproof building, whereas that which then housed the department of state was not regarded as affording any surety against damage by fire. After the Centennial, however, the Declaration was transferred to the state department proper, that branch of the government having in the meantime acquired an up-to-date building. Here it has remained ever since in the library, which has spacious quarters on the fourth floor of the great granite building occupied by the state, war and navy departments.

The present solicitude for the preservation of the Declaration with all possible care dates from a period somewhat prior to the World's Columbian exposition in Chicago in 1893. It was proposed to transfer the Declaration to Chicago for exhibition and a steel safe or "packing case," as it was then termed, was specially constructed to serve as a repository for the document en route and during the period of the fair. While these preparations were in progress the officials of the state department turned the matter over in their minds and eventually came to the conclusion that it was risky business to have the nation's most honored relic carted about the country, even if the moving was done with all possible care. The president took this view of the matter also and so it was decided not to allow the Declaration to be transferred to Chicago.

About this time John Hay, who was then acting as secretary of state, asked the National Academy of Sciences to carefully investigate the condition of the document and to make suggestions as to ways and means for its preservation. Accordingly President Agassiz of the National Academy appointed a special committee, consisting of John S. Billings, Ira Remsen and Charles F. Chandler, to confer with Secretary Hay on the subject. Eventually this special committee was given an opportunity to make a careful examination of the precious instrument with the assistance of Mr. A. H. Allen, then serving as the chief of the bureau of rolls and library of the state department and also with the aid of Dr. Wilbur M. Gray, of the Army Medical museum.

It was found that the document had suffered very seriously from the very harsh treatment to which it was exposed during the earlier years of the republic. Folding and rolling have creased and broken the parchment. The wet press-copying operation to which it was subjected about 1820 for the purpose of producing a fac-simile copy, removed a large portion of the ink. Subsequent exposure to the action of light for more than 30 years while the instrument was placed on exhibition has resulted in the fading of the ink, particularly in the signatures. The committee was pleased, however, to find that no evidence of mold or other disintegrating agents could be discovered upon the parchment by careful microscopic examination. They also reported against the proposition which had been advanced to apply chemicals with a view to restoring the original color of the ink. It was the opinion of the experts that such application could be but partially successful, inasmuch as a considerable portion of the original ink was removed in making the copy of 1820 and also because such application might result in serious discoloration of the parchment.

Finally the committee reported adversely upon the suggestion that any solution, such as collodion, paraffin, etc., be applied with a view to strengthening the parchment or making it moisture proof. But the committee did urge that the document be kept in the dark and as dry as possible, and never placed on exhibition. Accordingly, in 1894, it was hermetically sealed in a frame and placed in the steel case above mentioned, together with the original copy of the constitution of the United States. Then, in 1902, Secretary Hay issued the order in accordance with which the huge square steel box that holds the Declaration was locked and sealed. It has been opened once since that time in order that the officials might ascertain the condition of the document. It appeared to be in exactly the same state of preservation as when placed in the case half a dozen years ago and indeed Mr. John A. Tonner, chief of the division of rolls and library of the state department, the present custodian of the Declaration, is of the opinion that the deterioration or at least the fading of the Declaration has been almost completely arrested.

The interior of the steel safe which comprises the final resting place of the Declaration contains four drawers. In one of these reposes the Declaration—kept perfectly flat between two pieces of heavy plate glass. The other four drawers are given over to the original copy of the constitution, similarly protected. The constitution, it may be added, is in an excellent state of preservation and really does not need the extreme protective measures to which it is subjected because of being in company with the Declaration.

Present-day visitors to the state department, although they may not see the original Declaration of Independence, can inspect something almost as interesting—namely, the original draft of the Declaration in Jefferson's handwriting, with a few interlineations made by Franklin and Adams. This is displayed in a steel cabinet that stands adjacent to the safe containing the original Declaration. The steel exhibition cabinet also holds one of the fac-similes of the engrossed copy of the Declaration—one of those reproductions made by order of President Monroe in order to secure 200 copies for the signers of the Declaration and their heirs.

In a glass case in this same treasure house of historic mementoes is the small, plain, unpolished mahogany desk on which Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. This interesting relic came into possession of the government in 1880. The desk had been given by Thomas Jefferson to Joseph Coolidge, Jr., upon the occasion of the latter's marriage to Jefferson's granddaughter, Miss Randolph. On the death of Mr. Coolidge, whose wife had died a year or two previously, the desk became the property of their four children and was by them presented to the nation. It was the expressed wish of the donors "to offer it to the United States that it may have a place in the department of state with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776."

The desk bears an inscription in Jefferson's handwriting as follows: "Thomas Jefferson gives this writing desk to Joseph Coolidge, Jr., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own by Ben Randall, cabinet maker, of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city in May, 1776, and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence. Politics as well as religion has its superstitions. These gaining gaining strength with time, may one day give imaginary value to this relic for its association with the birth of the great charter of our independence. Monticello, Nov. 18, 1825."

Although Jefferson was nearly 83 years of age when he presented the desk, his donation inscription, above given, is written in the same bold, clear and strong handwriting in which he penned the Declaration of Independence almost half a century before, when a young man little more than 30.

The circumstances under which Jefferson was selected for the honorable task of writing the Declaration of Independence were at one time the subject of considerable controversy. The evidence on the subject is derived chiefly from the writings of John Adams and of Jefferson himself. These two distinguished statesmen disagree as to some important details.

Mr. Jefferson in his memoir written in 1821 states simply that the committee for drawing the Declaration desired him to do it: that he accordingly wrote it, and that, being approved by the committee, he reported it to congress on Friday, the twenty-eighth of June, when, after three days of debate, it was adopted on July 4.

In Mr. Adams' autobiography he says: "The committee of independence were Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, Robert R. Livingston. There were more reasons than one for the selection of Jefferson for such important work. He had the reputation of a masterly pen; he was a delegate from Virginia. Another reason was Richard Henry Lee was not beloved by most of his colleagues from Virginia, and Jefferson was set up to rival and supplant him. The committee had several meetings in which were proposed the articles of which the Declaration was to consist, and minutes made of them. The work of making the draft was left to Jefferson and me, but on my insistence Jefferson alone did the work.

Summed up, the substantial points of difference in the accounts of these two men regarding the same transaction relates to the action of the committee in designating the person or persons who were to prepare the draft of a Declaration. Mr. Adams states that Jefferson and himself were appointed a subcommittee to prepare it; Mr. Jefferson states that he alone was directed by the committee to write the Declaration. This question is not important, since Mr. Adams' version does not in the least impair Mr. Jefferson's claim to the authorship of the instrument.

It is proper to add that Mr. Jefferson's account is confirmed by the original manuscript draft of the Declaration, exhibiting the corrections and interlineations made by Dr. Franklin and Mr. Adams in their respective handwritings. These amendments were not important. The reasons assigned by Mr. Adams for the selection of Mr. Jefferson as the writer of the Declaration are so numerous that it is difficult to determine which of them he intended should be regarded as the principal or decisive one. In the autobiography he states that there were more reasons than one why Mr. Jefferson was appointed on a committee of such importance. He assigns two reasons: one, Mr. Jefferson's reputation as a writer, and the other the desire of his Virginia colleagues to have Mr. Jefferson supplant Mr. Richard Henry Lee. In a letter to Mr. Pickering Mr. Adams gives as the reason why Mr. Jefferson was placed at the head of the committee that it was "the Frankfort advice to place Virginia at the head of everything;" but he also adds that Mr. Jefferson brought with him to congress "a reputation for literature, science and a happy talent of composition," and that this reputation had been sustained by writings "remarkable for their peculiar felicity of expression." As in the case of Washington, therefore, it would seem that there were reasons of eminent fitness and qualification for the duty assigned; and certainly the Declaration of Independence itself fully justifies the selection. Few state papers have ever been written with more skill, or greater adaptation to the purposes in view. Whether its sentiments were purely original with its author, or were gathered from the political philosophy which had become familiar to the American mind, through the great discussions of the time, it must forever remain an imperishable monument of his power of expression and his ability to touch the passions, as well as to address the reason of mankind.

With regard to the passage concerning slavery, which was stricken out of Jefferson's draft, we may well conceive that both northern and southern men might have felt the injustice of the terrible denunciation with which he charged upon the king all the horrors, crimes and consequences of the African slave trade, and in which he accused him of exciting the slaves to insurrection, and "to purchase the liberty of which he had deprived them by murdering the people upon whom he had obtruded them." Mr. Jefferson, in drawing up the list of our national accusations against the king, obviously intended to refer to him as the representative of the public policy and acts of the mother country; and it is true that the imperial government was, and must always remain, responsible for the existence of slavery in the colonies. But this was not one of the grievances to be redressed by the Revolution, it did not constitute one of the reasons for aiming at independence, and there was not sufficient ground for the accusation that the government of Great Britain had knowingly sought to excite general insurrections among the slaves.

$5,000,000 WINNER

Record in Card Game Held by Young Englishman.

With Little Knowledge of Cards He Wins Title to Mining Property in Australia That Made Him Rich.

New York.—Five million dollars is the largest sum ever won in a card game at a single sitting, and the story of the vast winning carries the listener to a lonely hut in a rugged section of Australia, according to the chronicles of Ralph Nevill, the English historian of gambling, gaming, gamesters and the turf, says the New York Telegraph. The story is related as an instance of the whims of fortune, which in certain rare instances seems to delight in showering her gifts upon some one who is not a gambler.

A young Englishman, who had gone to Australia with a slender capital, was standing at the door of his hut just as night was falling, when two men who looked much like tramps approached. The Englishman accorded them such hospitality as his scant larder afforded, and then prepared to put them up for the night. Pipes were lit after dinner, and when conversation waned one of the strangers drew from his pockets a much soiled pack of cards.

Although the young host knew little of gaming, he finally consented, after much persuasion, to play for small stakes; but he stipulated that as soon as any of the three chanced to lose such money as they had in their pockets the play should cease. The game progressed for a time with varying fortune, but luck eventually went the way of the host and the pockets of his guests were emptied of their modest sums. The losers were anxious to continue, promosing to remit their losing upon arrival at the nearest town, but the Englishman insisted that the agreement be kept.

"We agreed to play for ready money; your losses are trifling. Let's turn in and go to bed," he said.

The losers continued to insist, but their entreaties fell on deaf ears. Suddenly one of them said:

"Bill, where's that bit of paper we got up the country. Perhaps he'll play us for that." A soiled document was produced. It appeared to be the title of several plots of land up country. The holders apparently attached little value to it, but the host agreed that it should be allowed to represent £10. When the game was resumed luck continued with the host and the document soon passed into his possession. Then the trio retired for the night, and early the next day the strangers went their way, first having left an address, so that any question concerning the title could be referred to them.

Luck Went to the Host.

A week passed and the Englishman had forgotten about his slip of paper, which he had sent with some other securities to the nearest bank. He was standing in front of his hut about the same hour of the day, when a mounted stranger appeared, and, saying he had come a long way, begged shelter and food. Though roughly dressed the stranger was evidently possessed of money. He announced himself as desirous of purchasing plots of land, and said he was prepared to pay liberally. He pressed his host to tell him if he knew any lots for sale, and finally elicited from him the story of the scrap of paper. The story seemed vastly to amuse the stranger, and before he left he had offered $250 for it.

Ten days later the visitor returned, announcing that he had developed a veritable craze for the possession of the paper. He displayed £200 in cash and tendered it.

It dawned upon the young Englishman about this time that the paper really was valuable, and he told his visitor that it was not for sale.

Investigation proved that the document was a clear title to a property which held one of the richest mines in all Australia, and before he was through with it it had netted the man who had won the paper from the two wayfarers in the hut a sum very close to $5,000,000. The Englishman, who is still alive, later provided handsomely for the men from whom he had won.

He learned later that the well-to-do stranger who took such an interest in him was a speculator in mines, who, in one way or another, had learned that the property represented by the paper was highly valuable, but even he did not estimate the tremendous sum eventually realized by the man who would have been termed in most sporting circles as more or less of a "piker" at card games.

Who Owns "Lady"? a Police Puzzle

I WONDER WHO DOES OWN ME ANYWAY?
LADY

CHICAGO.—Over twenty-nine ounces of fur and flesh in the form of a maltese terrier labeled "Lady," the members of of the police trial board all but lost their tempers and their dignity a few days ago. They did not, however, lose their sense of humor.

"Lady," it developed, had been fought over and fought for by three women and a man. Detective J. T. Quinlan at one stage of the squabble got his foot into it, and on this feature hung the trial. Quinlan was charged with "unbecoming conduct."

Stories differ as to who originally had the dog, but to make a beginning, it might be said that Mrs. Mary M. Singer, 603 Woodland park, wife of the assistant superintendent of a downtown department store, possessed the pup or poodle in the first place.

Mrs. Gertrude Ross, a dog fancier, whose residence was stated as 2430 Indiana avenue, believed, according to the developments of the trial, that she owned the dog. At any rate she got out a writ of replevin and got the dog, putting up a bond of $200.

Next, for some unstated, but possibly obvious reason, her dogship was related as enjoying the comforts of the house of Frank Pallma, musical director of the La Salle theater. He lives at 3708 Grand boulevard.

Mrs. Singer now appears with Detective Quinlan at the Pallma residence. She says she wants her dog. Mr. Pallma, appearing a trifle negilge, asks his visitors to be seated, and excuses himself to put on his coat. He returns. He tells them he has no dog.

Mrs. Singer insists on searching the house. She finds a neat little bed for doggie, but no "Lady." She hunts high and low. She goes downstairs in the basement and asks the janitor. Still no pup. Ah, Mrs. Singer has an idea. Why not search in the vacant flat?

Down she goes with the detective, and there, lo and behold, she discovers her long-lost, dear little "Lady"—and a Miss Mabel Melville as well.

Danger to Grammar in Grasshoppers

THEY DON'T NEED YOU GRAMMAR

NEW YORK.—John J. Fox, chairman of local school board No. 26, has discovered a peril—a perfectly new peril. Prominent in it is the tadpole, abetted by the grasshopper and backed up by the caterpillar. Mr. Fox finds that our school children study such things too much, neglecting what is really worth while.

Several nights ago he introduced a resolution before the board of which he is chairman asking that it be adopted and a copy sent to the board of education. The resolution reads:

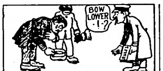
"Resolved, That we, the members of local school board No. 26, having in mind the interest of the parents and the welfare of the children, do hereby record our emphatic disapproval of our educational system, which subordinates grammar to grasshoppers, reading to caterpillars, spelling to golden rod, arithmetic to bullfrogs and penmanship to tadpoles.

"Resolved, That we attribute to these and other equally reprehensible fads the atrocious English that is spoken by the school children of this city, within the very shadow of our grammar schools, from the lips of boys and girls old enough to speak correctly the language of the country of their birth.

"Resolved, That the time has come when the taxpayers and parents should inaugurate a movement for the extirpation from our school system of all the nonsensical fads that have crept into it during the last few years and which inure only to the benefit of those who teach the subjects, write the textbooks or profit by their publication."

But, alas, to-day the tadpole is jubilant; the grasshopper is breaking all records for running and standing jumps and the caterpillar wriggles defiantly throughout the land. Local school board No. 26 killed Mr. Fox's resolution.

School of Courtesy for Railroad Men

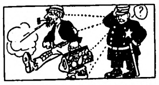


NEW YORK.—So important has good manners come to be rated in the railroad service that one line, the Union Pacific, is going to open a "school of courtesy" for its employes, that ignorance may not be offered or actually exist, as an excuse for brusque behavior or ungentlemanly conduct on the part of the men who represent the road before the public. It has been trying, as all the railroads and public service corporations may fairly be entitled to credit for trying, to guarantee polite treatment of passengers and patrons, and it has now come to the conclusion that conditions can be bettered by the practical training it proposes to give its employes.

If report is correct all the large railroads have inspectors, not only of the railroad stock, but to note also the behavior of the employes, who once in awhile discover to their sorrow that it would have paid to be polite to all passengers, even if no higher motive had existed than the possibility of thereby treating the incognito inspector to his satisfaction. That the

But while the passenger desires courtesy from the trainmen, he must not overlook the fact that courtesy can usually be counted upon to secure courtesy. Captious, inconsiderate passengers or customers or patrons are likely sooner or later to wear upon the most mild-dispositioned or self-controlled attendants, and they should bear in mind when they themselves feel irritable or irritated, that they have a moral responsibility not to make their fellow men stumble in the paths of politeness. Before making a complaint, it would be the fair thing to ask one's self whether one had given cause for impatience.

Lingerie Gets a Hobo Into Trouble



ST. LOUIS.—The expensive-looking grip that a seedy-looking individual was carrying when he met Police Sergeant Wade Hampton Matthews at Twelfth and Pine streets aroused the sergeant's suspicions.

"Where did you get that grip?" asked Matthews.

"It's my grip," was the reply.

"Where are you taking it?" asked Matthews.

"To my apartments," answered the pedestrian.

"What apartments?"

"The Openair apartments," replied the man with the grip.

"Where are they?" persisted Matthews.

"In No street," glibly replied the man.

"Let me see what's in there," demanded Matthews, as he seized the grip and started to open it.

"Go ahead," said the man. "There's nothing there that don't belong to me."

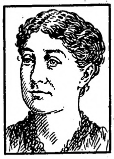
The sergeant put in his hand and pulled out a pair of dirty overalls and a blue jumper. Then his fingers came in contact with a strip of lace. As he pulled on the lace he saw there was more of the garment behind. But it was something that certainly no gentleman could wear.

At Central police station the man with the grip said his name was Tom O'Hill, and he counseled the desk sergeant to be sure and not get an "e" in the last name where the "i" is. The grip contained a complete outfit of lady's wearing apparel and a number of letters addressed to "Mrs. Fitzhugh Funsten, No. 5728 Cates avenue."

At the Funsten residence it was stated that Mrs. Fitzhugh Funsten left the city for Chicago Saturday morning.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

HOT CLASH IN THE D. A. R.



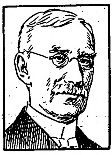
Joseph G. Cannon of Danville is not the only Illinoisan in Washington who has a fight with insurgents on his hands. The anti-Cannon revolution had just boiled down to a near normal stage when the rebellion against the other distinguished representative of the Sucker state broke forth with renewed activity.

It is Mrs. Matthew T. Scott of Bloomington, which is not so very far from Danville, as the crow flies, who has a battle on her hands, and from the way women fight when they once get started Mrs. Scott seems to be in for a real war. Mrs. Scott is the president-general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, an organization which includes in its membership some of the best women in the United States. No feminine society has a handsomer lot of members and none can claim a more intellectual membership, but these handsome and intellectual women have shown in days gone by that they will fight hard for what they think is right.

Some time ago Mrs. Scott wrote a letter to Mrs. Martha R. Wilcox, recording secretary general of the D. A. R., and instructed her to discharge Miss Agnes Gerald, a clerk in her department. Mrs. Scott charged that Miss Gerald was insubordinate.

Mrs. Wilcox, in the politest of terms, replied that Miss Gerald would not be discharged, and she questioned the president-general's right to order the cutting off of the young clerk. That was all that was needed. The D. A. R. will be in session before long in its handsome new building in the capital. Some members of congress say they intend to attend the sessions to see what a real fight is like.

HOUSE'S BLIND CHAPLAIN



No matter how bitter a fight may be pending; no matter what enmity, personal or political, may exist between members, the house of representatives in Washington always begins its day's proceedings with prayer.

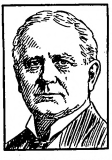
"And a blind man shall lead them."

This quotation may properly be applied to the lower branch of congress, as Rev. Henry Noble Couden, chaplain of the house, is blind. His popularity with the members of the house is the cause of much comment in Washington. The blind clergyman knows scores of the members by the sound of their voices or a certain pressure of the hand. His prayers are fervent, and as he calls upon the Great Ruler to guide the members in their work for the nation the house is as still as the proverbial graveyard, even though a storm may be brewing which may lead certain members almost to blows.

Rev. Mr. Couden was made chaplain of the house in 1893. He was born in Marshall county, Ind., in 1842. He is a nephew of Noah Noble, a former governor of Indiana.

He served in the Union army from 1861 to 1863, when he was honorably discharged by reason of a wound received in battle which destroyed the sight of both eyes.

CLARK BELIEVES IN HOBBY



When Champ Clark retires from congress—he has no intention of doing so right away, for he considers his chances for the speakership better than ever—he intends to turn author. The Missourian who leads the Democrats in the house will write a book entitled "The Curiosities of American History and What One Vote Can Do."

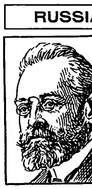
History is Champ Clark's hobby. He hobbies principally toward the history of the United States, and it is the strange things he has discovered in the history of this country that will furnish the great part of his book. He spoke of some of these things before the National Press club in Washington several nights ago. Always an interesting talker, Mr. Clark soon had his audience in close attention.

"I frequently thought," he said, "that a man might write a very interesting book, called 'The Curiosities of History,' and if my life is lengthened after I retire to private life, I think I shall try my hand at it. For instance, it has become the common law in the United States that a man shall have only two terms in the White House. There have never been but four men who could have gotten more than two. Washington held two and refused a third, and as good luck would have it, John Adams could not get two.

"Jefferson got two and confirmed Washington's example. Andrew Jackson got two and Theodore Roosevelt got two, and each confirmed that example, and I make the prediction that no man will ever sit three terms in the White House until this republic is on its last legs.

"I believe that the hobbyists, the fanatics, the cranks and even the monomaniacs have been the motive power in the world's progress. I do not care how ridiculous they may seem to us, I believe that to be the truth."

RUSSIAN DUMA'S SPEAKER



The Russian duma has given its speakership into the hands of a practical, hard-working business man in electing Alexander Goutchkoff to that important office.

Speaker Goutchkoff is widely known in commercial circles for his activity in pushing Russian goods into the far eastern market. Especially is he known as the representative of Moscow industrial interests which are finding themselves crowded out by American and Japanese trade aggression.

It is believed, therefore, that he will make it his business to stiffen Russia's backbone in the Manchurian railroad question, and it is conceded that he has both the ability and the opportunity to do so.

As speaker he has the right of direct access to the czar, and it is thought that he has already given the monarch some respectful but aggressive talks.

Speaker Goutchkoff is almost American in his craving for accurate first-hand knowledge. He went to the front in the Russo-Japanese war to educate himself concerning the far east, and he lived in Japan for many months to familiarize himself with the trend of thought in that country.

Goutchkoff is an Octoberist. That is, he believes in the principles of the political party which bases its platform on the program of moderate progress.

With the czar the new speaker's relations are said to be cordial, although it was he that denounced the grand dukes so scathingly in the duma and caused their resignation from important military commands.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

"Uncle Joe" As an Agent of Dan Cupid

WASHINGTON.—On L. White Busbey's desk in the speaker's ante-room of the national house of representatives reposes a packet of letters indorsed "Cupid." It is the filing cabinet of the "Uncle Joe Matrimonial Bureau," established by accident and not incorporated. Every day brings additions to the speaker's mail, from men and women, young and old, from every quarter of the land seeking surcease from the pangs of loneliness. Some of them are rich, they say, and others want to make themselves happy. Some of the writers are quite "choosey," as to the sort of a helpmeet they want and others will take almost any old thing that is willing to trot or even amble in double harness.

The "Uncle Joe Matrimonial Bureau" had a most modest beginning. Out in Stewardson, Ill., there lives a young farmer who has been reading all sorts of newspaper stories and magazine articles about the higher cost of living. He read that lots of young people did not get married because the cost of living was such that penury and sorrow stared them in the face.

He was a bachelor and prosperous, and it occurred to him that somewhere in the land there must be the mate that would make his home happier and brighter, that might be just yearning to get married, yet scared by all this talk of poverty and trouble. The young man wrote to Speaker Cannon. He wrote a modest postal card to say that he had a farm of 120 acres, and that, like the hotel business, there was "always room for one more." He put it up to the speaker to furnish the one more.

Then Uncle Joe in the goodness of his heart told a newspaper man about the young farmer, and the newspaper man put a piece in the paper and the flood of letters started.

Thought Friend Poor, Found Him Rich

NAMES can't be mentioned in this story. It must stand upon its own feet. A former Clevelander, now resident in Washington, got word that a Cleveland friend was in town. He found out the friend's address. One evening he told his wife he would make a call. He took a car and got off at a certain circle. Two streets lead from this running in the same direction. He thought he took the right one. In point of fact he took the wrong. One is a first-class residence district; the other is made up of mean buildings. He paused before the number that had given him as the address of his friend. He gazed up at the dusty, dirty outside in dismay. Then he went home.

"I hadn't the heart to go any further," he told his wife. "John must be playing in awfully hard luck."

"Why didn't you go to see?" his wife demanded. "He may be ill and alone."

"He's too proud," said the husband. "I remember that pride of his. It's almost an affliction."

Next day he went to his bank and drew out a hundred dollars in one bill. This he put into an envelope and sent to the address of his friend, writing street and number correctly. He told the messenger not to say where the letter had come from. This answer came in the morning's mail:

"Dear Bill—Well, you've decided to pay that old poker debt after all these years, have you? Much obliged. I'm going to have that bill framed and hang it on the wall when I get home."

The recipient of the letter slowly tore it to bits. His mind went back to the days of that crazy youth that his friend referred to. He remembered the hundred now; he was astonished that it wasn't more.

"I suppose Mary will ask me if I've heard," he mused. "I guess I'll say he was too proud to answer, but he needed the money so badly he kept it."

Honor for Owney the Postoffice Dog

OWNEY
THAT'S RIGHT, MY SON
MA-A I'AM GONNA' BE GREAT SOME DAY, TOO

"OWNEY" is about to come into his own. "Owney" was a dog. He still is, but he is a dead dog. His mounted remains will be on exhibit at the Ohio Valley exposition, to be held at Cincinnati next autumn.

Postmaster General Hitchcock has also arranged to send a postal exhibition to the show. The chief clerk of the department has notified the exposition management that he has selected the leading features of the museum, which will be forwarded in ample time for the opening.

But "Owney" will get the place of prominence. The dog's story makes for pity. Almost 24 years ago the little Scotch terrier was found curled up asleep on top of some mail bags in the postoffice at Albany. He had taken refuge from the cold. The mail clerks adopted him. They at length named him "Owney" because of the frequent question: "Who is your owner?"

One day he followed the mail wagon to the station and boarded a car while the mail was being loaded. He was unobserved till after the train had started. Then the clerks sent him back to Albany. After that he made frequent trips. In addition to covering the United States and Canada, he visited Europe and Asia. The mikado of Japan presented him with a silver medal upon which was engraved the national coat of arms.

"Owney" met a death not in keeping with his honored life. At Toledo, on one of his journeys, he was chained in the basement of the postoffice. A photographer attempted to take his picture. "Owney" barked his objections. A clerk sought to sooth him and was bitten. The clerk spread the report that the dog was mad, and a policeman shot him.

Ground Hog Rank Faker, Says Moore

A GROUND HOG PROPHET
HE'S JEALOUS
HE'S A FAKER

WILLIS L. MOORE, chief of the weather bureau, is the victim of a professional "grouch." He has become incensed at the ground hog as a business rival. He believes his competitor should be let in for a share of criticism and not all of it thrown at his head.

"You never pick up a paper," said Prof. Moore, "that you don't see harsh criticism of the weather bureau. We get roasted if the weather is hot. We get roasted if the weather is cold. And when it rains the abuse heaped upon us is terrific.

"No matter what we do it is wrong. If we miss the time of the coming of rain by half an hour we are declared grossly incompetent.

"Naturally, being director of the bureau, I have to bear the brunt of this criticism. That is as it should be. Moreover, I am used to it.

"But while the abuse is going around, why not be impartial with it? What about that great weather prophet—the ground hog?

"What about ground hogs! I ask you, is he not the greatest faker, the greatest fourflusher, the greatest buncombe artist that ever pretended to look at a cloud and tell you what was in it?

"What did he do this year? Did he make good? Not a bit of it.

"He crawled out of his hole on February 2, saw his shadow, got his picture in every paper in the country, and then beat it back to his lair, leaving behind him the idea that the remainder of February and all of March would be marked by bad weather.

"Was it a reliable forecast? I should say not. We have had the mildest and most beautiful March in years. Yet the ground hog gets off without a single roast. And next year people will be just as eager to believe in his judgment."

GOOD LANGUAGE.

A very valuable habit for a family to acquire is that of using pure and precise language. As a matter of art, such an acquisition is desirable. There are beauty and grace in the very form of language correctly and concisely spoken. There is a charm in the speaker who is careful of his manner of speech. But far more important than the beauty of correct speech is the intellectual vigor which it simulates and promotes. The use of good language encourages the habit of clear thinking. Speaking well and thinking well naturally go together. The intellectual process largely controls the manner of expression. This does not commend the use of stilted and pompous language, for that can be, and sometimes is used, to conceal the lack of thought. Our object is to discourage mussy, incoherent, scrappy and slangy speech, because it tends to ruin the mind and morals, too. People who use such language have confused ideas and lack an appreciation of what is true and beautiful. There is nothing more serviceable in making good clean men and women out of the children, than a household habit of clear and concise expression. It promotes not only thinking, but thoughtfulness, and thoughtfulness is one of the greatst virtues of a home. But make exact and proper speech one of the institutions of the home and it will remove from the heart many anxieties for the future of the child.

The proposition to cnange the date of presidential inauguration from March 4 to a day late in April, in order to avoid the risk of inclement weather, has ben sidetracked for the present. There is opposition in congress on various grounds, but one of the most curious is that the movement is in the interest of the Washingtonians, who want a chance for "showing off" under favorable conditions. There really is little glory for the Washington people in the inauguration exercises, and as they bear the expense of the spectacular part of the performance there would not be any serious damage done if once in every four years they did give themselves the privilege of getting into the spotlight. But the really serious objection to inauguration day in early March is the risk involved to the lives and health of the participants.

The immigration into the United States in 1909 did not reach record figures, the arrivals at New York, the chief port of entry, being 771,380, against 1,040,169 in 1907, which marked the flood tide. But the ingress of aliens indicated that prosperity had returned, for the ebb and flow of immigration correspond very closely to the industrial situation in this country. There were some unusual features in the 1909 immigration, including the arrival of 1,638 persons from Brazil to locate here. Ordinarly the drift is supposed to be in the other direction, Brazil being largely undeveloped and offering notable inducements to settlers.

A Cleveland schoolma'am when she was attacked by a highwayman threw him into a snow bank and then jumped on him. This is a splendid argument for the cleaning of sidewalks. If the sidewalk had not been cleaned where the schoolma'am was attacked there might have been no snow bank into which the highwayman could have been thrown.

The Cincinnati telephone exchange has a new arrangement by which a subscriber who begins to find fault with "Central" is at once switched to a sweet-voiced operator, called in the office terminology "Trouble," who asks him gently: "What's the matter?" It's a great thing for the Cincinnati folks to have somebody to tell their troubles to.

A report comes from Constantinople that the European powers have proposed that Turkey sell Crete to Greece. Turkish pride may stand in the way of such a solution of the difficulty, but to disinterested outsiders this would seem to be an easy way of getting rid of chronic trouble.

The nation paid out $16,000,000 for tuberculosis last year. Fresh air comes high, but we must have it. No one has yet suggested a patrolman to go about smashing in all closed bed-room windows.

ILLINOIS "WETS" WIN FIGHT

SALOON MAKE GAINS ALL OVER THE STATE.

Liquor Interests Victorious in 146 Towns and Cities—Regain 37 From "Drys."

Chicago.—The local option vote in Illinois cities and town showed a tendency in favor of the "wets," when it is compared with the similar contests of two years ago.

Almost everywhere the "wets" held onto the cities where saloons have flourished, and in only a few instances were their votes cut down. In addition, they won a considerable number of cities back from the "drys," who had driven out the saloons in the elections of two years ago. In a large number of cities the "wet" majorities showed considerable increase.

The "drys" gained a few cities from the "wets," but none of these were of importance.

Returns from 163 towns showed that 99 had voted in favor of saloons and 64 against them.

Of the 99 credited to the "wets" 37 had been voted "dry" two years ago.

Out of 64 which voted "dry," only 14 represented places which had been taken out of the "wet" column.

The biggest "wet" victories were represented by the return of the saloons to Decatur, Rockford and Mattoon, whose capture by the "drys" two years ago had been considered a remarkable triumph for the Prohibitionists. In addition to these, the "wets" recaptured, among others, Batavia, Belvidere, Clinton, Fairbury, Naperville and Pana.

The "wets" also succeeded in holding onto Aurora, Bloomington, Danville, Centralia, Elgin, Freeport, Joliet, Waukegan, Moline, Springfield and Sterling.

The anti-saloon forces ended the day with no notable victories, although the fact that they held their own in the city of Galesburg, which they kept in the "dry" column, and the fact that they won over several minor places, gave them some cause for rejoicing.

The most notable fight of the day was that made in Danville, where for a time it seemed as though Governor Deneen might have to use the militia to end rioting. The disturbances were put down, however, without such extremes. But when the votes were counted it was found that Danville had been held in the "wet" column by a majority of 1,018. This, however, was a decided decrease from the 2,500 majority of two years ago, and the "drys" claimed that their work had not been entirely in vain.

In Chicago aldermanic election the Democrats won a victory electing 21 members to the common council. The Republicans elected 13 and the Independents one. A Republican majority of 11 in the present council was changed to a minority of six.

ANDREW CARNEGIE IS FEEBLE

New York Friends Are Much Perturbed Over Physical Condition of Ironmaster.

New York.—Friends of Andrew Carnegie, who has just returned here from the west, were perturbed by his physical condition. At his home it was declared that he merely was fatigued and that after a thorough rest he would be perfectly well, but the facts that he required the assistance of two men in alighting from his car and that his personal appearance indicated physical unrest or ailment have created uneasiness.

Vote Strike on Three Roads.

Cleveland, O.—Trainmen and conductors employed upon the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, the Lake Erie & Western, and the Nickel Plate railways have voted almost unanimously to strike unless their original proposition for a wage increase is accepted by those roads. The vote was canvassed by the officials of the employee's union.

Put Eddie Fay in Jail Nude.

Richmond, Va.—Fred Cunningham, alias "Eddie" Fay, and Frank Chester, alias Little Dick Harris, arrested in New York on a charge of looting the cashier's safe of the Richmond post office, were lodged in jail here Friday. A thousand or more persons were at the station to meet them. Great care was taken to prevent their escape. The prisoners were stripped, bathed and placed naked in their cells. "They won't try any silk thread and emery dust work on my bars," said the jailer.

"WETS" CARRY WISCONSIN

Many Cities Refuse to Vote Out License—Social Democrats Elect Mayor in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee.—Wet victories were the rule in the scores of license elections held in Wisconsin.

Notable in the list of cities which refused to vote out license were Racine, Janesville, New Richmond, Baraboo, Platteville, River Falls, Waupaca, Galesville, Hudson, Monroe and Trempealeau, while the most important change from wet to dry was Edgerton, wet two years ago by 30, which went dry this year by a margin of 90 votes. Stoughton, Lodi, Viroqua and Cumberland remain dry.

New Richmond, which went wet this year, was dry for nearly two years, but a few days ago a court decision was rendered that the city had voted dry illegally, because of a faulty election notice. The vote, however, revokes the former verdict of the voters.

The results of the license vote were as follows:

Dry towns remaining dry: Stoughton, Coloma, Lodi, Argyle, Brodhead, Oak, Cumberland, Dallas, Viroqua, Readstown, Viola, La Farge.

Wet towns remaining wet: Racine, Kenosha, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Marinette, Oconomowoc, Montello, Packwaukee, Randolph, Palmyra, Florence, Pewaukee, River Falls, Black River Falls, Merrillan, Baraboo, Mineral Point, Blanchardsville, Belmont, Darlington, Plattesville, Hudson, Janesville, Monroe, Cameron, Turtle Lake, Waupaca, Reedsburg, Plainfield, Trempealeau, Galesville, Beloit, Bayley's Harbor, Rice Lake, Seymour, Oregon, Algoma, Forestville.

Dry towns going wet: Albany, Darien, New Richmond, Delavan, Sharon, Sturgeon Bay, Jacksonport Union Grove.

Wet towns going dry: Edgerton, Alma Center, Barron, Coon Valley, Gays Mills.

There were not many contests in the state upon party issues. The majority of the contests were with nonpartisan candidates.

In Milwaukee the Social Democrats, led by Emil Seidel, candidate for mayor, swept the city in the municipal election by approximately 8,000 votes, or the largest plurality of any party in a similar contest in the history of the city. The Social Democrats will control the common council, having elected all six aldermen at large and carried 14 wards out of 23.

ORDER BUTTER TRUST PROBE

Attorney General Starts Investigation into Methods of Elgin Board in Fixing Prices.

Washington.—Attorney General Wickersham Thursday ordered a strict investigation of the Elgin board with a view to prosecuting or dissolving the organization as a conspiracy in restraint of trade, or in other words, as the butter trust.

As a matter of fact the Elgin body of butter producers has been under investigation for some time, but the testimony of President Newman and Vice-President Wood before the Lodge committee forced the hand of the Department of Justice and the open order for an investigation was given.

Both Mr. Newman and Mr. Wood testified that while the prices are controlled by New York, the board at Elgin does actually fix each Monday the price that is to be paid for butter for the entire week. As they also testified that within the Elgin district are the southern tier of counties of Wisconsin, the eastern tier of Iowa and all of Illinois, and further that practically all the butter in which the board deals is shipped east.

BOLD BANDITS SHOT

THREE OF GANG INJURED IN DESPERATE SHOTGUN FIGHT.

BLOW UP BANK; GET $2,000

Bind Night Watchman and Engineer, Crack the Safe and Flee on Freight Train—Battle Follows Hot Chase—Two Escape.

Coal City, Ill.—The depredations of the James brothers were vividly brought to mind when five bank robbers fought a desperate battle with officers and posse after they had looted the Coal City State bank just before daylight Thursday.

The bandits gagged and bound the town watchman and engineer, blew the bank safe, boarded a freight train and fled with $2,000 of loot, to be cornered by the quick wit of a telegraph operator.

Three of their number were captured by the posse that waylaid them, while the other two escaped with the booty.

The bandits were all Chicago youths.

The bandits entered the town on a passing freight train and began operations by tying Barney Ghetto, the night watchman, and Washington Frie, the night engineer of the electrical plant.

They then blew up the bank building with a terrific charge of nitroglycerin and leaped on a west-bound Santa Fe freight train with their plunder. Three hours later three men, believed to be of their number, had been captured by Sheriff Thomas Steel of Morris, Ill., who had been notified by the night watchman after the latter had broken loose the ropes which held him and made possible the organization of the posse.

Just as the train carrying the five bandits pulled out of the town, Ghetto succeeded in cutting his bonds and rushed to a telephone and notified Eugene Miller, the night watchman at Yazoo, seven miles south of Coal City, and he, with Dr. E. D. Watts, who happened to be at the station at that time, lay in wait for the robbers. Watts was armed with a repeating shotgun, and Miller carried a revolver. At Mazon the train stopped to switch cars. The bandits leaped from the car as it stopped and hid in the dense clumps of shrubbery which flank the right of way.

Before the train was again in motion Miller and the physician had discovered three men crouching in the bushes and opened fire. The fire was returned and about twenty-five shots were exchanged. The bandits then leaped back on the train, which had started, and escaped once more.

Immediately the sheriff at Morris was notified and the posse was organized. Several automobiles were pressed into service and the pursuit began. There is a road following the right of way of the Santa Fe tracks between Morris and Verona and along this the chase took place. For a time the members of the posse in their machines sped directly alongside the speeding freight train and shots were fired at dark objects which were thought to resemble the bandits.

When at last the train came to a stop at Verona the cars were searched by the sheriff and his men.

In an empty baggage car of the train were found three of the bandits. All three were wounded and their comrades had fled. It is believed that they leaped off the moving train from the side opposite the pursuing posse.

HOLD UP PIONEER EXPRESS

Two Bandits Cut Air-Brake Hose and Fight Conductor—No Money Is Obtained.

St. Paul, Minn.—Two masked bandits made an unsuccessful attempt to hold up and rob the Pioneer limited train on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad as it sped through the picturesque region of southwestern Wisconsin.

Conductor A. P. Shumway of Milwaukee, in charge of the train, was confronted on the platform of the sleeping car Ontonagon by the two robbers, who demanded that he signal the train to stop, then throw up his hands. He struck one of the men down with his lantern and retreated into the sleeping car. The bandits had cut the air hose of the train, stopping it, and they escaped.

A few hours later two colored men were taken into custody in La Crosse, Wis., on suspicion of being the bandits. They were heavily armed, but denied complicity in the hold-up. They refused to give their names.

Rivers Bill Is Approved.

Washington.—The rivers and harbors bill, carrying all the appropriations for Illinois improvements and the deep waterway as it passed the house, was finally approved by the senate commerce committee. It will be reported to the senate Monday morning.

New York.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has been formally nominated for reelection as vice-president of the Young Men's Bible class of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church.

POPE VOICES HIS REGRET

SORRY HE DID NOT GET TO MEET ROOSEVELT.

Former President and Wife Travel Over Scene of Honeymoon—To Meet Pinchot.

Rome.—Several prominent ecclesiastics who were received by the pope Thursday managed to introduce the subject of the Roosevelt incident. To these the pontiff expressed the deepest regret that he had been prevented from meeting the former president, but he gave utterance to no opinion regarding the negotiations or the deadlock that followed. The incident continues to be a live topic of discussion and is emphasized by what the liberal press calls the new mistake of Cardinal Merry del Val, who also prevented the Choral society of Cologne being received by the pope because the society visited the Quirinal and sang before the Italian sovereigns, although every year hundreds of persons are received by King Victor Emmanuel and afterward admitted to the presence of his holiness.

Genoa.—Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt reached Genoa Saturday morning and, after spending a few hours in the city, they left for Porto Maurizio, where they will be the guests of Miss Carow, Mrs. Roosevelt's sister.

Notwithstanding the wishes of the travelers, they were given a demonstrative welcome here, the feature of which was a parade in their honor.

One day of traveling in an old-fashioned carriage, drawn by three horses, proved enough for Mr. Roosevelt and his wife, and they exchanged the ancient equipage for an auto, in which they completed their journey to this city.

Mr. Roosevelt had intended to make the present trip incognito, but he is finding that everywhere he goes his coming has been announced, and the villagers gather to see him. Before leaving Spezia the ex-president and Mrs. Roosevelt went to the Hotel Croce di Malta, where they were shown the room they occupied while on their honeymoon trip.

MICHIGAN "WETS" IN LEAD

"Drys" Carry Twenty Counties for Sixteen Won by Opponents—State Nearly Equal.

Detroit, Mich—Complete returns from the local option election in Michigan show a net majority for the "wets" in all the counties voting of 6,299, though the "drys" carried 20 counties to 16 for the "wets." The dry victories were won in those counties where the saloon is only a minor factor, while in the more critical counties the wets swept everything. There now are 40 "dry" and 43 "wet" counties in the state.

Three notable examples where local option failed were Kent, Oakland and Wexford counties.

Oakland and Wexford were only two of the ten dry counties in which the question was resubmitted which went "wet." Oakland county, the scene of one of the hardest battles, defeated the local option by a majority of 1,000, while Wexford flopped by 250 votes. Kent county and Grand Rapids were carried by the "wets" by a majority of 7,500.

The greatest surprise of the election came in the township of Kent, confidently claimed by the "drys" and conceded by the "wets" by large majorities. This, added to the heavy Grand Rapids "wet" vote, piled up a sweeping majority.

In the northern peninsula every one of the eight counties voting remained in the "wet" column. Thus the upper peninsula remains solidly "wet." In St. Clair county, Port Huron swung into line with a decisive "wet" vote, which, augmented by the county poll, ran up a 2,500 majority.

The Island of Mackinac voted "wet" by 88 per cent.

THOMAS F. WALSH IS DEAD

Colorado Millionaire Passes Away at His Residence in Washington From Heart Failure.

Washington.—Thomas F. Walsh, the Colorado millionaire, died here in his beautiful residence, Twenty-second street and Massachusettts avenue, last night of heart failure.

Mrs. Walsh's wife, his daughter, Mrs. Edward McLean, and his son-in-law, Edward McLean, were at his bedside when the end came. His fatal illness dates from the time, about a month ago, when he was stricken in San Antonio, Tex. Accompanied by Mrs. Walsh, the famous millionaire who even then realized his condition, expressed a desire to return to Washington and see once more his young grandson, less than a year old, who through the death of Mr. Walsh, becomes one of the richest infants in the world.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

A Small Loaf.

A half-famished fellow in the southern states tells of a baker (whose loaves had been growing "small by by degrees and beautifully less") who, when going his rounds to serve his customers, stopped at the door of one and knocked, when the lady within exclaimed: "Who's there?" and was answered: "The baker." "What do you want?" "To leave your bread." "Well, you needn't make such a fuss about it; put it through the keyhole."

Critics and Managers Clash.

Between the whole press of Copenhagen and all the theatrical managers a curious contest has started because the managers want to compel the critics to write only favorable notices. The contest began when the board of theatrical managers forbade the admission of one critic representing a special theatrical paper.

Getting in Deep.

"Father," said little Rollo, "what is the fourth dimension?"

"Why—er—my son, that is hard to explain to the inexpert intelligence. It is something that may exist, only you can't locate it."

"I know. It's like the piece of pie I'm to get when there is company to dinner."

ABANDONED IT

For the Old Fashioned Coffee Was Killing.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Sometimes it would beat fast and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be caused by coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum. The change came quickly. I am now glad to say that I am entirely well of the heart trouble and attribute the relief to leaving off coffee and the use of Postum.

"A number of my friends have abandoned the old fashioned coffee and have taken up with Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if it is boiled long enough, according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage. We have never used any of the old fashioned coffee since Postum was first started in our house."

UNCLE JOE CANNON

HE ALSO SPEAKS WELL OF CANADA.

No matter what may be the opinion of Mr. Joseph Cannon, no matter if he may be looked upon by some as a czar, and by others as a big warm-hearted man, with many of the instincts that make humanity very bearable, all will admit that he is a man who has been advertised more than any other man in the United States. What he may have to say therefore on any subject, will have weight. Observant, he speaks his mind freely. He was interviewed the other day by the correspondent of a Canadian newspaper. He spoke of his admiration for Canada, and he is quoted in a way that pictures farily well the personar of the man. The correspondent says he launched out into personal biography, proverbial philosophy, political comment, cynical scorn, broad profanity and sentimental poetry such as one rarely hears in the space of an hour. He discussed the Canadian tariff, and then said: "People say I break the Ten Commandmants, all of them. But I don't, at least not often. I did break one of them up in Canada two or three years ago. As I rode from Winnipeg to the Rockies over your great West and saw the finest wheatfields in the world, I thought of Virginia and a lot of our States, and I smashed the Tenth Commandment every hour of the journey. Yes, sir, I coveted my neighbor's land." Coming from a man of the fame of Mr. Cannon, these were words that should have some weight with the Americans who may still have doubts of the advantages that are offered to them in Western Canada. A home amongst the wheatfields. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are adopting it. They go to Central Canada, to any one of the three Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or to the Coast Province of British Columbia, take up their homestead of 160 acres, and probably pre-empt another 160 acres, or it may be they do not care for pioneering twenty or thirty miles from an existing railway, and purchase a farm. Then they settle upon it and, having no clearing away of timber they begin at once to cultivate it, and make money. That they make money and much more than they could possibly make on the high-priced farms they have left, is the evidence of hundreds of thousands. They do not leave civilized life, they but remove from one sphere to another. They have splendid social conditions, churches, schools, rural telephones, splendid roads, railways, convenient just the same as what they left, and what is more, they get much greater returns from their crops, which give abundant yield. The climate is perfect, and it is no wonder that most flattering reports are sent back to their friends in the States, and it is no wonder that Joe Cannon was tempted to speak as he did. He "coveted" his neighbor's land.

Used to It.

Recently a lady witness in a court up the state was subjected to a troublesome fire of cross questions, and the lawyer, thinking that some apology was necessary, tried to square himself.

"I really hope, madam," said he, "that I don't annoy you with all these questions."

"Oh, no," was the prompt reply; "I am accustomed to it."

"You don't mean it?" wonderingly returned the lawyer.

"Yes," rejoined the lady, "I have a six-year-old boy at home."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

HEATWOLE IS DEAD

END COMES WHILE FORMER CONGRESSMAN IS TALKING TO WIFE AND PHYSICIAN.

HE WAS A NATIVE OF INDIANA

Unique Figure in Minnesota Politics Is Removed.—Had Long Been Prominent As a Newspaper Man.

Northfield. — Hon. Joel P. Heatwole of Northfield, is dead. Death came suddenly while he was talking to his wife and physicians. Mr. Heatwole had been in bad health for a long time. He was afflicted with diabetes and the most vigorous efforts of the physicians failed to stop the progress of the disease.

He spent a good share of the past year in California, returning greatly improved, but for the last few weeks it has been known that the end was only a question of time.

For many years Mr. Heatwole had his eye on the United States senate. In the last campaign he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor, but withdrew from the fight at its conclusion, refusing to enter the convention hall. It was said that he was too ill to leave his room at the Ryan hotel.

Joel P. Heatwole.

Mr. Heatwole first attempted to enter congress in 1892, but was defeated, greatly reducing the majority of his opponent. He was elected mayor of Northfield by a large majority and in 1894 again ran for congress, being elected by a majority of 5,268.

Joel Heatwole was born at Waterford, Ind., Aug. 22, 1856. His education was received in public and private schools. Before the age of 17 he became a teacher in the district schools of northern Indiana and in 1876 was elected principal of the graded school of Millersburg. He had already learned the printer's trade and in August, 1876, began publishing his first newspaper, the Millersburg Enterprise.

He moved to Middlebury, where he began the publication of a weekly paper called the Record. This paper he conducted for three years, when he sold it and removed to Goshen, Ind. There he became a part owner of the Times and was engaged in newspaper work until 1882. He then sold out and in August of the same year came to Minnesota, settling first at Glencoe, where he purchased an interest in the Enterprise, which he edited until the next July.

To Northfield in 1884.

He then sold this interest and went to Duluth and was employed on the Lake Superior News. In November, 1883, he returned to Glencoe and resumed charge of the Enterprise until April, 1884, when he bought the Northfield News and consolidated it with the Northfield Journal. He had built up this paper to be one of the finest weekly newspaper properties in the state.

Mr. Heatwole was elected first vice-president of the State Editorial association in 1886 and president in 1887, 1888 and 1889. He was always a Republican and was secretary of the Republican state central committee in 1886 to 1890. In 1888 he was unanimously elected a delegate at large to the Republican national convention. In 1890 he was elected chairman of the state central committee and conducted the second campaign in which Mr. Merriam was a candidate for reelection as governor. He was made a regent of the state university in December, 1891.

Mr. Heatwole was married Dec. 4. 1890, to Mrs. Gertrude I. Archibald of Northfield.

ST. CLOUD HAS ELECTION.

Republican Candidate Is Chosen for Mayor.

St. Cloud. — In one of the very warmest and most hotly contested city elections held in this city for several years Daniel H. Freeman, Republican candidate, was elected mayor over James B. Murphy, Independent, by a majority of 150 votes. James R. Bennett, Jr., Democratic boss of Stearns county defeated James E. Jenks, Republican, for city attorney by 232 votes.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Will Be Held in St. Paul Auditorium on June 21.

St. Paul. — The Republican state central committee met Saturday in the Merchants' hotel and took luncheon, the business meeting following. Practically everything was settled before the gathering was called to order by Chairman A. D. Brown, but there was still some difference over the date for the convention. Some advocated June 23, and others held out for June 15. Still others favored July 6, but after a long discussion June 23 is selected.

Going to St. Paul.

The location will be St. Paul. Sentiment was strong for that city, and the Minneapolis invitation was read without an effort to land the prize for the metropolis.

There was some debate over the basis of apportionment, but the favorite seemed to be taken on the average vote for seven candidates on the state ticket in 1908. This makes a convention of 1,075 delegates and gives Hennepin county only eighty-nine, while Ramsey will have sixty-seven. The cities would get a much better deal under the Taft vote and protested against the injustice, but the country members were unwilling to yield anything to the cities. The county option influence was strong in the committee for the smaller convention because it would reduce the influence of the larger centers.

Will Indorse Senator.

No fight developed against the proposition of Senator Clapp's friends, who have a resolution prepared to include the indorsement of a senator in the call. W. H. Grimshaw, United Staes marshal, and Clapp's manager in the previous campaigns, sat in the committee meeting with the proxy of George H. Sullivan, of Stillwater, to look after the senator's interest.

Death of Judge Thomas Wilson.

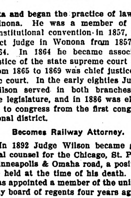
Judge Thomas Wilson, of St. Paul, a regent of the University of Minnesota, and former chief justice of the state supreme court, died suddenly in the bathroom of his apartment in the Aberdeen hotel, St. Paul. His body was found by the clerk of the hotel.

Death was due either to a ruptured blood vessel in the brain or to heart failure. Both conditions were found in an examination by doctors.

Home from Nassau.

Judge Wilson, who was 83 years old, returned Saturday from Nassau. He said the stay in the south had done him good, and he seemed to be in good spirits when he retired. At 3 p. m. a maid who knocked at the door of his apartment received no response, and called the clerk. The clerk, using a pass key, entered the apartment and found Judge Wilson's body stretched out in front of the bath tub. Physicians said Judge Wilson had been dead at least four hours.

Judge Wilson was born in county Tyrone, Ireland, May 26, 1827. He came to the United States in 1838 and in 1852 graduated at Allegheny college, Pa. In 1855 he came to Minnesota and began the practice of law at Winona. He was a member of the constitutional convention in 1857, district judge in Wonona from 1857 to 1864. In 1864 he became associate justice of the state supreme court and from 1865 to 1869 was chief justice of the court. In the early eighties Judge Wilson served in both branches of the legislature, and in 1886 was elected to congress from the first congressional district.



Becomes Railway Attorney.

In 1892 Judge Wilson became general counsel for the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha road, a position he held at the time of his death. He was appointed a member of the university board of regents four years ago.

Judge Wilson was married in 1860 to Louisa Bennett. They had one child, a daughter, who married Lloyd Bowers. Mrs. Wilson died twelve years ago in St. Paul, and shortly afterward Mrs. Bowers died in her Chicago home.

The funeral will take place Wednesday. Lloyd Bowers, Judge Wilson's son-in-law, will arrive in St. Paul Wednesday from Washington. The interment will be Thursday in Winona.

Owatonna. — The third railway way bridge within a week to be burned in this vicinity has caused officials to suspect incendiarism. 'SUPREME COURT" OF BASEBALL WORLD

National Commission Divided by Decision Which Permits Johnny Kling to Catch for the Chicago Cubs This Season.

THE National Commission, composed of Garry Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati Reds, Thomas J. Lynch, president of the National league, and Ban B. Johnson, president of the American league, after months of discussion, has decided to let Johnny Kling catch for the Chicago Cubs.

The finding of the commission is that Kling shall pay from his own pocket a fine of $700; that he cannot play with any other club for a year, and that the Chicago club shall not pay Kling more than $4,500 a year.

Probably no case has ever come before the National commission, "the supreme court of baseball," that attracted so much attention. Every baseball fan knew that Kling was without a peer as a catcher. His work with the Cubs, winners of pennants and world's championships, was a standard of excellency at which young catchers aimed. With him out of the game the Cubs fell to second place in the National league race last year, and while Archer and Moran did excellent work behind the bat there were many who said that Kling's absence cost Murphy's club the National league pennant and probably the world's championship. Whether Kling's absence from the game for a year will interfere with his playing remains to be seen. He played a few games last year and it was because he was associated with some ineligible players that his case took on a more serious aspect.

It was claimed that Kling had written permission from Charles W. Murphy, president of the Cubs, to remain out of the game for a year to take charge of his billiard room in Kansas City, but Kling was unable to produce the letter when the commission asked for it. However, two Kansas City sporting writers made affidavit that they had seen the letter before Kling lost it. Murphy produced a copy of the letter, the genuineness of which was not questioned.

It was over the punishment that was to be meted out to Kling that the National commission had its wrangle. Johnson—who, by the way, is not friendly to Murphy—wanted to impose a heavy fine on Kling. Herrmann, the chairman, and Lynch, the other member, would not agree to this, so when the written agreement was prepared it was signed only by Herrmann and Lynch, Johnson objecting to his name being attached to it.

Kling announced that he was ready to start training with the Cubs at once, and, having practiced daily in Kansas City while waiting for the commission to render its decision, will be in good condition before the season is far advanced. With Kling, Archer, Moran and Needham as catchers, the Cubs are stronger in the backstop department than any other club and Chicago fans are predicting another world's championship for the Windy City.

It is not unlikely that the case has started a row in the National commission that will not be easily patched over and fans are expecting further trouble in that august body.

"I believe a mistake has been made by the commission," said Ban Johnson, "but I shall offer no criticism of the work of Messrs. Lynch and Herrmann."

The Republican state convention will be held at St Paul on June 23rd.

Red Lake Falls is to have a potato warehouse, which will be another good add for Red Lake county.

The floating indebtness of Clearwater county has inareased $20,000, in the last two years, and now they are going to refuse to pay the old outstanding warrants and allow them to be put into judgements, Then the county auditor will be forced to levey a special tax to pay them judgements, thus making the people pay double taxes. The farmers of Clearwater county are just beginning to find out that division of that county from Beltrami was not such a fine thing afterall, as it threw them into the power of the Bagley scheamers who are now preparing to suck the last drop of blood out of them.

Report comes from Crookston to the effect that the ownership of the Crookston Press has passed into the hands of Postmaster Elias Steenerson, in partnership with G. T. Hagen, former owner of the Press, who sold it to E. N. Feroe, and who is also publisher of the Vesterheimen, a weekly Norwegian publication. This is supposed to indicate that Congressman Steenerson is laying lines for a fight the coming fall in connection with his re election to congress.—Thirteen Towns.

It is somewhat of a surprise to us that Congressman Steenerson is looking for newspaper support over in Polk county, in view of the fact that him and his committeemen are using all of their energy to round up socialist clubs up in Red Lake county, and give them a front seat on the band wagon.

Jester Is Silent.

Al H. Jester has come out in the Olberg Journal with a "Declaration of Principles," not one of which but can be heartily endorsed by every citizen of the 61st district. It is also the same platform advocated by all candidates for Senator in this district. As to what he proposes to do on the county option proposition he is as silent as the grave. Many other candidates would like to ignore or straddle that question, but it will be hard to do it this time.—Mahnome Plaintalk.

Mr. Jester takes just the right position regarding county option, for while there are some county option cranks in the district, thare are a lot of other people in this county that are opposed to electing men to the legislature from this district loaded down with county option promises, so they can not get any thing for their district. The next legislature will not pass any county option law, and the question for the people to decide is, whether they want to send a man to the state senate to do something for this part of the state, or send an old temperance crank down there to tell that big majority where they get off at, on county option. Mr. Jester is right to keep silent on this question, and when the votes are counted in September he will find that there are other people besides county opition cranks in the 61st district.

NO MORE DELAY,

Red Lake County's New Court House Soon To Be Built.

The suits in the district court last week, the decision of which determined the county's title to lots purchased for a court house site, have disposed of every technical ground on which the Thief River Falls county seat fighters can make a move to prevent the erection of the court house in Red Lake Falls.

Judge Watts held that the purchase of the lots by Red Lake county was a leagal transaction and gave judgment to the vendors for the amount of the purchase price, Since the amount of the purchase price had been prematurly paid it was held that the judgment had already been satisfied,

And that's all there is to that,

The county now owns a court house sit the title to which cannot be questioned, and the county has the money with which to pay for the erection of the building. The contract has already been let and the supreme court has decree that the county commissioners have acted with authority in providing for the erection af the building.—Red Lake Falls Gazette,

Arago's Modesty.

Arago, the great French scientist, was never seen with a decoration on his breast. He valued honors lightly. One evening Leverrier, the astronomer, called on him on his way to dine with a minister. He expressed a wish to appear decorated with an order to which he was entitled, having received the official notice of the honor, although he had not as yet the decoration itself.

"Open that drawer," said Arago, "and take whatever you want."

In that drawer were all the crosses and ribbons which kings and emperors confer.

While Arago wished above everything to promulgate science and to make his researches useful, he did not attempt to identify himself forever with his discoveries by writing books. He had no time for writing, but contented himself with noting the results of his work in the record of the bureau of longitude or announcing it verbally to the academy.

The Valuables.

The man with a wife and seven children hauled up in front of the hotel desk, registered, got his bellboy and was starting off when the clerk, thinking maybe he might jolly the new arrival, called to him.

"I beg your pardon," he said, "but hadn't you better leave your valuables in the safe?"

"Do you think I ought to?" inquired the man innocently enough, to hear him say it.

"Well, it is the best plan."

"All right," said the man, and, turning to his wife, "Here, Mary, pass the children over to the gent behind the counter. He'll look after them and give us a rest."

Whereupon the clerk apologized.—Judge.

The Englishman and His "Bawth."

"I had a bachelor apartment at one time with an Englishman, who was always talking about his 'bawth, you know,'" said a New York banker. "The first thing of a morning he said: 'I must take my bawth, you know. Really, now, I must take my bawth—haw, haw!'

"'So as not to chill my feet, you know—haw, haw!' he explained to me

"Then he stood on the soft towel in the two inches of water, turned on the spray, sprang through it, leaped out and rushed for a towel.

POINTS REGARDING CENSUS

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States census, 1910."

The law requires every adult person to furnish the prescribed information, but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The Census Bureau, prior to April 15, will disribute to every farm owner and tenant in this state a blank or schedule containing the census questions relative to farm operations and equipment. This should be filled up, if possible, not later than the morning of April 15, but if anyone has been unable to fill it up by that time, he should do it as soon afterwards as he can.

People who do not speak english or who do not understand the schedule completely should get help from others, if possible, in filling it up.

The President has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to cooperat wich the Census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with taxation, army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquiries.

It is the utmost importance that the farm census of this state be complet and correct. Therefore every farm owner and tenant should promptly, fully, and accurately fill up the "Advance Farm Schedule" and carefully preserve it for the enumerator when he calls.

One Way Out.

Perkins had been appointed tutor to the young lord of the manor, and together they were making the grand tour. Perkins was congratulating himself on the excellent behavior of his pupil; but, alas, they had only reached Geneva when his charge fell deeply in love with a pretty Swiss peasant. In vain did he remonstrate with the young lord, pointing out the social barrier that existed between the lovers and the total impossibility of marriage. But all to no purpose. The beautiful Swiss maiden held the young lord's heart captive, and he would scarcely leave her side.

Distracted, Perkins wrote home to the marchioness asking her advice and pointing out her son's infatuation.

A day or two passed in agonizing suspense.

At last the answer came. Perkins breathed a sigh of relief. All his anxiety would now be over. He tore open the envelope, but as he read the letter he groaned in the anguish of his soul It consisted of three words:

"Marry her yourself."

Poor Bijou!

During the siege of Paris Francisque Sarcey indignantly protested against the practice of eating dogs Hunger, however, knows no law, and canine and feline butcher shops were opened in different parts of Paris Skillfully prepared, properly skinned and cooked, with a good sauce, the dogs proved excellent eating. Their meat was pink and delicate and by no means tough. Canine cutlets were sold at 2 francs each, and a leg of dog might be purchased at double the price a pound.

Two good bourgeois, husband and wife, had a little dog of which they were very fond. But a day came when there was nothing to eat in the house, and poor Bijou had to be killed and cooked. His master and mistress sat down to dinner with tears in their eyes, and during the dinner the father mechanically placed the tiny rib bones on the side of her plate. "Poor Bijou!" she ejaculated with a sigh. "What a treat these would have been for him!" —Frank Schlosser in Contemporary Review

When the President Lost His Hat.

The Crystal palace exhibition opened at New York July 15, 1853, was the first affair of this kind in the country for which foreign exhibits were solicited. The "big show" began with a procession, in which President Franklin Pierce, mounted, was a conspicuous feature. The hero of the day rode a mettlesome steed, and while proceeding up Wall street the presidential headgear, a new silk hat of the prevalent style, was incontinently tumbled to the pavement. Another horse recklessly stepped upon the unfortunate tile, crushing it out of the semblance to itself, besmearing it with mud—real Wall street mud. What was left of the misshapen and bedaubed hat was worn by the president, to the great amusement of the spectators, until a substitute could be secured.

A Witty Retort.

Fido's Tail a Mystery.

Little Willie was tugging at Fido's tail.

A Lunatic's Repartee.

Some visitors were being shown through Kew Lunatic asylum, Victoria, one day, and, coming opposite the clock in the corridor, one of them, looking quickly at his watch, said, "Is that clock right?"

"No, you idiot," said a patient standing by. "It wouldn't be in here if it were right."

German Way of Serving Asparagus.

When living in Germany we noticed that the asparagus served there was unusually tender and of a much more delicate flavor than that which we got in America. We learned that the Germans do not consider asparagus fit to eat unless the outside skin is scraped from each stalk before cooking. This sounds like slow work, but if a sharp knife is used it can be done quite rapidly and is well worth the trouble.—Good Housekeeping.

Why He Searched.

The old man had evidently dropped something in the muddy road, and he began searching for it. In three minutes about thirty strangers had joined in the search, and every additional minute brought additional searchers, till at last one, bolder than the rest plucked up heart and spoke:

"What are you looking for?" he inquired.

"My friend," mumbled the old man, "I have dropped a piece of taffy candy."

"But, great Scott," cried another of the crowd angrily, "why do you go looking for it when it will be covered with dirt?"

"Because, my inquisitive friend," replied the old man, "my false teeth are sticking to that taffy."

Pope as a Witness.

Pope, like Garrick, made but a poor figure in the witness box. He was cited to appear in defense of Bishop Atterbury when that prelate was tried for high treason in the house of lords in 1723. "I never could speak in public," he told Spence afterward, "and I don't believe that if it was a set thing I could give an account of any story to twelve friends together, though I could tell it to any three of them with a great deal of pleasure. When I was to appear for the bishop of Rochester in his trial, though I had but ten words to say and that on a plain point (how the bishop spent his time when I was with him at Bromley), I made two or three blunders in it and that notwithstanding the first row of lords (which was all I could see) were mostly of my acquaintance."—London Standard.

The Lost Company.

"Hungry, I suppose?" said the sharp faced woman as she opened the door just a little bit.

"W'y, no," answered the ragged wayfarer. "I've clean forgot how to be hungry. But I'm out and out lonely."

"Lonely!"

"Yes. You see, I hain't had nothing to eat for so long that I've got so thin I can't cast no shadder, and you ain't no idea what company a man's shadder is to him while he is travelin along the road."

Considerate.

Muggins is not handsome, and he knows it. When his first baby was born he asked, "Does it look like me?"

Of course they replied in the affirmative.

"Well," said he, with a sigh, "break it to my wife gently."—London Tit-Bits.

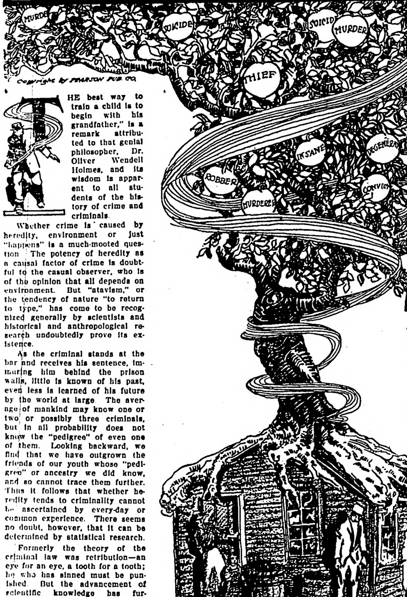
Hereditary Criminality and Its Certain Cure

by WARREN W. FOSTER



Copyright by Pearson Pub. Co.

JUDGE WARREN W. FOSTER

"THE best way to train a child is to begin with his grandfather," is a remark attributed to that genial philosopher, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, and its wisdom is apparent to all students of the history of crime and criminals.

Whether crime is caused by heredity, environment or just "happens" is a much-mooted question. The potency of heredity as a causal factor of crime is doubtful to the casual observer, who is of the opinion that all depends on environment. But "atavism," or the tendency of nature "to return to type," has come to be recognized generally by scientists and historical and anthropological research undoubtedly prove its existence.

As the criminal stands at the bar and receives his sentence, immuring him behind the prison walls, little is known of his past, even less is learned of his future by the world at large. The average of mankind may know one or two or possibly three criminals, but in all probability does not know the "pedigree" of even one of them. Looking backward, we find that we have outgrown the friends of our youth whose "pedigree" or ancestry we did know, and so cannot trace them further. Thus it follows that whether heredity tends to criminality cannot be ascertained by every-day or common experience. There seems no doubt, however, that it can be determined by statistical research.

Formerly the theory of the criminal law was retribution—an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth; he who has sinned must be punished. But the advancement of scientific knowledge has furnished the foundation for a new system of penology, which has, at least upon the statute books, taken the place of the old. The trend of the law for many years has been toward the amelioration of punishment and largely because the nature of the criminal is better understood and it is felt that he is one who needs not so much punishment as proper instruction; and, moreover, because it is now believed that the purpose and intent of our criminal law should be to cure the criminal of his criminal tendencies and to restore him to righteous living.

Under the old theory of "responsibility" whoever or whatever sinned was deemed responsible for it and subject to punishment and in the middle ages even animals were tried and punished. Invertebrates, also, were not exempt from prosecution. Havelock Ellis tells us in "The Criminal" that in 1454 the bishop of Lauzanne initiated legal proceedings against the leeches which infested the water at Berne. The "affair" came before the judges at Berne, the bishop being properly represented. A leech was obtained and brought into the presence of the judges and all leeches, present and absent, were warned to abandon the spots they had the temerity to occupy, three full days being allowed them to evacuate, and a guardian was appointed to watch over their interests and take means for their defense in court. The bishop gained his cause, but the leeches having successfully resisted the decree of the court the bishop finally lost all patience and anathematized them.

Formerly, insanity, even with its apparent irresponsibility, was no defense to crime. Before 1789 insanity seems to have been unknown to the French law, although the seventeenth-century rule prescribed that no one in the state of "insensate fury" should be punished. The rule, however, proved of little avail. "Responsibility" has since received close attention and study and, through the persistent efforts of men of science, its field has steadily enlarged. Schopenhauer says "responsibility supposes that an individual could have acted differently from the way he actually did act." In a sense responsibility means that man suffers the consequences of his acts. Man becomes responsible because he lives in society. Society has the right to defend and preserve itself. It recognizes the need of suppressing the criminal and preventing his unlawful acts and it exercises its right so to do.

The progressive feature of the age in penology has been to determine not only whether crime was committed, but whether he who committed it was of such an understanding as to be properly punishable therefor and amenable to disciplinary treatment. Many of the world's greatest minds have studied this problem, but the first beneficent attempt to minister to the criminal as one "possessed of a devil" or "mind diseased" was made in the state of New York, when the New York State Reformatory at Elmira was created. There the inmates are kept under the strictest of mental and physical discipline; mental arithmetic and Turkish baths are applied together to create a sane mind in a sound body. They are taught that "honesty is the best policy," the only policy that pays from the practical, worldly point of view. The results have been surprisingly gratifying, only about 20 per cent., the friends of that institution claim, of the felons therein incarcerated having returned to ways of crime.

Punishment for crime had its origin in the innate savagery of the human race and is but the transmutation of private revenge into public revenge. At one time or another nearly every fiendish cruelty has been tried as a crime cure. "To make the punishment fit the crime," to quote a popular opera, disregarding the idiosyncrasies of the individual, has been the creative principle of much of our penal law, and such even to-day is the common opinion of the masses. History, as Lydston points out, shows that when capital punishment was inflicted for slight offenses, as was once the case, instead of decreasing crime it increased it by brutalizing the people, while the eclat of public executions offered a suggestion to the vainglorious criminal of the means whereby he too might occupy for one brief moment the center of the stage. Happily the present tendency of the administration of the criminal law is to ascertain first what is wrong with the individual and then to apply a remedy seemingly likely to cure the wrong. "There are no crimes, only criminals," said Lacassagne, and that indicates the line along which criminal law and lore must develop if we are to improve mankind.

The level of criminality is rising and has been rising during the whole of the present century throughout the civilized world. In France it has risen several hundred per cent.; so also, for several kinds of serious crime, in many parts of Germany, while in Spain the number of persons sent to perpetual imprisonment nearly doubled between 1870 and 1883. In the United States the criminal population has increased within 30 years, relatively to the population, by one-third. Criminality is much like insanity. Among primitive races, like insanity, it is rare. But the rising flood of criminality should not beget pessimism; rather should it spur us on to the great task of social betterment, as a profound thinker has observed. Education will not rid us of criminals, for there are already, as we know, many educated criminals. Punishment alone as a specific for crime is a failure. Both education and punishment are but factors in the reformation of the criminal.

To a large extent the child is molded before he is born. There is no invariable fatalism in the influences that work before birth, but it does make a great difference whether a man is well born and starts happily or whether he is heavily handicapped at the outset of the race of life—in a word, whether he is born free from vices of nature or whether the contrary is the fact. There is much evidence to show how greatly the welfare of the child depends on the general physical and emotional health of the parents and that the child's fate may be determined by some emotional trouble at conception or during pregnancy. Take the remarkable case of Jesse Pomeroy, who, as a boy, committed several murders of little children with a brutality that was fiendish, for which he was incarcerated for life in a Massachusetts prison. It was commonly reported and believed that the bloodthirsty impulses of the boy were the direct result of parental influences, the mother, it is said, having when pregnant been much about the shambles where her husband, the boy's father, was a butcher, and the sight of the blood having thus worked out in the child.

The begetting of children is the highest of all human functions and carries consequences that beggar description. It is well, therefore, to remember that every falling away from health, every new strain or break in man or woman may lay an additional burden on a man or woman yet unborn, perhaps wreck a life or a succession of lives.

Carefully drawn statistics of 4,000 criminals taken from the Elmira reformatory show that drunkenness existed in the parents of 38 per cent. and probably more. Dr. Christian, of the Elmira reformatory, reports that of 8,000 prisoners received there during the last eight years 19.9 per cent. were tuberculous, 43.7 per cent. were affected with some form of mental disease, and that 37.4 per cent. were mentally defective. Marro finds that on an average 41 per cent. of the criminals he had examined had a drunken parent, as against 16 per cent. for normal persons. A large number of criminals investigated by Rossi belonged to criminal families. Dr. Allison, superintendent at the Matteawan State Hospital for the Criminal Insane (New York), is impressed with the frequency with which very serious crimes, especially murder and violent assault, occur in the same family. Morrison reports that among the inmates of English industrial schools 51 per cent. are either illegitimates or have one or both parents dead or are the offspring of criminals.

A further proof of the potency of heredity is shown by the investigations of the Rev. Dr. Stocker of Berlin. He traced 834 descendants of two sisters who died in 1825 and found among them 76 who had served 116 years in prison, 164 prostitutes, 106 illegitimate children, 17 pimps, 142 beggars and 64 paupers.

Assuming it, then, as proved, first that the aim of all criminal law and procedure is public protection against crime, and, second, that criminal tendencies as well as virtuous tendencies are transmitted by inheritance, does there not follow, as the night the day, the logical conclusion that criminals ought not to be allowed to propagate their species?

By "criminal" is meant, of course, that class best described as "instinctive criminals," who have an instinctive propensity to crime and to whom many authorities refer as "born" or "congenital criminals" and who are possessed of an ingrained malignity of disposition.

If, then, it has been shown that heredity is the most potent source of crime and that society should protect itself by preventing the further breeding of criminals, how may society accomplish this?

Various methods have been suggested, among them a rigid regulation of marriage, which shall prohibit the criminal from mating, segregation or colonization of the criminal, and vasectomy. It may be possible by legislation to diminish marriage, but doubtless the effect would be to increase the number of illegitimates, thus augmenting instead of diminishing the "mischief." The segregation or "colonization" of the criminal, thus making impossible the commingling of the sexes, is approved chiefly by those who have apparently never known of vasectomy. As a matter of fact, it has been tried by the law for a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary—for what else is it than imprisonment within four walls, and has this not already proved its inefficiency?

Coming, then to vasectomy, a subject in which an increasing number of state legislatures is becoming interested, the physician furnishes a method of sterilizing the criminal.

This method is in actual operation in at least one state. In March, 1907, the Indiana legislature passed a bill authorizing sterilization.

There appears to be a wonderful unanimity of favoring opinion as to the advisability of the sterilization of criminals and the prevention of their further propagation.

Will public opinion justify the use of this remedy in the case of desperate and incorrigible criminals? While scientists have studied this subject, fraught as it is with appalling public importance, popular ignorance touching it is amazing. It certainly deserves the most careful consideration of all who are interested in the diminution of crime and the uplifting and betterment of the human race.

THE ROAD TO POPULARITY

Recipe Has Been In Use Many Years But It Is Not Always Safe to Trust It.

"The way to be popular has been explained by one of the marshmallow magazines which inflates itself with the idea that it is directing modern life. "When you shake hands with a man," runs the recipe, "grasp the hand as though you were glad to see the owner, look him in the eye, and give him a smile from your heart."

This is a sure-enough recipe. It has been worked by some of the greatest frauds in Christendom to subserve their own ends. The man who is seeking popularity, posing for it, angling for it, usually doesn't deserve it. Keep your admiration for men who show you their real selves, who, when they are bothered or worried, or mad, or glad, make it manifest by appropriate facial expression, and who are not constantly standing themselves before the mirror.

DELAY IS DANGEROUS.

When the kidneys are sick, the whole body is weakened. Aches and pains and urinary ills come, and there is danger of diabetes and fatal Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and impart strength to the whole system.

Newfoundland's Bad Record.

The Newfoundland Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis is carrying on a vigorous and necessary campaign this year in the island. The death rate from the disease in Newfoundland is very large. About one in every five of the total population dies of it, and, what is worse, in the last six years the death rate, which is stationary or decreasing elsewhere, has increased about 50 per cent. This is due largely to the native horror of fresh air in the house.

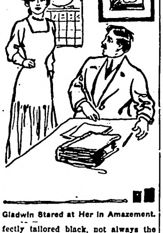
Sara's Employer

By PHILIP ORTH

From the very first Gladwin had to admit to himself that Sara was perfect of her kind. She had come to him at a time when he was sadly in need of her assistance. His own stenographer had fallen ill and had gone away to a rest cure; it was the time of the year when business was heavy and experienced help hard to find. Gladwin in despair was just steeling his mind to choose between two doubtful young persons whom a popular employment agency had sent to him when Sara appeared. She had been filling a position, temporarily, in the absence of a regular stenographer. That regular stenographer had returned and she was out of employment. The man in whose office she had worked, having some acquaintance with Gladwin and knowing his need, had sent her to him. And Gladwin hired her at once, with a secure feeling of relief that he had not been forced from necessity to employ a makeshift.

Sara told him that her former position had been her first, but for all that she did not seem to lack experience. She was alert, obedient, dainty—and yet business-like in all her methods. Her work was always done on time and with exquisite precision. She did not ask questions. She did not leave things lying about. She always hit the waste-paper basket when she aimed for it. She did not bother Gladwin about useless details; indeed, she rarely spoke to him at all unless she was first spoken to. Her manner was attractive. It was reserved, dignified, calm. She was never in a hurry, never anything but at ease. She came at the stroke of the hour and departed likewise. She wasted no time that was not her own.

After a time Gladwin got beyond her manner and began to notice the girl. She wore black—perfectly fitting, perfectly tailored black, not always the same in style, but always the same in simplicity. The bits of white at her throat and wrists were always snowy; she exhibited no jewelry; her hair was always perfectly smooth. She was rather a plain girl, but her plainness was of the kind that lessens with acquaintance. One had to see Sara many times before one was aware that her mouth was sweet and that her skin was good in spite of its pallor.



Gladwin Stared at Her in Amazement.

Good breeding breathed from her as constantly and unobtrusively as did the fragrance of her subtle perfume. She had nothing to say about herself and after six months spent in daily contact with her, Gladwin knew no more about her than he had known the first morning she entered his office. Her complete unconsciousness of him in any other capacity than that of her employer piqued his curiosity.

Gladwin was a good-looking man, who dressed well and had plenty of wit. The few women he knew had always made much of him. Two or three of them, he felt vaguely, wanted to marry him, but not one of them was the sort of woman he cared to link his life with. To tell the truth, Gladwin had given so little time to the thought of women that he did not know the kind he preferred, but it came to him one day as he sat watching Sara at work that she pleased him better than any woman he had ever seen.

It was a light morning—no one could call it sunny, for sunshine never penetrated the windows of that particular office building, shut in as it was by larger structures—and Sara's hair showed more satiny than ever, her cheek finer of texture, her dress more immaculate.

A little sigh of sudden longing caught in Gladwin's throat and he stumbled in his dictation. That was the beginning of his falling in love with her. It was curious, too, for he had never dreamed that he would want to marry any stenographer in his employ. He had heard of such things being done and he did not approve of them. But Sara distinctly was not the ordinary type of office girl. Gladwin made up his mind that he would speak to her. But first he wanted to make a little bigger pile before he took it upon himself to support a wife

"Do you think," he asked her one day, "that two persons can live decently in this town on $1,500 a year?"

Sara seemed to hesitate a moment before she answered quietly: "I have heard that there are people who live on very much less and yet manage to be comfortable."

Gladwin said nothing more. But the next day he asked the same question of a friend who had recently become engaged.

"Fifteen hundred a year?" More laughed. "Why, man alive, that wouldn't buy provisions, to say nothing of paying for house rent and cab hire and theater tickets and clothes." He tripped merrily over the list at the conclusion of which Gladwin looked quite downcast. More caught him by the shoulder. "Thinking of it seriously—are you, old man?"

"No—oh, no," Gladwin shook his head. "No, indeed." But he was.

It was soon after that that Gladwin began to speculate in stocks. A few trifling things came his way and he thought he had found an easier road to making money than grinding out the law at so much a case. He began to study the papers more and his law books less. Two or three times Sara had to remind him of things he had left undone.

Gladwin gradually became absorbed, a little preoccupied of manner. He sometimes caught Sara looking at him bewilderedly. One day he suddenly became buoyant, almost gay. He whistled softly, he even tried to sing—he who could not produce two consecutive notes harmoniously. That morning N. K. & Y. had gone up four points and there was every indication that it would rise still higher. Two or three times that day he was on the point of telling Sara about his success and asking her to share it; then the thought came: "No, I'll wait a little. There's time enough."

Alas! Two days later when Sara came in after lunch she found Gladwin doubled up across his desk. He looked like either a dead man or a very sick one. She went to him and shook him by the shoulder. "Mr Gladwin!"

He looked up at her. His face was one rigid pallor. "Sara," he said, dully, "I've played the fool. I bought more N. K. & Y., and it's going down—down—" He gulped. "I'm ruined!"

She took her hand from his shoulder. She did not seem surprised. "How bad is it?" she demanded.

He drew paper and pencil toward him and began to figure. She looked on thoughtfully.

"Pretty bad, isn't it?" he queried.

"Yes, it's pretty bad."

"And the worst of it is," Gladwin went on, recklessly piling up his tribulation, "I've neglected my business lately till it has fallen off. No, that isn't the worst. The worst is that—that I had something to say to you which I can never say now. In the hope of being able to say it I went into this deal—you understand?"

Her face burst into joy as with flame. Her hand went to his shoulder again. "Yes, I understand now. But I didn't before. I thought you were doing it for—somebody else. You see, I suspected what you were up to." She spoke breathlessly. "If only you had told me!"

"Too late now, Sara."

And she made him tell her. As she listened she became almost beautiful. She was altogether a different Sara by the time he had finished.

"And now I'll tell you something," she said when he had ended. "I don't have to run a typewriter. I took it up after father died because I was lonely and had to have something to do. He left me $90,000." As Gladwin stared at her in amazement she bent and laid her cheek to his. "I'll get you out of this scrape, dear," she whispered, "but don't you ever fool with stocks again as long as you live!"

New Lease of Life for Old House.

The oldest house on Cape Cod, built about 1600, is being moved from its present location in West Brewster into the adjoining town of Dennis, where it will shortly be changed into a magnificent summer residence by J. D. Anderson of Hartford, Conn.

The ancient landmark of more than two centuries was built for one of the first settlers in Brewster, John Dillingham, by Isaac Winslow, and has always been known as the old Dillingham house. On one of the large rafters in the attic there is cut the date, "1690," showing the date on which it was erected.

Post Cards.

The invention of postal cards is attributed to a gentleman of Vienna, Austria, and the first ever used were issued by the Austrian government in 1869. They were adopted in England, Germany and Switzerland in 1870, the United States authorized them in June, 1872, and the first cards issued under the act were sent out in May, 1873. The return postal card had been in use in a number of European countries before it came in use with us in the early eighties. We have imported—and vulgarized—the illuminated postal card within the last half a dozen years or so.

The DAIRY

DAIRY NOTES.

One bad butter cow will eat up the profit of several good ones.

Cool the milk as soon as it comes from the cow both in winter and summer.

Cool each lot of cream in cold water before adding to the general lot of cream.

It doesn't pay to keep too many cows any more than it pays to farm too much land.

Do not fill the churn over one-third to one-half full. Give the cream room for agitation.

Good butter must be properly presented to the market. It must not only be good but look good.

Cream that is being ripened should be thoroughly stirred several times before it is ready for churning.

Butter is usually worked enough when the water has been removed so that the butter will bend without breaking.

High grade butter is the result of intelligence—poor butter the result of ignorance. The one is in demand everywhere, the other goes begging in the market.

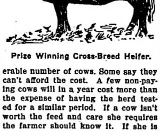
Butter worth 40 cents per pound is made from the same milk that grease worth 20 cents a pound is made from, and it takes as much to make the one as the other.

Dairy cows must be treated in accordance with their importance, as a factor of success, and the milk and cream must be handled properly from cow to churn, and from churn to market.

IMPROVING THE DAIRY HERD

Best Results Only Can Be Obtained by Exactly Testing the Milk Produced by Each Cow.

Every farmer is interested in his herd of dairy cows because of the money the cows bring him. Very few farmers, however, have any knowledge of what their cows are doing. Most of the farmers judge of the quality of their cows from the amount of milk each one gives. If she gives a large mess of milk she is usually "the best cow on the farm," and if a small mess she is not a "very good cow." This is an unscientific way of judging of the individual cow or the herd. To help farmers upon a higher plane of dairying has been a study of the Minnesota department of agriculture for several years. Through a long series of experiments the department has found that the testing of individual cows, weighing their milk and testing it is practical and necessary if one is to breed up his herd intelligently. The department now recommends the organization of co-operative cow testing asociations in any neighborhood where a sufficient number of cows is kept. This is not a hard matter to do. Let fifteen or twenty farmers join together in a neighborly way and sign an agreement to stand by each other for a year, agreeing to pay $1.00 or a $1.50 per year per cow for some one who shall make it his duty to appear at each farm once a month for a year at milking time, see the cows milked, weigh their milk, test it, and make a record of each cow's work and leave it with her owner. In this way a practical man thoroughly acquainted with the work can be employed to give his experience to the dairyman at so low a cost as to make his employment a necessity to every owner of a considerable number of cows. Some say they can't afford the cost. A few non-paying cows will in a year cost more than the expense of having the herd tested for a similar period. If a cow isn't worth the feed and care she requires the farmer should know it. If she is a paying cow he should know it and breed her to a sire of pronounced qualities and thus build up his herd to a standard of excellence and profit. Good dairy cows are seldom in the market. People as a rule do not sell such cows, or if so they sell at an exorbitant price few farmers can afford to pay. So the really practical and economical way to get a paying herd is to breed up to it from sires of such excellence as to leave no question as to the dairy merit of their offspring, beginning with the best cows in the herd as mothers and discarding those of inferior quality.



Prize Winning Cross-Breed Heifer.

The tester can visit one herd one day and then the farmer can take him to the next, and so on until he has gone the rounds of the neighborhood once each month. At the end of the year each farmer will have a record showing a losing or winning game on the part of each cow, besides having been educated in various branches of the industry. A limited number of cow testing associations have been organized in Minnesota and the farmers are pleased with the results.

GETTING HIS IDIOMS MIXED

German-American May Have Meant Well, But His Directions Were Somewhat Complex.

Passengers on a New York street car were treated to some choice examples of German-American English when a stout gentleman with a robust voice started to relate to a friend his adventures of the previous night.

"Twelf o'glock it wass when he come alretty," said the stout man, "und on de toor rap."

"But," said his companion, "it was only about ten o'clock when he started over there."

"Vell, twelf o'glock it wass when he comes alretty und on de toor rap. "No," laughed his friend, "you surely didn't call him that.'

"Call him dot?" snorted the fat man. "Say, I call him eferything I can lay my hands on."

WASTED A FORTUNE ON SKIN TROUBLE

"I began to have an itching over my whole body about seven years ago and this settled in my limb, from the knee to the toes. I went to see a great many physicians, a matter which cost me a fortune, and after I noticed that I did not get any relief that way, I went for three years to the hospital. But they were unable to help me there. I used all the medicines that I could see but became worse and worse. I had an inflammation which made me almost crazy with pain. When I showed my foot to my friends they would get really frightened. I did not know what to do. I was so sick and had become so nervous that I positively lost all hope.

"I had seen the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies a great many times, but could not make up my mind to buy them, for I had already used so many medicines. Finally I did decide to use the Cuticura Remedies and I tell you that I was never so pleased as when I noticed that, after having used two sets of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, the entire inflammation had gone. I was completely cured. I should be only too glad if people with similar disease would come to me and find out the truth. I would only recommend them to use Cuticura. Mrs. Bertha Sachs, 1621 Second Ave., New York, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1909."

"Mrs. Bertha Sachs is my sister-in-law and I know well how she suffered and was cured by Cuticura Remedies after many other treatments failed. Morris Sachs, 321 E. 89th St., New York, N. Y., Secretary of Deutsch-Ostrowoer Unt.-Verein, Kempner Hebrew Benevolent Society, etc."

TAMING THE PANHANDLE

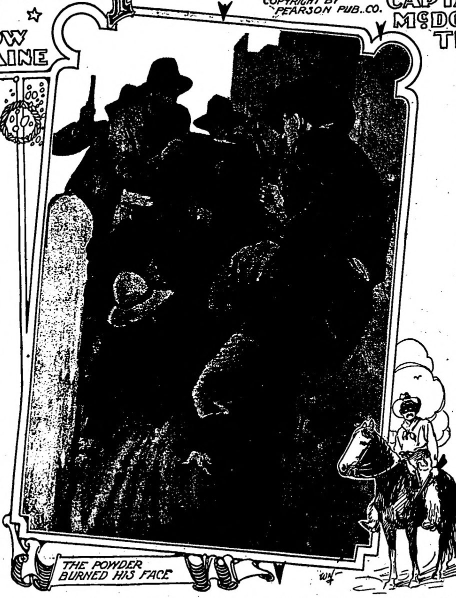
By ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.



THE POWDER BURNED HIS FACE

THE Texas Panhandle is that portion of the state which lies directly south of what was No-Man's Land, extending from parallels 100 to 103, east and west. Its shape suggests its name, and its name suggests limitless areas of waving grass; vast roving herds; cowboys and ponies—both of the unbridled variety; bad men whose chief business was to start graveyards, and the glad primeval lawlessness that prevails when worlds are new.

Not so many years ago the Panhandle was distinctly a world apart, and a new one. With No-Man's Land on the north, Indian Territory on the east and New Mexico on the west, civilization could come only from the south, and it did not come very fast. Indeed, there was still plenty of territory in that direction to be subdued—two or three tiers of counties in fact—before the Panhandle would be reached. So, it was a place apart—an isolated fertile land, justifying the assertion of a tramp that he had lost $100,000 there in one year by not having cattle to eat up the grass.

The cattle came in due time, fighting back the Apache and the Comanche, protected by Rangers from Fort Griffin, accompanied by stockmen of every nation, cowboys of every grade and criminals of every breed. That was a wild epoch—chaotic and picturesque—a time of individual administration and untempered justice.

It was also a time of mighty domain. Ranches there were as big as some kingdoms. One, the X. I. T., covered a good portion of the northern part of the Panhandle. Another, the Matador, spread itself into five counties. When settlement became thicker—when there were ranch houses not more than 25 to 30 miles apart—official allotment of the lands was made. Then there was a grand gobble. The big stockmen fenced everything with little regard for boundaries and less for the law.

With such examples as these in high places, it is not strange that a general indifference to legal rights and possessions prevailed. Next to cattle-raising, cattle-stealing was the chief industry. The cowboy proper was not concerned in such work. He was likely to be a clean-handed, straightforward, even if reckless, individual, honest according to his lights. True, loyalty to his employer might render him a trifle indifferent as to brands and marks when strays mixed with the herd, but it was the employer and not the cowboy who profited by such laxity. The cowboy was a retainer who would fight for his ranch, would die for it when circumstances seemed to require such a sacrifice, and the increase of the ranch herd by any means short of actual raid and theft was a custom which bore no relation to disrepute. But individually the cowboy was likely to be the soul of honor and good nature, troublesome only on holidays when he was moved to ride into the nearest settlement, drink up all the whisky he could buy, and then, with six-shooter drawn, go careering up and down the streets, shooting in random directions, explaining meantime with noisy and repetitious adjectives that he was a bad man—a very bad man from very far up the creek.

The Panhandle was full of bad men in the early nineties. Most of them had graduated from other schools of crime and found here a last resort. Some of them—a good many of them—had obtained official positions and were outlaws and deputies by turns, or worked conjunctively as both. As a rule they were in one way or another associated with a gang.

Local authorities, even when conscientious, were poorly equipped to cope with such an element, and it was for Company B Ranger Force, consisting of eight men with quarters at Amarillo, Capt. W. J. McDonald commanding, to police this vast wilderness, and to capture and convert, or otherwise tame, its undesirable citizens.

Soon after McDonald's appointment he was notified of a marauding band that across in Hutchinson county, were committing the usual crimes. They had burned the hay belonging to a ranchman on Turkey creek—several hundred tons in quantity—they had cut his wire fences; they had killed cows for their calves, butchered beef cattle, cut out brands—in a word, they had conducted the busines of cattle stealing and general depredation on a large scale.

Taking a portion of his force, Capt. McDonald went over to investigate. There seemed to be a good deal of mystery concerning the identity of the offenders; but a mystery of that sort does not stand a very good chance when it is operated upon by a man with eyes like those of Capt. Bill and with a nose and a pair of ears of his peculiar pattern. nI a short time he had identified one member of the band in a young man prominently connected in that section. This young fellow—a dupe, no doubt, of professional cow thieves, whose glittering reputation as bad men had dazzled him—was the son of an able and reputable lawyer, a member of the state legislature. The son, supposed to be a cowboy, had become in reality an outlaw.

Capt. McDonald took him in charge one day, questioned him, and secured sufficient evidence to file a complaint. The prisoner was turned over to the sheriff of Hutchinson county, and Capt. Bill pursued his investigation. He located a bunch of stolen calves, herded in the brakes of the Canadian river, guarded by another member of the gang. The calves were "hobbled and necked" and their mothers had been shot as an easy method of getting rid of them. Capt. Bill found the dead cows in a near-by canyon, and he brought a man who had lost a number of milch cows and calves to identify the property. It was no very difficult matter; the man declared he knew the calves as well as his own children. One after another the missing members of the band were brought in, and lodged in jail. The case against them was clear. They were found with the stolen property; some of them did not even attempt to make denial. Their examining trial was held at Plemons, the county seat of Hutchinson county, and the settlers gathered from far and near for that event. The trial was held in a big barn of a place, and the prisoners were bound over to the district court. The Rangers were preparing to take them to Panhandle City, where there were safer and more commodious quarters, when the sheriff—who had already distinguished himself by setting free the prominent young outlaw first captured—appeared and demanded the prisoners, on the ground that being sheriff of that county, they could not be removed without his consent. The Ranger captain promptly informed him that sheriff or no sheriff, he had shown his disqualifications for that office, and that these prisoners would be taken to more secure quarters than he seemed willing to provide. The officer departed, and presently mustered a crowd, armed with Winchesters. Then he appeared once more before Capt. Bill, produced the law which under proper conditions might have supported him in his demand, and again declared that he would have those prisoners, or that there would be bloodshed and several Ranger funerals. Capt. Bill promptly called his men together.

"We are not going to stand any foolishness," he said. "If an attempt is made to take these prisoners, cut down any one who takes a hand in it. Come, let's move on now, and get these men in jail."

The crowd that had gathered expected battle, then and there, but nothing of the kind took place. The sheriff's armed bluff had been called. Later in the day, he obtained a writ of habeas corpus, but it was not effective for the reason that the men had been committed under bond. At all events it was not effective so long as McDonald and his Rangers were in charge of the jail.

It was now evident that conviction of these offenders was not to be expected in that county. Most of them had official influence of one kind or another. In fact, there appeared to be nobody except those whose property had suffered who seemed concerned in bringing these bandits to justice.

With such overwhelming evidence McDonald was determined if possible to secure their punishment, and eventually was instrumental in getting their cases distributed and sent to other counties for trial. Even so, they managed to evade the law. Through influence of one kind or another, and the co-operation of officials—former associates, perhaps, in the business of crime—their cases were one by one dismissed; this in spite of the fact that one of the men confessed and gave direct testimony against the others of the gang.

Notwithstanding this miscarriage of justice, the general effect of McDonald's vigorous prosecution was wholesome. The members of that band either left for remoter territory, or decided to reform.

It was strange indeed that McDonald did not "happen to get killed" in those busy days of the early nineties. One of the favorite vows of the "Panhandler" was to shoot Bill McDonald on sight. But there was suddenness and vigor about Bill McDonald's manner and method that was very bad for a vow like that when the moment for its execution arrived. Still, there were those who tried to make good, and one of these, duly assisted, came near being successful. He would have succeeded, no doubt, if he had had time.

That man's name was John Pierce Matthews, which became simply John Pierce after its owner got the drop on a steamboat captain one day in Louisiana and shot him dead. He took his new name with him to the Panhandle, where, in due time he got the drop on another man, somewhere up in the northern tier of counties, with the same result. This was a good while before he came down to Childress county and got to be sheriff, but there were those who had not forgotten, and among them was Capt. Bill McDonald, then stopping at Wichita Falls. Matthews, or Pierce, as he was called, frequently came down to the Falls for a spree, and on one such visit made application to join a secret society. McDonald was a prominent member of that society and Matthews did not get in. This stirred the animosity of Matthews and he began to clean his six-shooter daily and to practice sudden and accurate firing, which he knew would be necessary in case of a show down.

Matthews also had another enemy, one Joe Beckham, sheriff of Motley county, an officer of his own kind, who presently got as short as possible in his accounts, absconded, and set out for Indian Territory. Matthews had no right to go outside of his own county after a fugitive, and no business in this matter any way, but he had an itch for Beckham on his own account, so he picked up another enemy of Beckham, named Cook, a citizen of Motley with an ambition for Beckham's office, and the two came with peaceful attitude and fair words to Quanah where Capt. Bill was then stopping, requesting the loan of a Ranger to go over into the Territory after the defaulting officer. McDonald refused, but said he would send a man as far as the Territory line—Ranger authority not extending beyond that border. He did send one Ranger, McClure, who being strongly persuaded, overstepped, at the same instant, his authority and the state line; captured Beckham, whom he lost through a writ of habeas corpus; fell into a plot devised by Matthews and Cook to get rid of him, and was finally brought back to Quanah by Capt. Bill, who drove 100 miles on a bad night to get him out of the mess; after which McClure was a wiser and better Ranger.

Beckham, meanwhile, had fallen a victim to remorse, or more likely had been promised immunity, and now hurried over to Quanah and gave himself up again to Ranger McClure—Capt. Bill being absent from Quanah at the time. Beckham asked to be taken to Matador, county seat of Motley, for trial, and begged McClure to see him through Childress, where he expected to be killed by Matthews and Cook.

McClure assured Beckham that he would see him hafely to Matador, and they set out by rail for Childress, at which point they would take the stage for the Motley county seat.

Matthews was on hand at Childress. He demanded Beckham of McClure, who refused to deliver his prisoner.

If Matthews wanted to commit suicide he began preparing for it, now, in the right way. He gave it out openly that he was going to wander over to Quanah some day and kill Bill McDonald, just as a matter of pastime, and he sent word to the same effect by any of Capt. Bill's friends that he found going that way.

It was in December, 1895, at last that Matthews and his pals came down to Quanah for the declared purpose of killing a Ranger captain. It was a cold, dreary day and they visited one saloon after another, getting a supply of courage for the job, and explaining what they were going to do. Then they took to following McDonald, always in a group, evidently waiting the proper opportunity, confident enough that McDonald would not take the offensive. Finally, however, they pressed him so close that he suddenly turned and told them to quit following him or trouble would ensue. Perhaps it did not seem a good place to do the job—there being no sort of protection; perhaps there was something disquieting in the manner of Capt. Bill's warning. They dropped away, for the time, and McDonald gave the matter no further thought. Men threatening to kill him was an item on every day's program.

It was nearly dusk of that bleak day, and McDonald was in the railway station, sending an official telegram to his men at Amarillo, when an old man named Crutcher, whom McDonald knew, came in with the word that Matthews wanted to see him and fix up matters without any more trouble.

Capt. Bill regarded Crutcher keenly; evidently he was sincere enough.

"John says he wants to see you and fix up everything right," repeated the old man, persuasively.

Capt. Bill finished writing his telegram and sent it. Then turning to Old Man Crutcher, he said in his slow, mild way:

"Well, that all sounds mighty good to me. I never want any trouble that I can help. Come on, let's go find him."

They left the depot on the side toward the town, and as they did so they saw the sheriff of Hardeman county, whose name was Dick Coffer, with Matthews and two of the latter's friends, coming to meet them. Sheriff Coffer was a step ahead of Matthews as they crossed the street. Old Man Crutcher in a friendly way put his arm through McDonald's as they advanced.

When there were but four or five feet between the groups, all stopped and there was a little silence.

Then McDonald said:

"Well?"

And Matthews answered, keeping Coffer still just a trifle in advance:

"Well, what is it, Bill?"

"I understand," he said, "that you have been saying some pretty hard things about me, and that you-all are going to wipe up the earth with me. Is that so?"

Matthews edged a trifle nearer to Coffer.

"No," he said, "I didn't say that, but by God I'll tell you what I did say," at the same moment pointing his left index finger in McDonald's face, while his right hand slipped in the direction of his hip pocket.

Capt. Bill saw the movement and his own hand dropped into his side overcoat pocket where in winter he carried a part of his armament. Matthews' practice in drawing for some reason failed to benefit him. His gun seemed to hang a little in the scabbard. A second later he had jerked it free, and stepping behind Coffer, fired at Capt. Bill over the sheriff's right shoulder. But the slight hitch spoiled his aim, perhaps, for the bullet missed, passing through McDonald's overcoat collar, though the range was so short that the powder burned his face.

The game could now be considered open. Capt. Bill, with a quick movement that was between skip and a step, got around Coffer and let go two shots in quick succession at Matthews. Both of McDonald's bullets struck within the space of a 50-cent piece, just above Matthews' heart, penetrated a thick plug of Star Navy, found a heavy notebook behind it, and stopped.

With a thought process which may be regarded as cool for such a moment, Capt. Bill realized that for some reason he could not kill Matthews by shooting him on that side, and shifted his aim. Matthews, meantime had again dodged behind Coffer, who now dropped flat to the ground where it was quieter. Capt. Bill was bending forward at the time, trying to get a shot around Coffer, and as the latter dropped, Matthews fired, the bullet striking McDonald in the left shoulder, ranging down through his lung to the small of his back, traveling two-thirds the length of his body for lodgement.

The Ranger was knocked backward but did not fall. Matthews quickly fired again, but McDonald was near enough now to knock the gun aside with his own, and the ball passed through his hat brim. Aiming at Matthews' other shoulder, McDonald let go his third shot, and Matthews fell.

Meantime the two deputy assassins had opened fire, and one of them had sent two bullets through McDonald's left arm. To these he gave no attention until Matthews dropped. Wheeling now, he started to cock his gun, when he received another ball, this time in his right shoulder, along which it traveled to his neck, thence around the windpipe to the left side. His fingers were paralyzed by this wound and he made an effort to cock his gun with his teeth; but there was no further need, for with the collapse of Matthews his co-murderers fled wildly to cover, behind the depot, nearly upsetting a box-car in their hurry.

Capt. Bill walked a few steps to the sidewalk. There was a post there, and holding to this he eased himself to a sitting position. A man ran up to him.

"Cap, how about it?"

"Well, I think I'm a dead rabbit."

They gathered him up and took him to a drug store, and they took Matthews to a drug store across the street. By and by they carried Capt. Bill home, and a doctor came to hunt for the bullets.

"Now, Doc," the Ranger captain said when the operation was over, and the surplus cargo had been removed, "now, I'll get well;" and Rhoda McDonald, his nervy wife, who had arrived on the scene, echoed this belief.

"If Bill Jess says he'll get well, he'll do it!" she declared.

Matthews died in a few days. He was removed to Childress and died there. Before his death he sent word to McDonald:

"You acted the man all through," was his message. "I'm only sorry that I can't see you and apologize."

"Tell him that I'm doing all right," was the answer returned, "and that I hope he'll get well."

The mending of Capt. Bill was a slow process. For about two months he was laid up, and then with his wife he sojourned for a time at a sanitarium. After that, he was up once more, ready and eager for action—apparently as fit as ever; though, in truth, the physical repairing was never quite complete.

EGAN GETS MEDAL

Notre Dame Honors the Minister to Denmark.

Laetare Trophy, the Highest Decoration for Lay Member of Catholic Church, Given to United States Envoy.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Laetare medal, which is the highest decoration of honor for a lay member of the Catholic church in the United States, which is annually conferred by the University of Notre Dame on some man or woman who has achieved distinction in art, literature, science or philanthropy, goes this year to the American minister to Denmark, Maurice Francis Egan, author, educator and diplomatist. The award is made for distinguished services to Catholic literature and education.

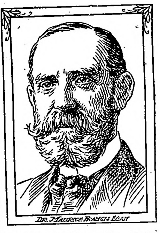
For 20 years before his appointment as the representative of the United States at the court of Denmark, Dr. Egan was occupied as a professor of literature, and during that period he found time to publish several important works on literary criticism which are held in high esteem by university men. He is also well known as a novelist, but his claims to literary distinction rest most on the verse which he has written.

He has published several volumes and Richard Watson Gilder placed him among the three best sonneteers in English. Because of the literary quality of his work and most of all because his themes are wholesome and elevating the trustees of the University of Notre Dame have selected Dr. Egan as the recipient of the Laetare medal this year.

The medal takes its name from the title given the fourth Sunday of Lent, the day when the announcement of the award is always made. It corresponds to the decoration of the Golden Rose, which is conferred by the pope every year on some member of the nobility of Europe.

The medal is a large disk of pure gold, richly enameled, and bearing in relief some design suited to the profession of the recipient. A motto in Latin, "Truth is mighty and shall prevail," appears in black enamel surrounding the design. Accompanying the medal is an address of award painted on silk by some artist of renown.

The Laetare medal was first given in 1883. It was then conferred on the historian, John Gilmary Shea. In succession the following were decorated: Patrick J. Keeley, architect; Eliza Allen Starr, art critic; Gen. John Newton, civil engineer; Patrick V. Hickey, editor; Anna Hanson Dorsey, author; William J. Onahan, publicist; Maj. Henry F. Brownson, soldier and scholar; Patrick Donahue, editor and philanthropist; Augustin Daly, theatrical manager; Anna T. Sadlier, author; Gen. William F. Rosecrans, soldier; Thomas Addis Emmett, physician; Timothy E. Howard, jurist; John A. Creighton, philanthropist; William Bourke Cockran, lawyer and statesman; John B. Murphy, surgeon; Thomas B. Fitzpatrick, merchant and philanthropist; Katherine Eleanor Conway, author and editor; Francis Quinlan, surgeon; James C. Monaghan, publicist and educator; Christine Frances Tiernan, author.



DR. MAURICE FRANCIS EGAN

Although the name of the recipient and the reasons for the award are made public on Laetare Sunday, actual presentation of the medal does not take place until some weeks later at a time when dignitaries of the Catholic church and men eminent in the same line of work as the recipient can be brought together. In the case of Dr. Egan he will probably not be formally decorated with the medal until the latter part of May or June.

Maurice Francis Egan was born in Philadelphia in 1852. He was graduated from La Salle college in that city in 1873. He received the degree of master of arts from the University of Notre Dame in 1878 and of LL.D. from Georgetown university in 1879. In 1891 the University of Ottawa conferred on him the degree of JUD., and Villanova the degree of Ph. D. in 1907.

In 1878 he began newspaper work and he was successively reporter, subeditor and editor until 1888, when he was called to the chair of English literature in the University of Notre Dame, where he remained until 1895, when he went to the Catholic University of America in Washington as professor of literature. In 1907 he was appointed by President Roosevelt envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Denmark.

When the Teachers Visit Washington

I'LL TOG UP A BIT AND MAKE A GOOD IMPRESSION

WASHINGTON.—The spring vacation is when the teachers swarm to Washington. They come from east, north, south and west. They are personally conducted, as a rule, as in the case of the Cleveland teachers here Easter week; and what they don't see is not worth seeing.

They go to the White House, and if they are lucky they get a glimpse of the president and possibly a handshake. Then they want to see Cannon. Cannon is on his best behavior on these occasions. He readily consents to make a little speech, as he did for the Clevelanders. All you have to do is to go to his secretary and state your request.

"Well," says the secretary, "you have them here at so-and-so sharp. Mr. Cannon will be here."

Cannon comes out in his best "Uncle Joe" attitude. He bows and smiles and says, "Ah, yes, I'm glad to see you." And he talks in a low, confidential tone that is calculated to make the teachers think that anybody who opposes him is opposing a nice, kind old man. He admits some faults, but he tries to make his hearers believe that he isn't half as bad as he has been painted.

Clerk John Walker of the senate gets in on this, too. He tells the teachers about everything of interest in the capitol. He had 200 New Hampshire beauties in one party recently. He took them into the rooms of the District of Columbia committee.

"This room is where the senate branch of the Washington council sits," he said. "Here are considered the improvements, the changes, the laws and the ordinances of the city of Washington. Look there at the picture of the Union station, which, beautiful and imposing, greeted you when you came to Washington.

"Then, too, behold the panorama of the harbor of Portsmouth, in our beloved New Hampshire, with its splendid navy yard, its picturesque islands and wooded slopes. This picture is Senator Gallinger's pride, just as Portsmouth is the pride of all the people of New Hampshire."

How Few Drinks Change a Man's Mood

SENATOR WARNER of Missouri rose to speak at a dinner that was being given by the Missouri Republican league in Washington recently. He had been introduced at some length, and rather sugary things had been said about him. Whatever brought the story to his mind he didn't say. Possibly it was that introduction.

"In a western town there was a village drunkard," said the senator. "I want to tell a story about him to illustrate what a change in a man's mood drink may make. This drunkard was often under the care of the village doctor. The doctor decided to move to Texas. The drunkard met him on the street in the morning before he had had a drink.

"'Hello, doc," he said, 'understand you're going to Texas. Well, I've got a brother out there by the name of Bill. If you see Bill you tell him that my crops are rotten this year. Stock is in bad shape. My wife needs clothes and the kids are nearly naked. If he has a little loose change that he don't need tell him to send it along. I'll pay it back.' The doctor said he would convey the message to Bill if he chanced to meet that person.

"An hour later, when he had had two drinks, the drunkard met the doctor again. 'Hello, doc,' he said, 'understand you're going to Texas. I've got a brother out there by the name of Bill. If you see Bill tell him I'm getting along all right., Crops are fair. Stock not so bad. Kids gettin' along all right. So is the old woman. If you see Bill, tell him I don't need any help.'

"Two hours after this, when the drunkard had had several more drinks, he met the doctor again. 'Hello, doc,' said the drunkard, 'understand you're going to Texas,' and so forth. 'If you see Bill tell him I was never in better shape. Crops are fine. Stock fat and sassy. Family on Easy street. Tell Bill, if you see him, that I'll send him some money if he's up against it.'"

How a Secretary Was Made Miserable

I HAVE NOTHING TO SAY

SECRETARIES to congressmen take really more interest in what the congressmen do than the congressmen themselves. The secretaries carefully weigh each word and act, to determine what the folks back home are going to think about it.

One secretary, a dyed-in-the-wool Republican, had always boasted that his chief was a regular of the regulars. These doggoned Insurgents would never get that congressman's vote, you betcherlife. Well, when they were lining up for Cannon that congressman did vote with the Insurgents.

The secretary was plunged into deepest gloom. He couldn't understand it. He treated his chief with marked reserve for several days. He avoided the secretaries whom he had made his boast to. But one afternoon he chanced upon a group of them in the hall of the house office building.

"How about it?" they chirruped. "How about it, old sport?"

The unhappy secretary gave them one haughty look.

"I have nothing to say," he declared, with marked asperity, and marched down the corridor.

Says Congressman Howland:

"When Cannon got to considering what the house had done when it ousted him from the rules committee he told this story: 'A man had been run over by a train. An employe wired that his head and both legs had been cut off. Later he sent another wire: 'Accident not as bad as reported. Your husband's legs were not cut off.'"

Story of a Beggar and Congressman

HIS BUMP OF LIBERALITY MUST BE ... ER DENT

A SOUTHERN congressman was walking toward Pennsylvania avenue from the capitol in Washington. He noticed a worn and shabby man eyeing him closely. When the congressman reached the shabby one the latter hailed him.

"You are a college man, sir," he said. "I can see that. May I speak to you a moment?"

The congressman obligingly slowed up his pace.

"I am a college man, too," said the stranger. "But I am down on my luck. I am offered a position, but I haven't got good enough clothes to accept it. I thought possibly you could help me temporarily. I will pay you back as soon as I get on my feet."

"No, I guess I kain't do anything," said the congressman.

"Well, could you let me have a dollar? I am hungry."

The congressman quickened his walk.

"A quarter? Please, just a quarter."

"No, I guess not," said the congressman.

The stranger stopped and the congressman moved away. Then this was sent after him:

"Say, you haven't got a cigarette paper, have you?"

This is pretty bad, but we tell it because it is going the rounds.

"Rodenberg has gone into business," said Bartholdt of St. Louis, addressing Chapman and McKinney of Illinois.

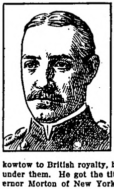
"The dog business," Bartholdt added. "He's got a new dog. He calls him Hardware."

"Why such a name?" asked the other congressmen.

"When the grocery boy kicked at the dog this morning the dog made a bolt for the door," was Bartholdt's unblushing answer.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

COL. JOHN JACOB ASTOR



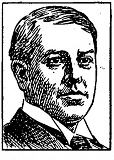
Col. John Jacob Astor gave a dinner which cost $28,000 several weeks ago to celebrate the divorce granted to his wife. Only a short time before the country was startled by the report that the colonel had been lost at sea with his son when they were caught in a hurricane while touring the West Indies in their palatial yacht. The report was not true and Colonel Astor turned up saft and sound.

These little incidents in the life of the head of the great Astor family, no doubt, added to the impression that all Colonel Astor has to do is to give parties and ride around the world in his yacht. Nothing is further from the truth. Colonel Astor is a busy man. He has been a useful citizen and unlike another member of his family who alienated himself from the United States to kowtow to British royalty, he loves the stars and stripes and has seen service under them. He got the title of colonel when appointed on the staff of Governor Morton of New York. He was commissioned a lieutenant colonel of United States volunteers and served with General Shafter in Cuba. At his own expense he equipped a mountain battery which served throughout the Philippine operations.

The real estate holdings of the Astors in New York city are the largest of any estate in that metropolis. As head of the family the responsibility of looking after this property rests upon Colonel Astor. Of course he has a staff of assistants, but the colonel often is at work by eight o'clock in the morning. He is a director and trustee in more than a dozen big corporations, has written several books and is the inventor of a pneumatic machine to remove worn-out material from the roads before the new stone is laid down. This received a first prize at the World's Columbian exposition in 1893. He is also the inventor of an improved steam turbine, the patent of which he presented to the public.

In 1909 he invented the vibratory disintegrator, a device which manufactures gas from peat.

ROUSED ROOSEVELT'S IRE



Rev. Bertrand Martin Tipple, head of the Methodist church in Rome, has stirred up a hornet's nest and the final sting may not come for years, if ever. To Mr. Tipple's zealous work for the Methodist cause may indirectly be charged the incident which prevented Theodore Roosevelt meeting the pope. Only a short time ago former Vice-President Fairbanks found himself in the same position as that which Colonel Roosevelt occupied. Of course the Fairbanks incident did not cause such a furore as the Roosevelt affair.

Now Colonel Roosevelt is angry at Rev. Mr. Tipple. The former president wanted the clash with the Vatican to rest as a personal matter so far as he was concerned, but a statement issued by Rev. Mr. Tipple stirred up the trouble anew and then Colonel Roosevelt called off the reception he intended to give the American colony in Rome.

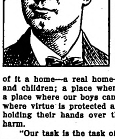
"While the work of Methodism in Rome," says the statement, "started the rumpus, it is no longer Methodism or any other ism, but the great principle of toleration. Mr. Roosevelt has struck a blow for twentieth-century Christianity.

"After the Fairbanks episode the Methodists never dreamed that the Vatican would commit a similar blunder with Mr. Roosevelt.

"Americans can now better understand how it is that the Roman church has lost France and the men of Italy, and is losing Spain and Austria."

Imagine Colonel Roosevelt when he read this statement. He didn't like it a little bit and he said so in the true Rooseveltian manner.

MILWAUKEE'S NEW MAYOR



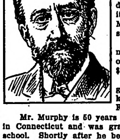
The eyes of the nation are on Emil Seidel, Socialist, who has just been elected mayor of Milwaukee. The people want to know what a Socialist with the reins of government of a big city like Malwaukee will do. Consequently they have turned the calcium rays on Mr. Seidel and his every action will be watched with interest. Those who expect to see a radical change in the traditions of city government, judging from the utterances of the mayor-elect, will be doomed to disappointment. The following statement of the new mayor gives an indication of his intentions:

"We must remove the swamps and cesspools and marshes as our forefathers have done; we must take this city that they founded and built and beautified and must cleanse it.

"Our task is to take this our city and to make of it a home—a real home— for its hundreds of thousands of men, women and children; a place where there is little room for tears and heartaches; a place where our boys can become men and our daughters women; a place where virtue is protected and a place where the strong stand for the weak, holding their hands over the heads of the feeble, shielding them from all harm.

"Our task is the task of realizing the dreams of all the great men of the past."

WILL GIVE AWAY MILLIONS



How would you like to give away $500,000,000 and possibly $1,000,000,000 of somebody else's wealth? Sounds like a nice job, doesn't it? Looks like a nice occupation to dole out a thousand here, ten thousand some place else, a hundred thousand there and a million elsewhere, but it isn't the softest snap in the world, as Starr J. Murphy, personal counsel and benevolent representative for John D. Rockefeller will tell you.

Mr. Murphy has been giving away Rockefeller money since 1904. Estimates of the amounts the oil king has given range from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000.

Now comes Mr. Rockefeller with a plan to give away all of his fortune for the aid of mankind. He has selected his son, Mr. Murphy and Frederick T. Gates as the men to do the work.

Mr. Murphy is 50 years old and the son of a clergyman. He was born in Connecticut and was graduated from Amherst and the Columbia Law school. Shortly after he became connected with John D. Rockefeller, Mr. Murphy attracted attention from his chief and was rapidly promoted until he occupied a position in the affairs of the oil king as important as those held by the late Henry H. Rogers and John D. Archbold.

Mr. Rockefeller for some time has not entered into any transaction without the advice of Starr J. Murphy. While Rogers and Archbold were working to make money Mr. Murphy was working to give it away. Mr. Murphy was made a member of the General Education board, the organization through which Mr. Rockefeller has given millions to colleges.

How Foreigners Kiss When They Land

NEW YORK.—"I have been keeping tabs on the different kinds of kissers who come in here," said Gustav Melhauser, the big porter at the piers of the Hamburg-American line, at the foot of First street, Hoboken, and have found that there are six general types and many varieties.

"To begin with, there is the whisker kiss, or the Russian kiss, which is given by one man to another. The kissers enfold each other in a giant embrace and, putting whiskers to whiskers, kiss each other on the cheeks. M. Witte, the Russian, who came over to settle up the Japanese row, gave us the best example of this when he was in Hoboken.

"I notice that even the lowest Russians and the Asiatic people bordering on the Russian states when they meet their brothers and friends here have this same masculine kiss, but sometimes bestow it on the lips.

"The sweetheart kiss is distinct from the husband and wife kiss. I can tell German sweethearts from German wives as far as I can see or hear their kisses.

"When she comes down the plank and—yes, throws herself, that's the word—throws herself into his arms, you can hear the smack of that kiss half way down the pier, a sound to give strength and courage to every male thing that hears it explode.

"There is the 'sent for' kiss! The scared, doubtful kiss of the girl who has come to America to marry a man she has never seen. Perhaps she has been introduced to him by some mutual friend in a letter.

"And last, there is the holy kiss of the good boy who has come here, made money enough to send for his old mother, and greets her as she comes feebly down the gangplank with the light of wonder and hope in her old eyes, he having come a thousand miles, or two thousand miles, across country to guide her to the new home he has made for her."

Girl Holds Burglar Till Aid Comes

NEW YORK.—Sophie Rosen, a nurse, twenty-two years old, recently was sleeping with her younger sister in a room on the parlor floor of the Rosen home, No. 341 Nineteenth street, Brooklyn, when a man tiptoed by the bed holding a lighted match. That woke Miss Rosen, but she didn't make the least sound. Waiting until the intruder had sneaked into the parlor, she slipped out of the bed, ran back to the kitchen and lighted the gas. Then she opened the door and called up the open stairway, not very loudly, for help. Her call quickly put into action Mrs. Rosen and the three Rosenberg brothers, who room on the upper floor.

Not waiting for reinforcements, the nurse ran back into the kitchen, shut the door and made her way back through her bedroom into the parlor. The intruder was trying to get out by the parlor door, but it was locked. Though the room was dark and she had read much of armed burglars the nurse made a leap for the man, gave a yell and flung her arms around him in a vise-like embrace. She then gave the fellow a sudden rock to one side and flung him sprawling into a chair.

Then reinforcements flocked in. The fellow broke loose from Miss Rosen when he saw the others, and lay on the floor, pretending to be asleep. A patrolman was summoned and the intruder was bundled off and afterward arraigned and held in the Fifth avenue court. He described himself as Mark C. Moran, twenty-seven years old, a stationary engineer, living in No. 2417 West Burke street, Philadelphia. He said he meant no harm to the Rosens, but had been taken into their basement by his friend "Bill" to sleep. He was trying to wander out, he asserted, when Miss Rosen jumped on him. The police said the basement door, inside cellar door and door into the Rosens' rooms had been forced.

Weighed $10 Less After Being Lifted

SHOW ME
I CAN LIFT YUH GUS

CHICAGO.—It's all right to try all day to lift yourself over the fence by your boot straps, but when some one comes along and wants to boost you off your feet by your trousers pockets, fight shy.

This is the philosophy of Gus William. He wasn't indorsing the theory two weeks ago, but now he is strong for it. Why? That all came out at a hearing before Municipal Judge Gemmill and, according to testimony, a conversation like this took place in a saloon at East Thirty-first and State streets:

"Hello, Gus! You are looking fatter."

Gus straightened up and smiled with pride. Then he bought two beers.

"Gus, let me weigh you, will you?"

And Gus did.

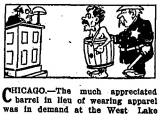
"But what of it?" asked Judge Gemmill.

"Well, when he let me down I weighed ten dollars less," said Gus. "He put his hands in my pocket and lifted me up and when he dropped me a ten-dollar bill was missing."

Gus declared that he didn't think his friend was strong enough to lift him, but he said that when a man has a chance to get a ten-dollar bill easily he generally works harder than required to earn it.

He preferred charges against John Wilson, accusing him of the fake lifting operation. The latter denied that he ever had weighed Gus and at the suggestion of the court promised to produce rebuttal testimony.

Barrel in Lieu of Wearing Apparel



CHICAGO.—The much appreciated barrel in lieu of wearing apparel was in demand at the West Lake street police station several days ago when the time came to prepare for taking Felix McGee to the Desplaines street municipal court.

Felix was shy of clothing and shivered in a cell in the cold basement while the police officials puzzled their brains as to how they would get him to trial. The trouble was that Felix wore nothing but a pair of pajamas.

All sorts of suggestions were offered from the common grocery barrel to a policeman's uniform and a Chinese outfit offered by a friendly Celestial. While the conference was in session Felix was shivering in the basement cell.

Early in the day somebody telephoned to the police that murder was being committed in a flat at 1164 West Madison street.

Sergt. Peter Fitzpatrick, who weighs 300 pounds, and Detective George Stevens hurried to the place. They heard cries that gave them cold chills, and with drawn revolvers demanded admittance.

Suddenly the noise ceased. The policemen broke in the door and found Mrs. Minnie Johnson and Joseph McIntyre. They also saw Felix fleeing through a rear window dressed in pajamas. Sergt. Fitzpatrick pursued. He also took most of the window-casing with him.

Felix fled west in Madison street with the heavyweight sergeant after him. Fitzpatrick, amid much perspiring and puffing, threatened to shoot, to kill, and do other desperate things if the man in pajamas did not halt.

WORTHLESS FARMS.

American agriculture shows a strange contrast. With the price of farm products higher than ever before, farm land has depreciated in value, and the number of abandoned farms steadily increases. Figures gathered by the conservation commission are surprising. It is shown that there are 16,000 square miles of abandoned farms, chiefly in New England, New York, the southeast and the middle central states. That is, there are in the United States at present 10,000,000 acres of abandoned farm land—an area as large as the cultivated part of the Canadian northwest, 15 times the size of Rhode Island, four times the size of Connecticut, twice the size of Massachusetts, or half as large as Ohio, says Cleveland Plain Dealer. Of the many reasons advanced to explain this desertion of farms, two or three are especially worth noticing. Most important of all, perhaps, is the wasteful system of cultivation that has so long prevailed in the United States. A fertile soil has in countless cases been exhausted by taking everything from it and returning nothing to it. Add to this the fact that there is a marked trend of population from city to country, and that farm labor has become so expensive as to leave little profit from the work of a laborer, and it is little wonder that so many owners of farms do not care to cultivate them.

Relic hunters have been breaking into the church where President Taft worships in Washington. During the past year it has been twice necessary to rebuild the president's pew, and it is no longer safe to leave the hymn books in the rack or the cushion on the seat after the chief executive has attended services, says Chicago Record-Herald. So many books and cushions have been carried away that officials of the church now take everything that is movable from the pew as soon as the president finishes his devotions. Cannot something be done to lessen the hardship that is thus put upon the relic hunters? Why not furnish a plank for the president to sit on when he goes to church, and then leave it for the relic hunters to whittle up and divide among themselves? By having it made of some kind of soft wood the comfort of the president and the convenience of the relic hunters would both be provided for. We are a great people and ought to be able somehow to keep our relic hunters from feeling that they are being deprived of their rights.

News of grim, red-handed war comes to us from New Orleans, where the retail grocers, backed, we suppose, by the moral influence of the druggists, the marketmen, etc., are about to appeal to the legislature for a law prohibiting lagnappe and making its practice a misdemeanor, says New York Sun. Lagnappe is a picturesque survival, the bestowal upon small purchasers of trivial donations, regulated by the size of the transaction, of gumdrops, candy, and the like. They have tried to fight it by combination and mutual agreement, but have failed. Some of them would not "tote fair." The institution is more than a hundred years old, and it dies hard, so after the modern fashion of running to the government on every trivial provocation, the grocers are about to ask the legislature to protect them against a custom of a century and a half's standing, of inconsiderable importance in itself and so easily "evened up" in practice as to make it negligible.

A Utica boy died while laughing at the comic supplement of a Sunday paper. Of course, this will be taken as a terrific retribution by the acidulous portion of the population opposed to the comic supplement and the Sunday paper. But with so much cause for sighing in the world, the majority will still take chances of laughing themselves to death.

LA FOLLETTE SCORES MORGAN

SENATOR CALLS FINANCIER A "THICK-NECKED BULLY."

Wisconsin Man in Attack on Taft's Rail Bill Also Criticizes Attorney General.

Washington. — Characterizing J. Pierpont Morgan as "a beefy, red-faced, thick-necked financial bully, drunk with wealth and power, who bawls his orders to stock markets, directors, courts, governments and nations," Senator La Follette of Wisconsin Tuesday opened a bitter attack on the administration railroad bill in the senate. He also criticised Attorney General Wickersham.

The Wisconsin member criticised the bill as opening the way for unrestricted consolidation of lines and cited the case of the Boston & Maine merger with the New Haven as an illustration of the possibilities of the act under the present administration.

Charging the attorney general with undue haste in discontinuing the suit begun by the Roosevelt administration against these roads, he declared that, judging by what that official did in that case, it was not a violent assumption to state that if the pending bill had been a law "he would have entered into a stipulation with the New Haven road that the roads proposed to be acquired were not directly and substantially competitive; that on such stipulation judgment would have been rendered by the court of commerce in accordance with the stipulation, thereby estopping the government forever from making any claim that such acquisitions were in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act."

Senator La Follette declared that every proper effort had been made by the Roosevelt administration to prosecute the merger suit against the two companies, and expressed indignation at Attorney General Wickersham's prompt dismissal of the case within three months after he came into office.

BRYAN DEFENDER OF SILVER

Nebraskan Says Taft Agrees With Him in Attributing High Prices to Gold Flood.

Washington.—The letter of William Jennings Bryan, written from Brazil and read before the Democrats who attended the Jefferson day banquet here and those at a similar dinner in Indianapolis Wednesday—the letter which caused a commotion among local banquet committeemen at its initial reading because of what some of them considered its unorthodox statements—is in part as follows:

"President Taft, in his Lincoln speech at New York, February 12, attributed the present high prices mainly to the increase in the production of gold, and the consequent enlargement of the volume of money.

"This unexpected indorsement of our party's proposition in 1896, when we demanded more money as the only remedy for falling prices, is very gratifying. How valuable that admission would have been to us if it had been made during the campaign of that year when the Republican leaders were denying that the volume of money had any influence on prices, and asserting that it did not matter whether we had much money or little, provided it was all good.

"We may now consider the quantitative theory of money established beyond dispute and proceed to the consideration of other questions. But the president and his predecessor have admitted the correctness of the Democratic position on so many questions that further argument is hardly necessary on any subject; we may now take judgment against the Republican party by confession."

Bank Robbed of $10,000.

Spring City, Tenn.—Robbers blew the vault of the First National bank at this place Thursday and escaped with an amount exceeding $10,000. Nitroglycerin was used in the explosion. Bloodhounds soon were placed on the trail, but thus far the safeblowers have not been apprehended. There was $10,200 in the bank vault, and in the morning only $30 was found. One of the robbers shot at S. E. Paul, assistant cashier, as he ran to the institution after the explosion. Paul was unhurt.

TAKING OF CENSUS BEGINS

Army of 70,000 Enumerators Starts Out to Count Uncle Sam's Family—Work Ends in Month.

Washington.—An army of 70,000 enumerators—larger than the standing army—Friday morning began the task of counting the population of the United States. It is estimated that Uncle Sam has about 90,000,000 children and the work of checking them up must be completed in one month. In the cities the count will be made in 15 days and some of the returns from them are expected by the first week in June. The exact population of the entire country, however, will not be determined before September.

The enumeration will cover all the 46 states, the two territories, Hawaii and Porto Rico. Alaska, the Philippine islands and Guam are not included, as special arrangements are made for numbering the people there. The inquiry comprises three principal branches: Population, agriculture, and manufacturing and mining.

The questions cover the acreage, the value and the product of farms, including an especial enumeration of animals, and the capital invested, the value of products, and the number of employees of mining and manufacturing plants.

Director Durand is counting upon 90,000,000 names. This estimate is based upon the calculations of his experts, and makes allowance for an increase according to the tendencies shown in the last three censuses. Between 1870 and 1880 the increase in the population was 30 per cent.; between 1880 and 1890, 25 per cent.; between 1890 and 1900, 21 per cent. If the decrease should continue at the same ratio there would be a falling off this year of 17 per cent.

THREE ARE DEAD IN WRECK

Six Others Fatally Hurt and Like Number Are Missing—Freight Train Leaps Track.

Spokane, Wash.—As a result of a disastrous wreck on the Northern Pacific railroad three miles west of Spokane Thursday, three men are dead, six are probably fatally injured and six others are unaccounted for.

It is supposed that the mangled remains of the missing will be found in the tangled mass of wreckage.

Eye witnesses state that a freight train not under control, and which had reached a speed of 50 miles an hour, was suddenly seen to leap into the air and disappear in a cloud of dust and debris.

The train was east-bound in charge of Conductor R. J. McDonald and Engineer Arthur Lewis. Both escaped injury by jumping.

DECLARES STORY IS FAKE

Colonel Says He Is Sorry Not to Meet Root in Europe—Desires Light on Political Conditions From All Sides.

Vienna.—Theodore Roosevelt was indignant when he learned that a report had been printed in Paris and cabled to America, to the effect that one of the results of his recent conference with Gifford Pinchot was an agreement on his part to use his name as a candidate for the presidency.

The colonel said the story was a pure fake, that neither he nor Gifford Pinchot had said anything that could possibly warrant such a statement.

In this connection Roosevelt said his meeting with Pinchot should not be interpreted as a desire to hear only one side of the conservation controversy. "I want to hear all sides on all questions," the colonel said, "and I shall be glad to see anyone who can enlighten me on political conditions. I am sorry that Senator Root could not come to Europe."

In concluding his remarks regarding the Paris Herald, the colonel said: "As this is the third false statement in the Herald of a similar character, I must absolutely decline to see the representatives of that paper."

Theodore Roosevelt and his son Kermit arrived here Friday morning. A thin haze hung over the Austrian capital when the train bearing Mr. Roosevelt drew into the station. The guest was met by Herr von Mueller, principal secretary of the foreign office, who was there as representative of the Austrian government. American Ambassador Kerens and others of the staffs of the American embassy and consulate and Baron Hengelmuller von Hengervar, Austro-Hungarian ambassador at Washington.

After an exchange of greetings Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Kerens entered a court carriage and drove directly to the Hotel Kranz. Owing to the earliness of the hour the streets were almost deserted and although the driver and the footman wore the imperial livery the passing of the party attracted no attention.

After breakfast with Henry White, formerly American ambassador to France, who came from Silesia to meet him, Mr. Roosevelt received several Americans who awaited him at the hotel and then drove in the court carriage to the foreign office, on the Ball-Platz, and made an official call on Count von Aehrenthal, the foreign minister. Returning to his hotel, the former president received a call from Baron Hengelmuller.

At two o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Roosevelt again entered the court carriage and drove to the Horburg palace, where he was received in audience by Emperor Francis Joseph. As a special mark of esteem the emperor greeted his guest in his private apartments instead of in the usual audience chamber. As Mr. Roosevelt entered the courtyard the palace guard turned out and rendered him military honors.

ARMSTRONG COMPANY IS HIT

Insurance Actuary Charges Nearly $600,000 Is Missing From Treasury of Casualty Concern.

Charleston, W. Va.—That the active managers of the Consolidated Casualti company before its reorganization here this week, under direction of the insurance department of West Virginia, collected $757,114 in one year and nine months, of which only $191,637 remains, and that they made false entries on the books of the company and false returns to the insurance department of the state, are charges in the report of John F. Roche of New York, consulting actuary to the insurance department, made public Friday.

The actuary found that the entire management of the company was in the hands of Robert B. Armstrong of Chicago, president; C. H. Burras, vice-president, and A. S. Mitchell, secretary and treasurer, as officers, and of Armstrong, Burras and Mitchell D. Follansbee as the executive committee.

The actuary's report states that the condition of the company's books was such that a correct audit is almost impossible. Among irregularities charged are cancellation of stock issued, a collection of partial payments for which nothing was issued, and the issuing of stock which was not paid for. The actuary recites that President Armstrong drew a salary of $1,000 per month. "June 30, 1909," the report says, "it was discovered that he (Armstrong) had overdrawn his salary $2,312." Subsequently this "overdraft of salary was charged to miscellaneous expenses."

SIX DEAD IN PRISON FIRE

EXPLOSION TRAPS FIREMEN AT NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Prisoners, in a Panic, Safely Removed by Militia, and None Try to Escape.

New Haven, Conn.—In a fire which partially destroyed the county jail and completely burned the New England chair factory adjoining, six firemen were burned to death Wednesday and 20 others were seriously injured. Fifty convicts employed in the chair factory were removed in safety.

When the fire broke out there were 280 prisoners in the jail. They were greatly excited by the noise and smoke, which poured into the jail from the blazing chair factory. They were kept in their cells, however, until the explosion of a small boiler spread the flames to the jail proper.

The prisoners were then marched out on the lawn and so carefully guarded that not one escaped. Under escort of militia they were transferred in patrol wagons and automobiles to the city prison.

Control of the fire was secured after a damage of $175,000 had been sustained. As soon as the ruins cooled a search was made for the six missing firemen. Their bodies were found alongside the nozzles of their burned hose lines, where they had fallen after the explosion.

WILLS $100,000 TO CHARITY

Thomas F. Walsh Leaves $10,000,000 to His Widow and Daughter, Mrs. Edward McLean.

Washington. — When the will of the late Thomas F. Walsh was filed for probate it was found that the son of the daughter of the millionaire would be not the "$100,000,000 baby," but merely one of the many babies who can count themselves as merely millionaires when they grow up to man's estate.

The estate of Mr. Walsh, as shown by his will, reaches a total of $10,000,000, or maybe $15,000,000. The bulk of this sum is left to the widow and the daughter, now Mrs. Edward McLean, and through her to the baby that has been supposed to be the "$100,000,000 baby."

One hundred thousand dollars is left to charity, but no specific beneficiary is named.

Mrs. Maxwell is the mother of Wade Maxwell, county clerk of Marion county.

Suffragists Hiss at Taft.

Washington.—President Taft was hissed by the delegates to the National American Suffrage convention here Thursday night during his address to that organization welcoming them to Washington. Throughout the speech symptoms of disfavor were displayed by the delegates in the form of isolated answers from the body of the convention about mooted points the president was making. This culminated in the dramatic hissing after he had stated substantially that one of his fears in the success of woman suffrage was that the most desirable element of American womanhood would not hold the offices that would come through the ballot. At the conclusion of his talk the leaders expressed their regret to Mr. Taft over the hissing.

GERMANY AND CANADIAN WHEAT

LOOKS TO THE CANADIAN WEST FOR HER SUPPLY.

A dispatch from Winnipeg, Manitoba, dated March 18, 1910 says: That Germany is "anxious to secure a share of Canadian wheat to supply her imports of that cereal." The recent adjustment of the trade relations with Germany has made it possible to carry on a Canadian-German trade with much fewer restrictions than in the past, and considerable development of trade between the two Countries is now certain. The great men of the United States are alive to the Wheat situation in this Country now, and there is consequently the deepest interest in every feature that will tend to increase and conserve the wheat supply. With its present 650,000,000 bushel production of wheat and all efforts to increase it almost unavailing, and the rapidly growing consumption of its increasing population, there is certainly the greatest reason for the anxiety as to where the wheat is to come from that will feed the nation. The United States will be forced as Germany is to look to the Wheatfields of Canada. One province alone raised last year one-eighth as much as the entire production of the United States, and but a twelfth of the wheat area has yet been touched. The Americans who have gone to Canada, are to-day reaping the benefit of the demand for Canadian wheat and they will continue to join in the benefits thus reached for a great many years. Splendid yields are reported from the farms of that Country, and from land that the Government gives away in 160 acre blocks, and from other lands that have been purchased at from $12 to $15 an acre. John Munter, near Eyebrow, Saskatchewan, a former resident of Minnesota says:

"Last fall got over 30 bushels of wheat to the acre and had 30 acres of it; also 20 acres spring breaking on which I had flax of which I got almost 20 bushels per acre. Had 20 acres in oats and got 70 bushels per acre and 500 bushels potatoes on one and three quarter acre, and can therefore safely say that I had a fine crop and am well satisfied with my homestead."

He is considered but a small farmer, but he will be one of the big farmers, some of these days. There are many others, hundreds of others, whose yields were beyond this, and whose average under crop was vastly greater. The story of the experience of American farmers in the Canadian West is a long one. The time to go, would appear to be now, when splendid selections may be made, and where land can be purchased at prices that will be doubled in a couple of years.

It Seemed So.

The little son of the family happened to be idling his time in the kitchen when the colored porter came up out of the cellar, where he had been shoveling coal into the heater, grasped the white towel hanging on the door and passed into the hall. For an instant the youth gazed awestruck at the coal dust impressions left on the towel, then yelled after the retreating negro:

"Oh, Sam, your color's coming off!"

"Old fellow," suggested the candid friend, "you use the expression 'As a matter of fact' entirely too much. You have no idea how frequently you sprinkle it through your conversation."

"Thank you, old chap," replies the object of criticism. I'll try to avoid it hereafter. As a matter of fact, it isn't at all necessary to use it."

NEW THEORY IS RAPIDLY SPREADING OVER COUNTRY

L. T. Cooper's theory concerning the human stomach, which he claims to prove, with his new medicine, is being given more respect and comment every day.

Cooper claims that 90 per cent. of all ill health is due to stomach trouble. When interviewed about his theory recently, he said: "Stomach trouble is the great curse of the 20th century so far as the civilized races are concerned. Practically all of the chronic ill health of this generation is caused by abnormal stomachic conditions. In earlier days, when the human race was closer to nature, and men and women worked all day out of doors, digging their frugal existence from the soil, the tired, droopy, half-sick people that are now so common, did not exist.

"To be sure, there was sickness in those days, but it was of a virulent character, and only temporary. There was none of this half-sick condition all the time with which so many are afflicted nowadays.

"I know positively that every bit of this chronic ill health is caused by stomach trouble. The human stomach in civilized people today is degenerate. It lacks tone and strength. This weakness has gradually ~~come through~~ a sedentary existence. I further know that few people can be sick with the digestive apparatus in perfect shape. The sole reason for my success is because my New Discovery medicine tones the stomach up to required strength in about six weeks' time. That is why I have had more people come and thank me wherever I have gone to introduce my medicine, than I have had time to talk with."

Among the immense numbers of people who are now strong believers in Cooper's theory and medicine is Mrs M. E. Delano, a prominent resident of the suburb of Brookline, Boston, Mass. She says: "For several years I was broken in health, caused primarily by stomach and nerve troubles. I gradually became worse, until recently I was compelled to go without solid food for days at a time. I had sour stomach, palpitation of the nerves of stomach and heart, dyspepsia, and extreme nervousness. I suffered terribly with insomnia, and my liver, bowels and whole system gradually became deranged. I felt instant relief the first day I began this Cooper medicine. I now feel like a new being. Today I walked all over town, shopping—something I have not done for years.

"I make this statement wholly from a sense of duty. I feel I owe it to anyone who might find relief and renewed happiness as I have done."

Kidney Troubles Grow Worse Every Year

Charles S. Bailey, 808 Locust St., Yankton, S. Dak., says: "I suffered agony from kidney complaint and was almost helpless. The disease grew worse each year although I doctored and used many remedies. There were excruciating pains in my back and the urine passed too freely. Doan's Kidney Pills gradually helped me and soon I was cured. Some years ago I recommended them and have had no trouble since."

"The trend of modern life seems on the surface to be toward preserved instead of fresh foods, but there is no such trend, save among certain dealers.

"Who," said Doctor Wiley, "would like to be in the boots of the cowboy in the barren sagebrush country who used to send in, week after week, the same order to the storekeeper:

PROVISION OF INDIAN TREATIES

Most Drastic of All Indian Agent's Orders.—Exceptions Few and Far Between—Doors Must Close by May 10.

Minneapolis. — A new liquor order, to take effect May 10, closing many saloons in the territory in Minnesota governed by the treaty with the Chippewa Indians of 1855 and 1863, has been issued by W. E. Johnson, chief special officer of the interior department. The order was issued as the result of research among the old Indian treaties by W. G. Calderwood, secretary of the Minnesota Prohibition committee.

The order affects all of Becker, Hubbard and Mahnomen counties, and parts of Beltrami, Cass, Clay, Clearwater, Crow Wing, Itasca, Norman, Ottertail and Wadena counties.

The following towns will be made "dry" by the order:

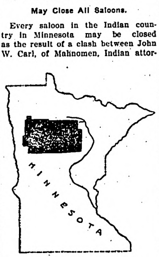
Although some of this territory has been closed to saloons by previous orders of the interior department, hundreds of saloons will be closed by it. The saloonkeepers are given until May 10 to dispose of their stock.

May Close All Saloons.

Every saloon in the Indian country in Minnesota may be closed as the result of a clash between John W. Carl, of Mahnomen, Indian attorney, and W. E. Johnson, special Indian agent for the government. Mr. Carl says he will accomplish his purpose if he has to appeal to the department of justice. He demands the closing of every saloon in the territory covered by the treaty of 1855, which includes Brainerd, Wadena, Bemidji, Staples and several others of importance.



The New Minnesota "Dry" Spot.

Mr. Johnson has so far refused to take any action in reference to these cities on the grounds that it was not the intention of the treaty to include them. He argued that the intention of the treaty is to prohibit the sale of liquor to Indians, and inasmuch as the saloons in these cities do not sell to the red men he will not molest them.

Mr. Johnson has been inclined to doubt the sincerity of Mr. Carl's intention and charges that he is the agent of the bootleggers and the breweries, and that he has a specific purpose in his agitation. He declares that it is the plan to have all the saloons in northern Minnesota close, which will result in such a protest that congress will annul the treaty.

S. S. LEADERS CONVENE.

Devotional Service Marks Opening of Gathering of Sunday School Folk.

Minneapolis, Minn. — One thousand or more men and women, representing every evangelistic denomination in Minnesota, gathered at the Wesley M. E. Church, Grant street and First avenue south, and amid a baptism of song and prayer opened the fifty-second annual convention of the Minnesota Sunday School Association. Badges and pennants of many colors added a picturesque effect, and bubbling enthusiasm gave token that the session probably will be the most successful in the history of this, one of the oldest state organizations in Minnesota. The association runs back to 1859.

J. H. Martin, Minneapolis, president of the association, presided. The opening song service was led by C. W. Mountain. The song service, which is going to be one of the big attractions during the convention, is to be led tomorrow by Prof. E. O. Excell. Many of the world-famous hymns composed by Prof. Excell will be sung.

The opening session was divided into three parts, the principal meeting being held in the church, while two other sessions were held in the Sunday School room. Both the side meetings were well attended. The main meeting was given over to a three-cornered symposium on "The Sunday School in the Twentieth Century," in which Prof. Geo. W. Davis, of Macalester College, read a paper on "Its Place in Religious Education"; Rev. J. E. Freeman, of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Minneapolis, a paper on "Training Its Workers," and Rev. W. B. Riley, First Baptist Church, Minneapolis, a paper on "Its Value for Evangelization."

BIG FIRE AT STILLWATER.

Flames Warded From State Prison by Efforts of Two Inmates.

Stillwater. — Serving a life sentence for murder, a convict in the Stillwater prison known as "Sinbad, the Sailor," put away all thoughts of escape during the excitement of the fire near the prison and labored heroically to save the prison from the flames.

That the prison was not destroyed is said to be due almost entirely to his efforts and those of another of the convicts whose name was not given out.

Warden Wolfer's house was saved, only suffering a severe scorching of the paint, and that the entire north end of Stillwater is not in ruins is a miracle. The fire-swept district covers an area of three squares. The estimated total loss of $65,000 is only partially covered by insurance.

Of unknown origin, the fire started at 2 p. m. in the warehouse of the Northwest Thresher company. The flames spread rapidly, fanned by a strong east wind. At 5 o'clock the fire was quenched and that more damage was not accomplished was due to the efforts of the Stillwater fire department, augmented by hundreds of volunteers.

Lines of hose were run over the hill and J. N. Bronson's residence was saved. However, Judge Nethaway's $13,000 residence was completely destroyed. The old Nick Abl residence was also consumed. Volunteers fought behind barricades, the flames were so fierce.

ALLEGED COUNTERFEITER HELD.

Man Arrested at Winona, Has Several Bogus Bills.

Winona. — Charles Dukes, alias Boxwell, is being held in this city charged wth counterfeiting. His pockets were searched and contained $67.60 in real money. The interior of his grip revealed the entire paraphernalia in handy shape.

There were 18 bills, prnted only on one side, of the $10 denomination, a box of paste with which to paste the two pieces of paper together and two $10 and two $5, already pasted together and hidden between the leaves of a book. The unfinished money was contained in an envelope sent to James A. Boxwell, Chippewa Falls, Wis., General Delivery. The bogus bills bore the inscription o the Farmers and Merchants bank of Atlanta, Ga. Papers in the grip would indicate that Boxwell served in the Indiana infantry.

MRS. THOS. H. SHEVLIN DIES.

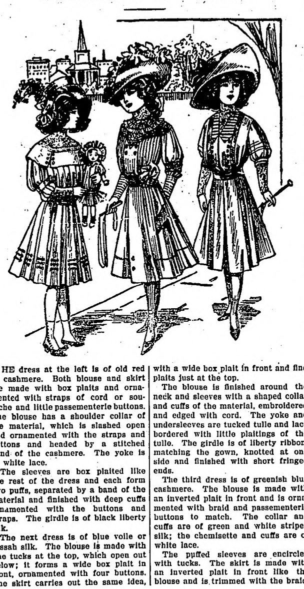
Wife of Prominent Lumberman Called To Her Reward.

Minneapolis.—Mrs. Alice A. Shevlin, wife of lumberman Thomas H. Shevlin, is dead at the family residence, in Minneapolis. She had been ill since last August, although her condition did not become serious until December, when she was taken to New York and placed under the care of specialists. Later she spent several weeks in a sanitarium at Chicago, returning to her home in February. Mrs. Shevlin passed in unconsciousness about 10 days go and for two or three days before her death the end was expected at any moment.

Warden Must Face Charge.

Duluth.—Fred B. James of Ely, who shot and killed a fisherman named Andrew Metsapelto at Long Lake, whom James, who is a deputy game warden, was trying to arrest for alleged seining of fish, has been held to the grand jury by Judge Thomas' jury of the municipal court of Ely, charged with murder in the first degree. The coroner's jury exonerated James, finding that he did the shooting while in pursuit of his duties as a game warden. James says that the killing was accidental.

Costumes for Child



THE dress at the left is of old red cashmere. Both blouse and skirt are made with box plaits and ornamented with straps of cord or soutache and little passementerie buttons. The blouse has a shoulder collar of the material, which is slashed open and ornamented with the straps and buttons and headed by a stitched band of the cashmere. The yoke is of white lace.

The sleeves are box plaited like the rest of the dress and each form two puffs, separated by a band of the material and finished with deep cuffs ornamented with the buttons and straps. The girdle is of black liberty silk.

The next dress is of blue voile or tussah silk. The blouse is made with fine tucks at the top, which open out below; it forms a wide box plait in front, ornamented with four buttons. The skirt carries out the same idea, with a wide box plait in front and fine plaits just at the top.

The blouse is finished around the neck and sleeves with a shaped collar and cuffs of the material, embroidered and edged with cord. The yoke and undersleeves are tucked tulle and lace bordered with little plaitings of the tulle. The girdle is of liberty ribbon, matching the gown, knotted at one side and finished with short fringed ends.

The third dress is of greenish blue cashmere. The blouse is made with an inverted plait in front and is ornamented with braid and passementerie buttons to match. The collar and cuffs are of green and white striped silk; the chemisette and cuffs are of white lace.

The puffed sleeves are encircled with tucks. The skirt is made with an inverted plait in front like the blouse and is trimmed with the braid.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

Quaint is a bag of white suede in a raised pattern of a swan outlined in brilliants.

The English custom of wearing the watch in a gild bracelet has made a hit, both with the women of Paris and America.

Enamel buckles, oblong or oval in shape, in Louis XIV. design, are to be worn with linen suits. They are made in all colors and in silver and gold.

Satin bands are used as a finish of many of the handsome evening scarfs. There is of course no lack of spangles, whether in the shape of sequins or bugles.

Black satin gowns are smart this season, but they are veiled with tunics of embroidered net or chiffon, covered with a jersey-like bodice of heavy embroidery—net and jet combined or silk with jet.

SATIN AND SILK FAN BAGS

Many Charming Designs Shown—Always a Useful and Acceptable Gift Between Girl Friends.

Fan bags are useful and very attractive gifts from a girl to her friends and there are some charming designs for these bags among the recent French importations. They are long and narrow in shape and of course if they are meant to be used for one of the huge feather fans now in fashion they must be very large indeed. The ordinary sized fan, however, does not require a large bag and as this size fan is always more or less in fashion it is for it that the bag is usually made.

Silk, satin and brocade are the favorite materials for the fan bag. Some of the new ones are made of pale colored satins with linings of deeper colors and trimmings of ribbon, flowers and fringe. A faint blue satin fan bag was lined with rose satin and trimmed with tiny satin flowers in pale blue, rose and pink. Around the edge of the bag there was a twist of satin and this was edged with a tiny gold fringe. The top of the bag was drawn up with a gold cord and finished with gold fringe and a little wreath of the satin flowers. A flowered silk bag was covered with gold gauze, a wreath of ribbon flowers being used over these. This bag had fringe of the several colors of which the design of the material was composed.

For young girls a charming design for a fan bag is of soft satin finished silk trimmed with ruches of narrow valenciennes lace and drawn up with a gold cord. The lining may be of white silk or of a color contrasting with the outer covering of the bag.

Feather Borders.

On some of the extra large turbans there has come about a fashion of using a border of small feathers. These are substituted for fur, and are probably an advanced style of the early spring turbans.

IN GREEN VENETIAN CLOTH

Splendid Model for Walking Costume—Novelty Seen in the Cut of Front of Coat.

Empire green venetian cloth is chosen for our model; the skirt has a wide box plait down center of front, stitched to within about eight inches from the hem.

The coat has the lower part of fronts slightly sloped away; wrapped seams are arranged down each side of back and front. Velvet or satin might be used for the collar and cuffs.

Materials required: 6 yards cloth 46 inches wide, ¾ yard satin or velvet, 1 button, 6 yards silk for lining coat.

Chantilly Flounces.

Last autumn it became the top of fashion to have one's gown draped with a chantilly lace shawl. Garrets were ransacked and heirlooms were handed over by grandmothers to young women. The shops themselves did not offer the shawls. Probably the manufacturer did not know there was going to be such a demand for the article.

Now they do know it, and although they have not turned out the real shawls, the shops are offering yards of chantilly lace in all the lovely old patterns at any width needed.

It is to be quite the fashion to have net tunics and sleeves edged with narrow chantilly.

Satin in Favor.

The directoire satins are to be had in all the lovely new colors.

Chantilly lace is once again in fashion.

OPPORTUNITY TO DO GOOD

Combined Efforts on National Tuberculosis Sunday Will Have Excellent Results.

New York city had more arrests for violation of the anti-spitting ordinance in 1909 than any other city in the United States, having had 2,513, with 2,099 convictions, and $1,936.80 collected in fines. Baltimore comes next with 214 arrests and an equal number of convictions. Pittsburg is third in rank, with St. Louis in fourth place. St. Louis, however, would have been in second place, if the sanitary police who enforce the law in that city had been at work in 1909. In 52 cities out of 80 the law was either not enforced at all or very poorly enforced. Of the remaining 28 cities, less than one-half of them contributed more than three-fourths of the arrests for spitting and of the fines collected. On account of the fact that National Tuberculosis Sunday will be observed on April 24, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis is calling the attention of clergymen in all parts of the country to the advisability of bringing before their congregation the necessity for better enforcement of the anti-spitting laws.

The Response Mecnanical.

It is the custom in convents for the nuns to respond to a knock at the door with the words: "In the name of God," the phrase being equivalent in conventional parlance to our worldly "enter" or "come in."

In a convent in one of the western cities not long since the mother superior had a never-to-be-forgotten experience as a result of this custom. Some one in the outer world called the convent telephone number by mistake. The mother superior, roused from her meditations, picked up the receiver and responded, mechanically: "In the name of God."

"Madam!" called an irate masculine voice at the other end of the wire, "there is no occasion for you to swear at me, even if I have made a mistake in the number. Profane language is prohibited over the telephone!"

Care of Horse's Feet.

If the horse already has defective feet keep them carefully trimmed and shod if necessary. The soft hoof should be shod and reshod every six or eight weeks in winter where the ground is frozen and at all times of the year where the roads are rocked or graveled. By keeping the horse with poor feet properly shod it will do good service without loss of time. But it is best to breed for good feet.

Read the platform of Al.H Jester, candidate for state senator from this district It has the true northern Minnesota ring. Mr. Jester is a northern Minnesota farmer that lives near Bemidji, and will look after the farmers intrests, instead of the bankers.

John Eastman seems awful anxious to have ex-senator Hanson again run for senator from this district, but what for no one but Eastman knows. Hanson may be a fine man in his place behind the bank counter, but he is of no more use in the legislature than an old tom cat in church.

Hon. Frank M. Eddy, who for eight years represented this district in congress, as part of the 7. was making a tour over his old stomping ground last week, but what for no one seems to know, but from indications he is not very friendly to Steenersons, return to congress. Mr. Eddy was what was known as the stalwart "stand pat" republicans who would undoubtly have supported speaker Cannon, if he had been in the place of Steenerson. But we are of the opinion, that, that brand of republicanisim is out of date in this neck of the woods.

A certain writer has said that no newspaper which took truth for its standard would make a pecuniary success. The press might return the compliment by remarking that no minister who told the truth about his congregation, alive or dead, would occupy the pulpit much longer than one Sunday afterward. The press and clergy go hand in hand with the whitewash brush, rosy spectacles magnifying little virtus and kindly throwing little deformities into oblivion. The pulpit, the pen and the gravestone are partners in saint making.—Monroeville(O) Spectator.

Chas. E. Boughton of Red Lake Falls was in city the first of the week and stated that now that the injunctions with holes in the bottoms are all played out the Red Lake County courthouse will be built.

Charles Alexander says that he supposes the only way to stop the building of that Notorious Palace is for the insurgents on the East Side to wreck the train carrying the lumber.

Well, what is the use, that will have no effect on Pennington county anyhow and that county will be a reality before the Red Lake county court-house is completed —Thief River Falls Press.

This had ought to make a red hot race. Sickem! Sickum! We will bet on the winner.

Although the Thief River Falls News was the leader for county division, and the Press was rather opposed to it, we now note that the Press, Quists paper, is for it, while the News is silent. But we understand that Eastman is preparing an article, from the Declaration of Independence, to spring on them soon that will make the people sit up and take notice. Every paragraph will begin with: He has and ect., and conclude with: "In every stage of these oppressions we have petitoned for redress in the most humble terms; our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury." And ect. Then the war will be on.

Where Jester Stands.

Re-Apportionment.
Taxation of Sate Lands.
Rurial High Schol Board
Good Roads and Bridges.
Forest Fire Protection

Re-apportionment is the paramount issue at this time, and until a fair, reasonable and honest re-apportionment is gained, the development of northern Minnesota must necessarily be retarded and our progress slow discouraging.

I believe that the chief obstacle to the more rapid development of northern Minnesota has been our numerical weakness in the the state legislature.

No extensive colonazation of unoccupied lands of northern Minneesota can be accomplished until GOOD ROADS AND BRIDGES ARE CONSTRUCTED. I believe it expdient, proper and absolutely necessary that the legislature submit to the people a constitutional amendment providing for a general property tax of one mill for roads and bridges, the fund thereby created to be distributed by the State Highway commission among the counties of the state of Minnesota.

The state lands should, in my opinion, be taxed, in addition to this one mill tax, for the purpose of building roads.

I do not believe that it is good business management for our state to loan all its surpluss money to other states. I think the board of investment should be compelled to dispose of enough of the bonds of other states held by this state to create additional roads, bridge and school funds and loan the same to its own counties for the purpose of further developing good roads, bridges and rural schools.

I believe that the legislature should establish a rural high school board, and secure an appropriation for the establishment of a system of rural schools including a course of agriculture, manual and economic training for the proper education of farm boys and girls in their home schools.

The state legislature should likewise appropriate a liberal and adequate sum annually, for the use of our State board of Immigration in aquainting the homeseeker with our healthful climate and fertil soil; give us a little less surpluss funds and more settlers on our splendid agricultural lands.

With the terriable lesson of the Chisilhom fire and its millions of dollars loss' and indangering of lives, and the distruction annually of vast tracts of standingtimber, farm homes and other property, we should have a better system of fire protection for our forests; a $5,000,000 loss annually caused by forest fires, on account of lack of funds in the hands of the state fire warden to supply the necessary protection against these devastating fires. This policy is I believe poor business management. Appropriate sufficent funds for this department to properly police these forests and to successfully cope with, and eliminate this awful waste.

If elected to the office of senator for the Sixty first district, I pledge myself to support the above mentioned issues, and to devote my time and energies for the best intererests of the district.

Wallack on the Ballet.

The late Lester Wallack once told a story of his still more famous father, James W., that as either an actor or a manager he could never tolerate the ballet, even where it was seemingly necessary according to custom as part of an entertainment or in the opera.

One day there came to him a friend, a man about town, who said, "My dear Wallack, it is very curious that you do not see the beauties of imagination showd by the poses of the ballet." Going on in this strain, the visitor at last wore out the patience of the actor-manager, who replied:

"Look here, it is bad enough to stand these absurdities in an opera: but, though I can comprehend people singing their joys, I am hanged if I can their dancing their griefs."

Was Cleopatra Beautiful?

Archaeologists have discovered on coins portraits of Cleopatra, and critics have confronted these portraits with the poetic descriptions of Cleopatra given by Roman historians and have found that in these descriptions there was at least much fancy. In the portraits we do not see the countenance of a Venus, delicate, gracious, smiling, nor even the fine and sensuous beauty of a Marquise de Pompadour, but a face fleshy and, as the French would say, "bouffe," with a powerful aquiline nose—the face of a woman on in years, ambitious, imperious, which recalls the face of Maria Theresa. It will be said that judgments on beauty are personal; that Antony, who saw her alive, could judge better than we who see her portraits half faded out by the centuries; that the attractive power of a woman emanates not only from corporeal beauty, but also, and yet more, from her spirit. The taste of Cleopatra, her vivacity, her cleverness, her exquisite art in conversation, are acclaimed by all.—Guglielmo Ferrero in Putnam's.

Temples of Siam.

Once a year all the Buddhist temples in Siam are visited by the king or his deputies, bearing the phra kathin (yellow robes), in conformity with an ancient custom by which the priests were made to seek their apparel for the ensuing year. During the lifetime of Buddha monks and priests were sent out to beg for old castoff garments, which were afterward dyed yellow and patched together to form the required robes. This ancient mendicant custom gradually gave place to the present one of making the garments from a new cloth of a bright canary yellow, provided by joint contributions of king, princes, nobles and commoners. When the king goes in the royal throne barge to present the robes in person he does so with great pomp and ceremony. The priestly garments, folded in bundles, are carried to the door of the temple to await the appearance of his majesty and his suit. The king on arriving takes a priestly robe and places it on a decorated altar. The chief priest then lays his hands on the garment and chants an acknowledgment.—Wide World Magazine.

Wanted a Pattern.

A ragged Irishman was charged in a London court a short time ago with tendering a counterfeit shilling in payment for a penny loaf.

Though forlorn in aspect, he was not destitute of that shrewdness which is characteristic of his countrymen. He stated that he was sent for the loaf by a person at a public house close by, who gave him the coin to pay for it, and that on discovering it was not good he bought the coin for three halfpence.

The Magistrate—How came you to buy the shilling after you had discovered it was a bad one?

The prisoner, with much apparent gravity, replied:

"Sure, then, your honor, I bought it so that if I should happen to have a bad one offered to me I might know it by looking at the one I had with me!"

There was a burst of laughter, and the rogue was dismissed with a caution.

A Versatile Garden.

The dwellers in a seaport town of Massachusetts are justly proud of their gardens. It remained for a visitor from a tiny village "way round the Cape" to say the first slightly disparaging word of these gardens. "Isn't this beautiful?" his hostess asked as she paused under a rose arbor and looked back over the stately ranks of larkspur, monk's hood, hollyhocks and many other favorites.

"It's a handsome gardin—of its kind," said the visitor dispassionately, "but it ain't quite up to the mark when you consider our gardins."

"Indeed!" and the lady looked at him, too amazed to be angry. "What sort of gardens have you, please?"

"Well," said the Cape visitor calmly, "what we call a good gardin is one where you can start out with two big baskets and a hoe, step through the flower gardin part, past the vegetables, down to the water; dig your clams fust, pick your sweet corn, lay your posies on top o' that and hand the whole lot over at the kitchen door. There's your shore dinner and trimmin's all from one gardin."—Youth's Companion.

The Wise Woodpecker.

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception. But he does not eat the acorn, for, as a rule, he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorns remain intact, but, becoming saturated, are predisposed to decay, when they are attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food. It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided at a time when, the ground being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.—Cleveland Leader.

Shortly before Dr. W. T. Bull, New York's famous surgeon, was stricken with his fatal illness a young east side physician called at his office and said that he was attending a poor girl over in his neighborhood who would surely die unless operated on. The family was too poor to pay and the doctor did not feel that he was equal to the operation. Would Dr. Bull give him a little advice as to how to proceed?

"Well, I guess we had better go and take a look at the patient," said Dr. Bull, putting on his coat.

They found the patient in an east side tenement, and in less time than it takes to tell it Dr. Bull had the room cleared and began the operation. When he was leaving the father of the girl met him in the hall and forced a quarter into his hand. Dr. Bull thanked him and went off feeling happier than if he had received a $1,000 fee. The girl got well.

The Third Way.

The Midland express was slowing up in Derby station. An American traveler, his finger keeping the place in his Baedeker, addressed the carriage:

"Can you tell me whether this place is 'Derby' or 'Darby?' I have heard both."

"The original and therefore the correct pronunciation," replied a precise looking passenger, "is 'Darby.' I have seen it spelled 'Darbie' on old maps. It is also the form used in common speech."

"You'll find 'Derby' is right," rejoined a passenger, less precise. "It's spelled like that, and the people up in the north of the county say 'Derby.'"

At this point the train stopped, and a porter bawled loudly into the carriage, "Dawby!"—Manchester Guardian

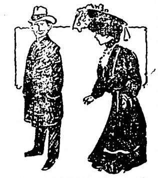
The Important Problem

confronting anyone in need of a laxative is not a question of a single action only, but of permanently beneficial effects, which will follow proper efforts to live in a healthful way, with the assistance of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, whenever it is required, as it cleanses the system gently yet promptly, without irritation and will therefore always have the preference of all who wish the best of family laxatives.

The combination has the approval of physicians because it is known to be truly beneficial, and because it has given satisfaction to the millions of well-informed families who have used it for many years past.

To get its beneficial effects, always buy the genuine manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

VERY CARELESS!



Mrs. Subbubs—Now, look out how you get on and off the cars. You're so awfully careless about the trains, you know.

Subbubs—That's a fact. I lost two yesterday—one going to the city and one coming home.

Her Worry.

Mrs. Hoyle—You seem unhappy.

Mrs. Doyle—I am; I don't believe that if I were to die my husband would wear as deep mourning as he did for his first wife.

Good Law That Should Be Enforced.

Anti-spitting ordinances, laws and regulations in more than five-eighths of the cities and towns of the country are not enforced as they should be, alleges the National Association for the Study of Tuberculosis in a recent report. While most of the larger cities of the United States have such laws on their books, in the great majority of cases they are ignored or overlooked. The report covers in detail the enforcement of the anti-spitting ordinances in 80 of the largest cities in the country. During the year 1909 in these 80 cities, 3,421 arrests were made for violation of the laws regarding spitting in public places. Over 2,900 convictions were secured and $4,100.87 was collected in fines.

Something Stronger Than Wind.

Senator Depew, apropos of March winds, said, at a dinner in Washington:

"An old-fashioned fellow, one year when Easter came in March, paid too many Easter calls and drank too many cups of eggnogg, and, alas, was quite overcome.

"As the old-fashioned fellow lurched, in the late afternoon, toward home, a little girl watched him from her window, curiously.

"'Oh, mamma,' she said, 'come and look at Mr. Stuyvesant. Isn't the wind blowing him about!'"

Forgotten.

"You know that ten dollars you lent me—"

"Not now. Introduce me."—Cleveland Leader.

MISCHIEF MAKER
A Surprise in Brooklyn.

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. A Brooklyn man says:

"When baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was, at first, attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but, in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day after he had cried bitterly for an hour, I suggested that my wife try him on Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in a saucer with a little sugar and warm milk. This baby ate so ravenously that she fixed a second which he likewise finished.

"It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. Today the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen months old baby is expected to be.

"We have put before him other foods, but he will have none of them, evidently preferring to stick to that which did him so much good—his old friend Grape-Nuts.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household."

Grape-Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's grains, it is equally effective as a body and brain builder for grown-ups.

WHAT HAPPENS TO UNWELCOME BABIES

By JOSEPH H. ADAMS

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

THE RIVER'S ALTERNATIVE

IN a niche above a doorway in a great house in New York city a marble statue of a woman holds a little child close to her breast. Beneath her, through a swinging door that has not been locked in 40 years, women pass in to the Foundling hospital with their babies in their arms and come out with their arms empty. A single white cradle in the entry of a bare reception room receives and rescues nearly 2,000 babies a year. Two thousand men and women are the number of a village community. Here in the home of deserted children are the things which are eternal—the tears, the laughter and the joys.

"It is the little children we must save," one of the matrons said. "We keep them from privation, from cruelty, even from death—the little babies nobody wants. We are just trying to give them their chance. We hope to preserve the mothers from greater sin, from the life of the streets, from the doors of prison, but it is the babies that count. We must save our babies."

The law of this country will not permit the giving or selling of little children, but it cannot protect them from desertion. The foundling hospitals in our big cities are the state's efforts to play the part of universal motherhood, to care for the children who are thrown on her mercy and who will help make her future.

The room where the mothers relinquish their babies is called the saddest place in New York. There is nothing in the receiving room but the little cradle, and no one in sight. A matron is always in waiting near by. She never forces a mother to confession, but, if possible, persuades her to tell why she wishes to desert her child, and perhaps influences her not to give it up, but to begin life over again. A mother must understand that the choice is with her—the matron may give the mother 10 or 15 minutes in which to decide—but the choice is final. If the mother wishes it, and it can be arranged, she is often taken into the hospital with her baby and allowed to nurse it, by having charge of another of the tiny children and helping with one older child. There are now 300 mother nurses working in the New York home, and there have been as many as five or six hundred at other times. The mother who comes into the hospital to work can often prove her fitness to have her baby back again. But once she puts it down in the rescue cradle and goes out the ever open door the baby belongs to her no longer; she may never see or hear of it again. The child belongs to the state. No prayer nor entreaty, no pleading of circumstance, will afterward avail. The child has entered a world that shall never know its origin. Somewhere a future waits for it, but the baby is to have no knowledge of its beginning outside its adoption in the Foundling home.

A bath and clean clothes are the first signs of the baby's adoption in the Foundling home. A doctor next inspects the little person to see that it shall not carry a contagion to any of the thousands of small brothers and sisters who are waiting for it outside the walls of the reception ward. Two or three weeks the baby may be detained in the reception quarters—the smaller the baby the less danger of contagious diseases—or as many days. Then it becomes either an indoor or an outdoor baby.

There are 600 indoor babies being cared for inside the New York City Foundling home. It is necessary to board on the outside 1,200 more. Seven thousand four hundred and twenty-four little foundlings have been looked after in the past two years, and there are relatively as many in Boston, in Chicago, in Philadelphia—in every large city in America.

In Europe there are an even greater number of foundling babies. The European states take charge of the deserted waifs, but the mother is only permitted to bring her child to an entrance way, ring a bell and give it into the arms of the attendant who opens the door—and go away without a word.

In the homes of love, of wealth and happiness there are no sounder, sweeter babies than the deserted children of the foundling homes. The babies are so far untroubled by their situation in life and have not the institution look of older children. What is the institution look? It translates itself; the expression of a cramped individuality, of a longing for a more personal expression; the look of too much routine, of drilling, of the law without the spirit.

But the babies know of no difference between themselves and other children, and many times before they wake to the thought a home has been found for them. Nearly 500 babies a year from the New York Foundling home are adopted by private families in all parts of the country. They prove in their lives that it does not matter in this world how we are born, "it is just the way we're eddicated."

"Nobody but a baby lover would adopt one of our babies; older children may be taken by families and made into drudges, but who would adopt a tiny child except for love?" one of the sisters at the hospital said.

There is a wonderfully wide choice in babies, for they are taken into the home without regard to nationality, to creed or color; so there are pink and white blond babies, brown-haired, black-eyed babies, girls with curls and boys with round, close-cropped heads.

The children wear no kind of uniform. The little girls have as big bows of red and blue and pink ribbon on their hair as the most fashionable little person who lives round the corner on Fifth avenue.

The clothes of several thousand children are an important consideration. Think of what a single baby's trousseau means at home. Fortunately, home babies outgrow their clothes and pass them on to other babies. There are all sizes to be fitted at the Foundling home. In the last two years New York's outdoor babies have received 100,000 little garments and inside the poor mothers and babies have been equally well supplied.

A GROUP FROM WHICH A SON OR DAUGHTER MAY BE SELECTED

How many buttons do you suppose need to be sewed on? Here is a charity no one can dispute—sewing for the babies. Sisters and nurses can only look after their health and happiness.

Deserted babies can count on friends, if other things in life have failed them. Hundreds of rich society women in New York, who have seamstresses to sew for their own children, work for the Foundling babies. Sewing classes meet in private homes, their sole purpose devoted to the wants of the hospital's children. Twelve hundred little garments were the gift of a single class. The babies have every-day clothes, and dress-up clothes when visitors come, like the rest of the world. The churches also have sewing circles devoted to the trousseaus of the deserted babies. Money for materials for their clothes comes from women who find this the simplest way of helping with such extensive wardrobes. Occasionally a shop will send something to help clothe a baby.

New York gives a quarter of a million dollars a year to look after her foundling babies, and forty thousand more is contributed. The Foundling hospital extends from one end of a long block to the other, and besides its nursery buildings has a quarantine hospital and a hospital for operations and for the treatment of ordinary diseases. The Foundling hospital must not only care for the waifs deserted at its doors, but also for the babies sent by the department of charities, the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children and the courts.

There are three groups of babies, from the few weeks old to those three or four years, and they have their separate quarters; the runabouts are the children from 18 months to two years old; and the grown-up babies, as old as three or four, are the kindergarten children. The reception room is the schoolroom—a long room full of tiny desks and tables, the walls lined with pictures and corners piled with splendid toys. In the middle of the room is a parrot in a gold cage who talks and sings like the children.

The foundling babies who are brought up inside the institution know nothing of the perils and joys of the street. In connection with each of the nurseries there is a roof garden, where the children take their air and exercise. The Foundling baby has a scientific bringing up that may give it a better chance for health than the home baby reared in affectionate ignorance. Doctors, nurses and matrons study its life from hour to hour. The most vital principle in modern thought is the effort that is being made in every direction to start the child on the right way.

With all its wealth of babies to care for, the Foundling hospital does more for the baby's health than the average mother. As each child is received at the hospital its weight is registered, together with the name and number of the baby, on a weight chart. The weekly weighing of all babies is an established feature of the hospital care. Physicians regard the weighing of babies as of utmost importance in the proper care of a baby's health. The sick baby is judged by its loss of weight; the well baby by its increase. Sick babies are weighed oftener—sometimes every second day. Notes of the baby's illness are kept on the back of its weight card.

The Infants Science Academy, which is now discussed in New York city as a possible way to save the babies from the ignorance of mothers, wishes to establish the same scientific method for the care of all little children that is applied in the Foundling home. Each mother is to be taught to keep a chart of her baby's condition, not in any special class of society—rich and poor alike—and this chart is to be submitted weekly to a baby's academy to be inspected by boards of baby specialists.

Foundling babies are always in charge of specialists. Important books on children's diseases have come from the study of the unwelcome babies. Not only do the students and physicians on the staff of the hospital work with the children, but nearly all the city's prominent doctors have served the hospital as consulting or attending physicians. In special cases physicians come from the outside to study the mysterious causes, the mysterious expressions of baby diseases, which are borne in silence, or expressed only in inarticulate sounds.

The outdoor baby is the surplus baby. Not always because the Foundling home has no room for it, but because the baby often needs what the hospital cannot give.

"Little babies live on love. I don't mean this as a sentiment; I mean it as a fact; a tiny baby lives on the love that cuddles it, that warms and feeds it. To take it into the hospital without a mother means it may die. If an outside nurse is found to care for it, the baby often grows healthy, strong and happy in her charge."

Women who have lost their own babies, or respectable women who desire to earn a small living by nursing, are the foster mothers of the foundling babies who are brought up outside the hospital. They must be able to show a clear record of health and character and obey the rules of the hospital for the care of the child. Once a month the outside nurse comes to the hospital with the child in her charge to be examined by a physician, but in case of sudden illness she must make an immediate report.

One hundred and forty thousand dollars a year goes toward paying for these outside nurses—at a rate of $10 apiece—nearly one-half of the foundling babies' income. When the child is three or four it must be returned to the hospital; one of the rules of the institution is that no child may be adopted by the woman who acted as its nurse.

"Italian women make the most successful mothers for the delicate babies," one of the head matrons explained. "There is something in their warm-hearted temperaments, in their natural sense of motherhood, that helps the frail baby to thrive."

Colored children are taken care of by colored women until they reach the required age, when the girls go to a home in Baltimore and the boys to Nebraska, where they are educated to trades.

Sixty-six babies boarded a car for New Orleans a few weeks ago and started gaily off on a voyage of discovery. They were on their way to find their mammas and papas. The babies are taught through the years when they are kept in the foundling home that somewhere waiting for them in the world outside are mothers and fathers, and some day they are to go to find them.

Many years ago, on a cold winter night, a physician sent to the New York Foundling hopital for the youngest baby who was healthy and promising. He only wanted to borrow the baby for a few weeks. A patient had given birth to a child and the baby had died. The mother was desperately ill, and the news of the death of her baby would possibly cause her death.

A beautiful baby boy two weeks old had that day been left at the Foundling home. The baby was wrapped in blankets and taken away to one of the wealthiest homes in New York. For a month or more the sick mother nursed this baby, thinking him her own. When she was well enough the truth was told her, but the borrowed baby was never returned. In the weeks of her suffering, the touch of its little lips and the clasp of its hands had made it in truth her baby.

This year the boy graduated with honor from an eastern college as the oldest son of a prominent man; a large sum of money for the foundling babies came as a gift from an "unknown friend."

Two agents, whose work it is to find mothers and fathers for the waiting babies, are a part of the regular staff of the Foundling home. They work through other agents all over the country, through churches and missions and children's aid societies; the appeal is universal. Do you want a baby? Here is a lost baby looking for a mother and father. You may have any kind you desire. Descriptions and requirements may be written to the staff at the hospital, and you may have just the baby you are looking for.

You may require the color of hair, eyes, or even specify the disposition. Usually the asylum has more than it can fill. Girls are asked for in about twice the ratio of boys. Blue-eyed girls are the greatest in demand, and a "sweet" disposition is almost always one of the specifications.

One woman wrote to the asylum from a town within easy travel of New York. "We are plain people," she began. "The height of our ambition has been to have a house of our own. Now we have it, all furnished as we have wished. Yet we are not content. Our home is so perfectly orderly that we have decided that we need someone to make it sweetly disorderly."

Four or five times a year, 40 or 50 babies start off in a little band in quest of homes. The babies are sent to any part of the country.

Nurses and attendants travel with the babies, who are distributed to agents who wait to place them in homes along the way. But the child is not to lose its connection with the Foundling home. Until the children are grown they are still looked after, and their care and future guarded by the supervision of the agents who make yearly visits to their homes and the matrons who keep in constant communication with them through letters.

Many times the adopted baby comes to mean to a family all that their own baby could have meant. Thousands of letters come back to the matron from the foster mothers and fathers of the babies.

"After God, dear sister," an adopted mother writes, "it is to you I owe my darling child, so I will ask him to bless you forever."

"Dear sister, I feel it my duty to let you hear from us, in regard to our little boy and girl. My husband and I often wonder can it be possible that they are not our own children, when we see their sweet, loving faces. If God will spare us to raise them, we feel confident that they will be a credit to all and a comfort and pride to us in years to come."

Children write home to the sisters of their happiness and growing outlook on life. In most cases the child is made to understand its connection with the Foundling home.

A little girl in the busy days of her school life wants to tell of her success. "As it is so long since I heard from you, I thought I would write and tell you that I am well, and that I have just completed my first year at school. I have the highest average in my class, it being 93 per cent. for the whole year. As I was the only girl in the high school perfect in attendance I received a pretty gold medal as a reward."

Happy endings come of many stories with tragic beginnings. The unwelcome baby finds a welcome somewhere, makes a place for itself somehow, in a world that failed it at the start.

The Possession of Fitzie Three

By JANE OSBORN

Ever since the day when, as a freshman, Davis Fitzgerald had arrived on the college campus with Robert Fitzgerald, his younger brother and classmate, and an altogether engaging bull terrier following in his wake, he had been known as Fitzie One. His brother, who had amazingly developed as far as studies and athletics went, was Fitzie Two; and the dog was Fitzie Three.

Fitzie One liked the girls, and because of his liberal and sympathetic taste in the matter, he was kept in a constant state of indecision. At first he had been moved to freshman raptures over the 30-year-old daughter of his Greek professor. Then it was the sophisticated library stenographer, and then—but no one, save Fitzie One, himself, could recount the full number of his charmers.

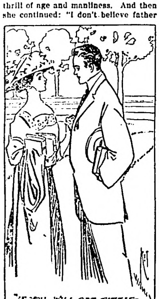
But everyone knew about Georgie Marston. Fitzie One had come back to college as a senior with a free and ready heart, and he had speedily, and with even more enthusiasm than usual, centered his thoughts upon the daughter of the new vicar of the college chapel, the bewitching Georgie.

"Do you know, Miss Marston," he told her one Sunday afternoon as they were walking through a woodland pathway, with the faithful Fitzie Three, "do you know, Georgie, it isn't just because you're pretty? It's something deeper, more intangible than that."

Georgie, because of her inexperience, blushed and felt uncomfortable. She tried to think of some suitable way to change the subject, when her eye caught sight of the dutiful Fitzie Three plodding on, a few feet ahead. "Isn't he a perfect dear of a dog? I am just crazy about bulldogs!"

"Oh, are you?" exclaimed Fitzie One, whose enthusiasm at this point was mounting to alarming heights. "You can have him if you like!"

"Oh, Mr. Fitzgerald!" she exclaimed, in a way that made Fitzie One feel a thrill of age and manliness. And then she continued: "I don't believe father would let me keep a dog, but perhaps I could borrow him sometimes?"



"IF YOU WILL GET FITZIE THREE, I'LL SAY 'YES' NOW" GEORGIE SAID GRAVELY

The idea met with Fitzie One's entire approval.

"Oh, I'm so glad to have him now," she went on. "He'll make such a nice mascot for our Browning society." Then, as Fitzie One looked interested, she explained: "It's a club that some of us girls have just got up. We suggested all sorts of things—cards, and embroidery, and things like that—and finally we agreed on Browning. We read together once a week, and as the meetings are to be at my house, they said I could decide upon the mascot. If you don't mind I'll make it your dog."

"Your dog," Fitzie One generously corrected.

"Yes, my dog," said Georgie, "and of course I won't tell anyone where I got him. Oh, it will be perfectly lovely," she cried as she knelt before her newly-acquired pet, and looked into his trustful dog eyes.

So it was that the Browning society acquired, for its official mascot, Georgie Marston's new dog. But as the winter came on, and the excitement of college festivities detracted from the milder amusement of reading poetry, Fitzie Three's visits at the vicarage became less frequent. Finally the forgotten mascot, who shared his master's fondness for girls, quite gave up hope of ever being stroked by a fairer hand, or coaxed and teased by a gentler voice, than his master's.

In this state of resignation, he found himself one late winter afternoon walking on the frozen country road with his master and some one with a gentler voice.

"Fascinating dog of your's," he heard and then as his master and the girl who had spoken—a girl with a rippling laugh, and not at all like anyone he had ever even thought of before—got down before him, he heard his master say: "If you really think so, Cynthia, you can have him. Cynthia, dear, I would do anything in the world for you."

And then Fitzie Three, who was carried away at the idea of being admired, jumped up and gave his new mistress a dog kiss on the end of her fair nose.

That was how Fitzie Three happened once more to be in the possession of a girl. Only this time he never went to the dormitory at all, but had to stay at Cynthia's all the time, and, excepting when his former master came to see her, he was forced to stay in the kennels with several other dogs. On the whole, Fitzie would much have preferred being back in the dormitory.

In the meantime, with the coming of early spring, college festivities abated, and the members of the Browning society sought to reunite.

"Be sure to have our mascot," said the president of the society to Georgie.

Georgie had told Fitzie Two—for it was Fitzie Two, instead of Fitzie One, who now walked through the woodland pathways with the bewitching Georgie. "You've got to get hold of Fitzie Three somehow, because the meeting is to-morrow, and if the girls don't find him they'll wonder, and, oh! it will be just dreadful!"

"But, Georgie," Fitzie had explained, "I asked Fitzie One about it and he said he simply couldn't get him. You know he gave the beast to Cynthia Standish, and he's on pins and needles about asking for him. He's really hit this time and he wouldn't spoil his chances for anything."

"Of course," agreed Georgie, "and I'm not a bit cross, only it puts me in such a fix. Really, I don't see how Fitzie ever had the courage to make advances to Miss Standish. She's so dreadfully rich and she never mixes up with the college crowd at all."

"That's just the trouble. If she was one of the girls, she'd understand, but he hates to explain to Cynthia." Fitzie Two sighed from the depth of experience. "But I know how he feels, Georgie. When a fellow is really, really in love he's on pins and needles about everything. Say, Georgie," he added, suddenly bringing up a subject which only the day before he had promised to drop forever, "I was thinking last night that if you'd promise to hold off and not marry anyone for two or three years, and give me a chance to do something worth while, that you might feel differently then. You said you weren't sure I loved you enough. But if I should do something great to prove it—something that no one had ever done before, and you knew I did it just for you—wouldn't that convince you?"

"If you will get Fitzie Three, I'll say 'yes' now," Georgie said, gravely.

Fitzie Two's vision of glorious worldly accomplishment faded into the humble dickering over a dog. "It's a go, Georgie! I'll manage it somehow," he said, and then he hurried the girl back to the vicarage, and with a friendly: "See you later, Georgie!" he went out upon his knightly errand.

It was unnecessary, putting him to the test, for in spite of her professed doubts, Georgie was sure, in her heart, of the depth and single-mindedness of Fitzie Two's devotion; and as the afternoon passed she began to doubt her own wisdom in forcing him to undertake such a task.

Her misgivings were, for the moment, put aside, however, when at eight o'clock Mr. Fitzgerald and Miss Standish were announced by the vicarage housemaid. Georgie hurried into the little drawing room, and beheld, not only Fitzie One and the dazzling Cynthia, but the much-coveted mascot of the Browning society.

Fitzie One had brought Miss Standish—they were engaged but only secretly, and Georgie promised not to tell—because Miss Standish wanted to apologize for keeping the dog. "I have so many at home," she explained, "that I really shan't miss this one at all. And Davis was so foolish not to tell me sooner."

"And then you told Miss Standish, because Fitzie Two asked you?" queried Georgie.

"Oh, yes, to be sure," said Fitzie One. "He's been after me for two days about it. He's downright foolish."

Georgie smiled, blushed and embraced the bewildered dog. "Oh, I knew he would," she said.

A heavy step on the vicarage veranda and a plaintive howl, made Fitzie Three look up with sudden expectation. Then the front door swung open and Fitzie Two was seen in the hall.

"Hello, Georgie," he called. "I've got the beast. Hauled him in on a rope. He's on the porch."

Georgie, without excusing herself, rushed out of the drawing room.

"I had to steal him from the kennel after dark," Fitzie Two went on. "And honestly, I don't know what those Standishes have done to him. You wouldn't know him for the same animal. I tied him to a rope and he's been yelping all the way in."

"Oh, my poor, dear Buster!" cried Miss Standish, who had overheard. "He's stolen Buster by mistake."

The explanation was brief and hilarious, and after enthusiastic pledges of friendship on the part of the two girls, Fitzie One and Cynthia and the abused Buster started for home.

Then, when the little vicarage door was closed Fitzie Two and Fitzie Three were happy, for Georgie Marston gave her heart to one and a lump of sugar to the other.

POULTRY NOTES.

Watch the flock carefully.

Feed the fowls regularly.

Perfect cleanliness from now on will cut short the louse crop of June.

If you stamp a date on your eggs, sell them before the date gets old.

Fried chicken and fresh eggs are the rewards for care in poultry raising.

Chicken stew and roasted chicken are some of the delicacies in store for poultry raisers.

Feed the little chicks ground grain and skimmed milk. Do not let the hen lead them into wet grass.

When the brooder chicks seem very thirsty, wild for water, let them drink and feed very lightly while so feverish.

Fowls need green food at this season of the year. Better results will be obtained if you allow them to graze a portion of the day.

Many a setting of eggs has been spoiled by making the nest on the floor where the wind can come up through the cracks under the old mother hen.

April is a good month to hatch goose eggs. It is also an excellent time for getting out ducklings. Stock hatched now will be best for next year's breeding.

Now is the time to begin if you wish to have turkeys for Thanksgiving and Christmas. Few fowls are more profitable than turkeys when properly managed.

Does that old hen lay? Try this if she does not: Feed her all the chopped clover she will eat, with an ounce of lean meat every day. If there is any lay in her that will bring it out.

FEEDER FOR CHICKS USEFUL

Constructed of Poultry Fencing. Will Accommodate 150 Birds—Little Ones Have Chance.

One of the handiest devices that can be had on a farm is a chicken feeder. To make it take a piece of poultry fencing (not netting) about 20 feet long and fasten the ends together, forming a small park. This will accommodate 150 chicks. The wires of this fencing are just the right width apart to let the little chicks through and keep the old hens out. This gives the chicks a chance to pick at the feed a long time safe from the interference of the old hens.

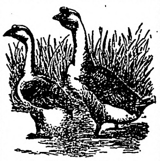
GEESE ARE VERY PROFITABLE

Gray African Variety Grow Heaviest in Shortest Space of Time—Are Nicely Flavored.

Gray African geese are very profitable to keep. They grow the heaviest in the shortest space of time and are ready for market in ten weeks, weighing at that age between eight and ten pounds. For table purposes they are esteemed very highly, their flesh being fine and nicely flavored.



Pair of Gray African Geese.

Demand for Good Breeds.

There is a strong demand at good prices for good breeding stock and eggs of pure bred strains of poultry. All you need to do is to get some good breed and grow enough of them to make it worth while and the rest is easy. Only let people know that you have them by advertising a little and there will be no trouble in disposing of all you can raise. It is the least trouble and the safest to keep only one breed. There is too much chance of mixing if more than one breed is kept.

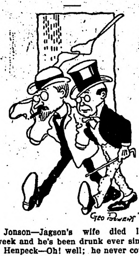
Money in Little Chicks.

There is a growing demand for pure bred young chicks and baby chicks just hatched. It has been found that baby chicks can be shipped by express for long distances with perfect safety. If you are in a position to hatch some of the pure-breds let people know that you have them. It is a good business when once learned.

Food for Confined Fowls.

A moment's study of the habits of fowls should show anyone that their diet when running loose is largely composed of flesh in the form of bugs and worms. Therefore when fowls are confined and not able to choose their feed they should be supplied with their natural rations in the form of chopped meat and bone meals.

HIS IDEA.



Jonson—Jagson's wife died last week and he's been drunk ever since.

Henpeck—Oh! well; he never could stand prosperity.

HIS HANDS CRACKED OPEN

"I am a man seventy years old. My hands were very sore and cracked open on the insides for over a year with large sores. They would crack open and bleed, itch, burn and ache so that I could not sleep and could do but little work. They were so bad that I could not dress myself in the morning. They would bleed and the blood dropped on the floor. I called on two doctors, but they did me no good. I could get nothing to do any good till I got the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. About a year ago my daughter got a cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and in one week from the time I began to use them my hands were all healed up and they have not been a mite sore since. I would not be without the Cuticura Remedies.

"They also cured a bad sore on the hand of one of my neighbor's children, and they think very highly of the Cuticura Remedies. John W. Hasty, So. Effingham, N. H., Mar. 5 and Apr. 11, '09."

Treatment for Lump Jaw.

Lump jaw is due to a fungus which is usually taken into the animal's system in feed consumed. Lump jaw is liable to affect the glands of the throat or the bones of the head, writes Dr. David Roberts in American Cultivator. It is not advisable to keep an animal thus afflicted lingering in a herd. On the other hand it is advisable to either treat such an animal or kill it, as such animals invite diseases into the herd, owing to the fact that they are so reduced in vitality that they have no resisting power. A remarkably large per cent. of such cases can be successfully treated if taken in time by opening up the enlargement and washing it out with a strong antiseptic solution, like five of carbolic acid in water, and putting the animals on a tonic. In this way the afflicted animal is not only saved, but the entire herd is protected against disease.

Because a home is in the country—because it is on a farm—is only an added reason why it should be more up-to-date and attractive, for those who are fortunate enough to live in the country really spend more time in their homes than do those who live in cities.

And it is also true that farm homes and farm life is daily becoming more and more attractive. The inside of our house is our home, so why not make it nice and attractive, homely and cheerful, up-to-date and modern.

You wouldn't think of burning tallow candles, yet why use wall paper?

In order to educate a few refined people in every community to the artistic beauty of soft velvety alabastined walls of solid color, a free offer of beautiful wall stencils of classic design is made to every reader of this paper.

It is also possible to secure without any expense color suggestions for your home telling you the most suitable colors, to use, the best arrangement, curtains and over curtains, etc.—in fact the services of a decorative architect are at your disposal without charge to you.

In cities there are many and most excellent designers of interior decoration, but it takes money and time to carry out their ideas. This same service is at the disposal of every reader if he asks for it, and better than all, it tells you how you can either do the work yourself or direct some one else. It gives you exact shades and colors, and the stencils to do the work without charge.

Overhenpecked.

Former Governor Pennypacker, discussing at a dinner in Philadelphia the divorce evil, said with his humorous smile:

"Perhaps there would be less divorce if human nature were more perfect. Some women, you know, henpeck their husbands. There is, for example, a Bucks county farmer who said the other day that he would certainly apply for a divorce only his wife wouldn't let him."

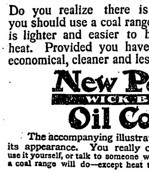
AN UP-TO-DATE STOVE

Do you realize there is no longer any reason why you should use a coal range? Oil is cheaper than coal; it is lighter and easier to handle, and gives an intense heat. Provided you have the right stove, oil is more economical, cleaner and less trouble. Have you seen the

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

The accompanying illustration gives you only a rough idea of its appearance. You really can't appreciate it until you either use it yourself, or talk to someone who has used it. It does everything that a coal range will do—except heat the room. The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove will do anything, from heating a kettle of water to cooking a course dinner, but it won't heat a room. It doesn't "smell," it doesn't smoke. It can't get out of order. Light it and it is ready. Turn it down and it is out. Only a woman who knows the trouble of carrying coal and cooking in a hot kitchen can appreciate what it means to have a clean, perfect stove that will cook anything, boil, bake or roast, and yet won't heat the kitchen. How is it done? The flame is controlled in turquoise-blue enamel chimneys, and directed against the bottom of pot, pan, kettle or oven, and only there. The flame operates exactly where it is needed—and nowhere else. With this stove your kitchen is cool.

The nickel finish with the bright blue of the chimneys makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.



Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The Man Who Quit

by SLOANE GORDON

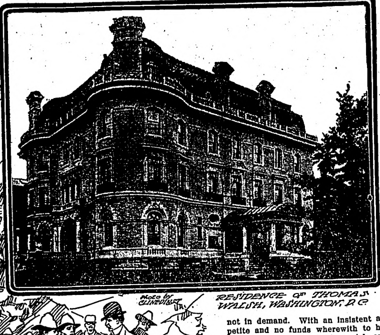
IN APPEARANCE THOMAS WALSH IS AN IMPRESSIVE MAN.



RESIDENCE OF THOMAS WALSH, WASHINGTON, D.C.

JUST suppose now that you should become suddenly seized and possessed of an inspiration—a heavenly hunch, let us call it—and that—following the directions of the "unseen voice," you should go out into the back lot, grab a spade, thrust it into the placid bosom of Mother Earth and turn up a barrel of gold—a million dollars or so—what would you do? Would you begin extensive financial operations? Would you grope for additional inspiration? Would you invest in more spades, more back lots and go on digging? Or would you be content with your million or so and buy a house and a yacht and some silk pajamas and shirts with monograms embroidered on the sleeves? In short, would you keep on money grubbing and trying to get more gold or would you quit?

The overwhelming chances are that you will say you would quit. The deluging probabilities are that, when the time came you would try to get just "one million more." The end of the rainbow which marks the nesting place of the fabled pot of gold is always in sight but never quite in reach. Slightly editing and revising the biblical dictum! "To him who hath" is given an insatiable appetite for more.

Glancing hurriedly up and down the list of Americans of millions, it is difficult to pick out a bare fraction of them who have found that enough was sufficient. Uncle Russell Sage never lost his interest in interest. Aunt Hetty Green still loves to stroke the fur of a coupon and hear it purr. William Waldorf Astor was born on a couch upholstered with dainty bonds and beautifully tinted greenbacks, and as soon as he was able to toddle he went into the upholstering business on his own account and has been at it ever since, moving to England and mixing up with expensive royalty in the meanwhile, but always keeping his eye on the main chance.

F. Augustus Heinze, after getting hold of more money than he knew what to do with out in Montana, came to New York and tried to plant his dollars in productive soil. The cutworms got it.

J. Pierpont Morgan, one of the money overlords, generalissimo of finance, is so busy getting more that he hasn't time to talk to those whose vocabulary is limited to less than seven figures.

Other instances might be cited in proof of the contention that, generally, the man with millions doesn't quit.

But, as sustaining the rule, there are exceptions, and this is the story of one man who quit, Thomas F. Walsh.

He had all kinds of money—white brown, green and yellow, but he didn't become so enamored of it that he couldn't let go. Neither was he so impressed with its desirability that he wanted more. He would rather talk about a one-eyed prospector that he knew back in the days of Leadville's colicky babyhood than he would about any business scheme that human ingenuity could devise. He didn't care to talk about making money. Those who know him best assert that he would rather give it away than increase that which he has. One third of July a few years ago Mr. Walsh walked down to the Boston & Maine railroad station at Manchester-by-the-Sea and did some things that left the eyes of the railroad employes hanging out like the old fashioned knockers on the front doors of New England. Mr. Walsh arrived quietly at the station. He manifested no symptoms of give-upativeness and the employes were unprepared. Digging down into an ample pocket he dragged forth a roll of tens and twenties—real money—and began to skin off the top layers. He handed a bill to each of the men.

To-morrow is the fourth of July and I want you boys to have a good time," was his explanation. For a few minutes the Manchester station crew was utterly useless—pitifully incompetent. It couldn't get its breath.

"Say," whispered a watchman who happened to be of the elect on that auspicious occasion, "that roll of yellows that he pulled out was big enough to stall a freight."

Walsh heard about that remark and was so tickled over it that he got chummy with the watchman and used to walk down and talk with him every day or two.

This and other instances of the generosity of Mr. Walsh should not, however, have a tendency to inject hope into the systems of those who dog the footsteps of the rich and seek loans and contributions. One sure way not to get money from Walsh is to ask him for it. He has an almost holy horror of the grafter and the person who writes hard luck tales to those who are classed among the ultra wealthy.

Once upon a time, when he was Colorado's commissioner at the Paris exposition, Mr. Walsh, in his side excursions, discovered a king. This particular monarch was Leopold, the gay old party with the severe but ample whiskers who lately ruled over Belgium.

"Come over and have a snack at my camp," remarked Mr. Walsh. At all events that was the substance of what he said.

"I'll try anything—once," was the attitude of the monarch with the lilacs. Now it happened that Mr. Leopold, Rex, had been to a number of very fussy banquets. He had been entertained so numerously that terrapin didn't thrill him any more. He knew all about the various utensils that enter into the operation of conveying food from the plate to the mouth. Never had he been known to reach the ice cream with nothing left but a little harpoon, like George Ade's banqueter. He didn't tuck his napkin and responded readily to the rule prohibiting the use of a knife in the hoisting of peas or pie. All of this is set forth as proof that Mr. Leopold was no gastronomic novice. But after he had partaken of Mr. Walsh's hospitality he had to tack to get to his cab. He was so happy and so satisfied that he didn't care whether he kept on kinging or not. In a burst of enthusiasm he said he was coming over to America to follow up the Walsh brand of banquet. The morning following the banquet it is understood that Mr. Leopold went back to Laeken, in Belgium, where he lived when he wasn't taking in the Parisian White Way, and fired his chef.

But it must be remembered that this little lunch that Mr. Walsh arranged for his royal guest was quite out of the ordinary. He sent out for the most famous of French banquet architects.

"There's a hungry king coming next Thursday week," he told them, "and I want you to feed him well. Go as far as you like." Which they did. The banquet was given at the Hotel Ritz. They had some very excellent fiddlers and other musicians at the hostelry, who were willing to furnish any sort of music for the occasion. But not for Mr. Walsh. In entertaining a kingly personage he decided to observe the harmonies. Maybe plebeian music wouldn't aid royal digestion! Nothing but regular monarchical melody would go well with the food. The Imperial Russian band, which plays for the czar and helps him forget his troubles, was in Paris at the time. Several people with money had sought to engage that band for private affairs, but the manager announced that his band could not be engaged—it was none of your country orchestras.

"I'll just stroll over and hire them," suggested Mr. Walsh.

Those who heard of his expressed intention laughed derisively. But Mr. Thomas F. Walsh did hire them and Mr. Leopold, Rex, had mazurkas with his soup and Paderewski with the baked beans.

There were others in addition to the king at that banquet, but they didn't cut much of a figure. The Belgian ruler was the big attraction in the main tent. It isn't everyone who can entertain a king and it isn't one in a million that could entertain one as Thomas F. Walsh did. That banquet cost, it is said, about $75,000, which is even more expensive than dining at some New York hotels. All Paris talked of the Walsh entertainment, and it is still talked about over there. It set the high-water mark for banquets. Harry Thaw had given one that was the limit theretofore, but the Walsh affair made the Thaw dinner look like a cold lunch on washday. Even the square meal prepared by Luculius for his guests, several seasons further back, was merely a snack compared to it. But it wasn't the only dinner given by Mr. Walsh that startled Paris. He gave a score of them while he was commissioner to the exposition, and each of the kingless ones cost $40,000. Dukes and duchesses and princes and counts and marquises—a lively assortment of noble appetites—attended and went away feeling as though they couldn't eat another thing for a week. Mr. Walsh had fun. He liked to see them enjoy themselves.

"Never turn a hungry duke from your door," appeared to be his motto, and as a result European nobles put signs on the front fence to signal others of their kind that this was a bully place to get a handsome hand-out.

It was one of Walsh's philanthropies.

Also it was one of his ways of enjoying the money that he accumulated in Colorado mines. He believed that money was made to spend and that's why he liked to spend it.

But there is more to the tale of the entertainments in Paris. Incidentally King Leopold became so impressed with the American man of millions that he consulted him about some of his (the king's) gold mining properties in Africa, with the result that Mr. Walsh went into partnership with the king. Mr. Walsh explained that he didn't go into the venture with Leopold for the profit that was in it, but just to please his friend of the crown and scepter. But greater than the triumph of entertaining the king—greater than the prestige of entering into a partnership with him—was the social success that followed the European recognition. Mr. Walsh has a most charming and accomplished wife. She was Miss Carrie Reed when he married her in Colorado. She had gone from her Wisconsin home to the Rockies for her health, and when she met the sturdy proprietor of the leading hotel of Leadville an attachment developed that resulted in a happy marriage. Mr. Walsh was ambitious that his wife should enjoy social distinction. After he had made his millions he came east and tried to rub elbows with many of those who had inherited theirs. Promptly the social folk dusted their clothes where the elbows touched. The Walshes, in their narrow eyes, were parvenues—new rich—n. g.

"Why, he was only a laborer—an immigrant laborer at that," remarked society, referring to Mr. W.

"I'll just try a flank movement," mused Mr. Walsh. So he secured the commissionership to the Paris exposition, and when he sailed for France there was no society crush at the dock to wave good-bys. But after he had trained most of the European nobility to drop into his home for a sandwich now and then, the American society folk who hadn't been able to get even a passing nod from a third-rate count began to understand that the Walshes were really very desirable people. Thus it happened that when the boat docked at New York on the return trip American society was down there en masse wig-wagging welcomes and telling one another about how glad they were to see "our dear friends, the Walshes, home again."

From that time on Mr. Thomas F. Walsh and his wife had to screen the house to keep "society" from overrunning it. And ever since then the Colorado Croesus has been up at the top of the social heap in Washington, Newport and the other places where silken society can be found at home.

One day after his return from Europe Mr. Walsh decided that it would be necessary to have a larger house. He had purchased the old Jenness Miller homestead in Washington and fitted it out luxuriously. But it was too small—too cramped for the entertainments he desired to give. The Miller house was torn down and on the site was erected by far the finest house in the nation's capital. Washington refers to it as "the palace," and no other designation would be fitting. The building cost $1,000,000, in round figures. It took from $500,000 to $800,000 to furnish it. Over 1,000 people can be entertained in it without crowding. There are 64 rooms. Each of the larger apartments has a distinct decoration, nearly every known species of hardwood having been used in the interior finishings. The floors alone of several of the rooms cost $5,000 each. In the ballroom the gold used in decorating the ceiling cost $10,000. The building is lighted and heated by electricity, cooled by a patent system, and automatic electric elevators—the kind that run without conductors—carry the occupants from one floor to another. There are four immense pipe organs in the house, and so well is it arranged that all of the organs can be played at one time without the sound of one penetrating to the zone reached by the sound of another. Specially employed connoisseurs scoured Europe and the Orient for rare rugs and tapestries wherewith to decorate this regal residence and pictures worth many fortunes adorn the walls. In the magnificent Italian garden surrounding the house there are vases and statuary brought from Greece and Italy. When this house was constructed and furnished Mr. Walsh expected to entertain King Leopold there. The Belgian ruler was to have been present at the "housewarming." But he could not come at that time and the housewarming went on just the same, with most of the notables of social and official life of Washington and New York in attendance.

"I haven't always had all I wanted, you know," remarked Mr. Walsh one day, "and I like to see plenty of everything for everybody."

He probably thought when he gave voice to this statement, of the days when he was a laborer in Boston. Or maybe he went back along the highway of memory to the time when he was a wheelwright back in Tipperary, Ireland. He was born in Tipperary 58 years ago and came to this country when a lad in his late 'teens. He landed in Boston and tried to secure employment. Wheelwrights were not in demand. With an insistent appetite and no funds wherewith to humor it regularly, he took a pick and shovel and started to work on the streets. From Boston he drifted over to Worcester and there branched out as a contractor, doing some sewer work and reaping a few hundred dollars of profit. Reports came east about this time that there was much gold in the Black hills, and Walsh, naturally a rover anyhow, decided to try his fortunes there. He knew nothing of mining, but soon found men who did, and with his small capital "grub-staked" several prospectors who struck gold and divided with him. In a few years he had cleaned up $100,000. Then Leadville loomed large upon the horizon and Walsh headed for the Rocky mountains. At Leadville he invested in a hotel—the Grand Central, it was called—and from this vantage point he kept a sharp lookout for opportunities. Also he conducted a better hotel than had ever before been found in a new mining camp. Leadville was wide open. The click of the poker chip, the whirr of the roulette wheel, the rattle of the dice never ceased. Miners who accumulated a little "dust" scattered it quickly when they came into town and woke up in the morning "broke" and discouraged. They soon ascertained that "Tom" Walsh was a likely angel. Any reasonably worthy prospector could get credit at the Grand Central. Not only that, but he could get money. Walsh would willingly grub-stake him. That is, Walsh would furnish an outfit, grub and tools and advance ready money for an interest in the prospective "strike." How many profitless ventures he went into is not recorded, but they were not all of that sort. Some of his working partners did make strikes and the profits were enormous. Walsh appeared to have unerring judgment when it came to buying a mine. He studied mineralogy from the alphabet up, secured a fund of information about all branches of geology, knew more about the various formations in the Colorado mountains and hills than any expert in the business at that time, and was well equipped to purchase or decline when property was offered. One day he amused the mining folk by purchasing an old mine "dump" where the refuse had been thrown. He had a theory that the process of extracting the metal had been wasteful and that there was plenty of gold left behind. Applying scientific methods to the smelting of it, he managed to clean up a million dollars out of that supposedly valueless dump. He bought a "prospect" from a discouraged miner and found a number of "pockets" of virgin gold on it. From one "pocket" alone he took $100,000. He was rich now and happy. But he had another theory about gold mining that he was anxious to test. The carefully educated experts said that it was folly to seek the precious metal in the tops of the mountains near the present town of Ouray. Walsh thought otherwise. He made a personal investigation of some territory where prospectors had reported outcroppings of ore. As a result Walsh quietly purchased a tract in the San Juan district. There were old abandoned mines there—holes that had been left because mining was difficult in those altitudes—because frequent snowslides destroyed the houses and the machinery and filled up the shafts. The experts warned Walsh that he would lose any money that he put into the property he had purchased. He paid no attention to their warnings, but moved over to Ouray and started to work. From the very first hole that he dug he struck ore that assayed startlingly high. Then he started a force of men out after more property and another force to do additional prospecting. The result was far beyond his wildest dreams of success. One morning a friendly little bird hopped into the tent he was occupying and Walsh hustled around to get some bread to feed it. The bird stayed after that and fed

"We'll call this Camp Bird," Walsh announced. And from that day to this all these mines in the San Juan district of Colorado have been known as the Camp Bird group—one of the richest groups of gold mines in the world.

Wealth literally rolled in on the lucky Walsh. He piled million upon million—how many is a matter of dispute. Some say that he made $50,000,000 in that district alone, in addition to the money he had made previously in the Black hills and in Leadville. Whatever the amount, it was sufficient for all his needs and left over a bit for spending money. From the time of the first rich strike until 1902 Mr. Walsh continued to take gold from the earth. Then an English syndicate offered him $14,000,000 for a controlling interest in his properties, and, to the surprise of the mining world, he sold, and the property passed out of his hands. There was woe in Ouray and throughout the mining district when the announcement was made. For of all the mine owners of the west Thomas F. Walsh enjoyed the love and confidence of his employes more than any other. He worked in unheard-of ways. For instance, he built a modern, first-class hotel for the accommodation of his miners and superintendents—a hotel with baths and clean beds and reading rooms. The food was good and was well cooked and well served. And the charge for the accommodations was no greater than that of the ordinary mining-camp boarding house, where "good digestion waits on appetite" until appetite and the food furnished put a dent in good digestion.

CONVICT IS INVENTOR

William Howard Perfects Airship Model in Prison.

Sent to Nebraska Penitentiary for Burglary He Turns His Cell Into a Workshop—Probably Will Be Paroled.

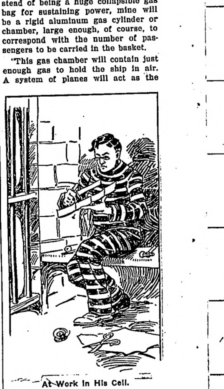
Lincoln, Neb.—From convict No. 4802 to inventor and capitalist, from a narrow little cell in the Nebraska state prison to the head of an airship manufacturing plant in St. Louis is likely for William Howard, an inmate of the penitentiary near Lincoln, under a six-year sentence for burglary.

Howard, since he became an inmate of the penitentiary, has perfected a model of an airship which he is sure will revolutionize air travel. The plans are in St. Louis, and patents are to be procured. He says:

"Howard, of course, is not my real name. That was the name under which I was sentenced, and that it will remain until I am out of prison. I do not wish to give my right name, because it would be distressing to my relatives and friends.

"I was born in Missouri, below St. Louis, nearly forty years ago. Machinery has been my hobby ever since I have been old enough to understand the use of tools. Ten years ago I took up the study of air navigation, and have been working on the problems at intervals since. My plan is similar in some respects to that of Count Zeppelin, but I believe my model is an improvement. It is an airship combining the principle of both the dirigible and aeroplane, but radically different from that of the Zeppelin creation. Instead of being a huge collapsible gas bag for sustaining power, mine will be a rigid aluminum gas cylinder or chamber, large enough, of course, to correspond with the number of passengers to be carried in the basket.

"This gas chamber will contain just enough gas to hold the ship in air. A system of planes will act as the motive power and also serve, in case of necessity, to carry the ship upward. The propulsion will not be by direct gasoline power. It will be by electricity generated by a gasoline engine combined with a dynamo.



At Work in His Cell.

"Danger of collapse or other accident with my ship will thus be reduced to a minimum. The gas chamber can be made to sustain any weight deemed necessary, but it will be only secondary to the planes for propulsion and weight-carrying power. A chamber 200 feet long will probably carry 25 passengers.

"Count Zeppelin is certainly to be congratulated on his success, but except for my unfortunate arrest I believe I would have beaten him in the inventive race. I think I conceived the idea in advance of him."

Howard's inventive genius has not stopped with his dirigible aeroplane. He is preparing plans for an aeroplane somewhat on the lines of the Wright and Farnam biplanes. A preliminary model has already been prepared. Not much attention was paid to the models at first, but Howard stuck to his work, devoting most of his time to his dirigible, the problem he started to solve long before airships were seriously discussed in this country or Europe.

Howard has been an inmate of the prison since March, 1907, following his conviction for robbing the residence of E. T. Swobe, manager of the National Fidelity Company of Omaha. Before his conviction he invented a cigar-making machine which he sold to the American Tobacco Company for $5,000.

A mail box lock, invented by him had been favorably reported by the government. Locks had played an important part in Howard's troubles and successes. The charge of his picking one and entering the Swobe residence and making away with several hundred dollars' worth of silverware, led to his being sent to prison.

Canadian Fishing Industry.

The catch of fish in Canadian waters by Canadian fishermen, including seals and all fish products, in 1908 was valued at $25,451,085. The industry required a fishing fleet of 14,114 vessels.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Congressman's Son School Insurgent

MER-CY TEACHER DREAM

WASHINGTON.—During the famous fight over the rules in the house last month Representative Frank O. Lowden of Illinois took his twelve-year-old son, George M. Pullman Lowden, to the house to listen to the debates. The little fellow, who is a grandson of George M. Pullman, the late Pullman car magnate, remained through the exciting Saturday when the rules were overturned and the speaker reinvested with the gavel after offering to relinquish it if the house so demanded.

George sat with eyes glued on the whirling dervishes in the arena of the house. He was deeply impressed. Mr. Lowden said, after the battle, "George can ask more embarrassing questions than Jim Mann."

For several days the youngster talked of nothing but the legislative battle. Then he quieted down, but the family discovered that he was busily engaged in the preparation of a paper. He worked till his father questioned him, but no information was forthcoming of the purport of the document, but on the third day he produced a set of rules for the government of the public schools. Insurgency is the spirit of every line.

The boy is going to be a worse Insurgent than "Vic" Murdock when he grows up, according to the stand pat parents of the youthful Tom Reed.

This is the output of George Lowden's three days of close application to the study of his school system:

Article A—1. That if any unjust law or too hard work be imposed on the scholars they may rebel on the teacher.

They may also fine and arrest him.

Hereafter the pupils may elect a committee on rules for the school. The teachers are ineligible.

The teachers won't have any right to make any laws whatsoever.

Article B—1. The pupils may refuse to work if they choose and the teachers may insist, but not to any good purpose.

Cross teachers are compelled by the pupils to leave the room without complaint or words of any kind; if they do, a fine can be imposed on the teacher or teachers.

The teachers or parents are not allowed to cast a vote on any subjects applying to school questions; if they do they are liable to be fined or put under guard.

The school shall begin when the committee wants it to and end when the committee wants it to, and at no other time.

The president and composer is now busy perfecting his insurgency.

Horse Still Popular Despite the Auto

MORE than one hundred thousand motor cars were manufactured in the United States last year, and the manufacturers estimate that twice the output will be sold in 1910. Has the price of horses been lowered? Will it be affected in the future?

Men who deal in horses say that the horse industry in general not only has been unaffected by the development of power vehicles, but the price of horses has increased more than fifty per cent. within the last five year.

To prove this assertion, the horse lover refers to the last report of the United States department of agriculture. The report contains several complimentary statements about Dobbin.

The government statistician has found that since 1890 horses have increased 81.2 per cent. in price and 33.6 per cent. in number. Two years ago there were 1,108,000 horses in Kansas and 957,000 in Missouri. The average value a head was $87 in Kansas and $88 in Missouri. One year later—January 1, 1909—the number of horses in Kansas had increased to 1,152,000, with an increase in value of two dollars a head. In Missouri on the same date the number of horses was 995,000 and their value had increased three dollars a head.

The horse lover is careful to explain that in arriving at the values given the statistician has had to estimate thousands of horses worth not more than $1.48 each, which brings down the average.

Only the horses used for pleasure driving have suffered in price from the use of motor cars. Few motor car owners keep a stable in addition to a garage and the result has been a depreciation in the value of harness horses.

Postmaster General's Mail Mixed Up

BILL
THERE MUST BE A MISTAKE

FOR a space Representative Hitchcock of Nebraska, a Democrat, thought he had it on Postmaster General Hitchcock. There has been some confusion of the mails of the two by the men who are in the second Hitchcock's department.

Both men live in the Washington apartment house. The congressman is married; the postmaster general is not. One day the congressman got a letter, addressed merely to "Mr. Hitchcock." As he opened it, his wife stood by. It was a bill for over 100 parasols. The congressman frowned. Then he saw a light.

"I guess this is for the postmaster general," he said.

He sent the bill to the other Hitchcock with this note: "This envelope was opened by mistake. The inclosure was read with amazement."

It may be interpolated here that the congressman is against all forms of government extravagance. He was therefore suspicious.

The postmaster general so far forgot party lines, however, as to get word to Hitchcock No. 2 that he (the P. M. G.) had merely used the parasols as favors at a cotillion at which he was recently host.

Flat Car Needed for Hats of 1915

I KENT DIG 'EM IT
MILADY'S HAT
HOLD 'ER BILL

THE latest and most extreme scream in the "chantecler" hat measures four feet from brim to brim. An ordinary express or freight car will accommodate about an Easter lid and a half in its width. In other words, a car will hold only one-tenth the bulk of leghorn and rooster feathers that it did ten years ago. What's the answer?

A raise in rates to show a profit in the transportation business. Nothing short of a flat car will be needed to transport half a dozen Paris creations, if the law of evolution is allowed to take its course in the next five years, say the carriers.

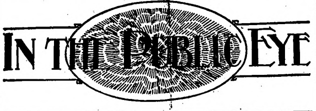
A falling off in custom owing to the unwillingness of hubby to dig too deep into the family pocket and the return to mode of the stingy toque and the humble and modestly dimensioned ban, cry the milliners.

It was purely a matter of hats, into which the length of pins does not enter which was heard before the interstate commerce commission. The Millinery Jobbers' association put in their kick some time ago.

The milliners claim the rates are too high and the carriers say the evolution of the headgear simply made them put on the increase.

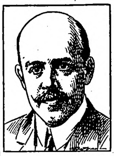
Women's hats have been growing larger and larger every year. They have also been growing lighter and lighter in weight. So that now a woman's hat weighs less and takes up more room than ten did ten years ago. A freight car or an express car will hold only a tenth of the hats it once did and the carriers raised the rates to make up the difference.

What would happen were the "chantecler" hat to increase in size to accommodate the henpheasant, the crow and others of the Rostand barnyard collection, even rate experts refuse to predict.



IN THE PUBLIC EYE

LONGWORTH IN QUANDARY



Nicholas Longworth is the representative in congress from the First Ohio district, which practically means Cincinnati. Mr. Longworth, as everybody knows, is the only son-in-law of Theodore Roosevelt, former president of the United States. Mr. Longworth is a millionaire.

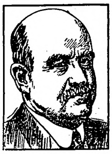
It is nice to be a congressman, nice to be the husband of a former president's daughter, and nice to be a millionaire; still Nicholas Longworth isn't the happiest man on earth. His political path seems rosy enough; his marital relations are ideal and his financial position is one to be envied.

Then why should he not be happy? The answer is simple. He is the son-in-law of Theodore Roosevelt. He is a "stand-patter" and, as such, a friend of Joseph G. Cannon, speaker of the house. Now would Theodore Roosevelt, the greatest Republican, were he at home, approve of the conduct of his son-in-law?

In a recent speech in Washington Mr. Longworth roasted the Insurgents until they were brown. Next day some one asked him how he thought his illustrious father-in-law would regard such conduct.

"There it is again!" angrily exclaimed the son-in-law. "It seems that I am not to be allowed an opinion of my own. Let me say right here, I'm a stand patter and I don't care what Mrs. Longworth's famous father thinks about it. We understand each other pretty well and Mr. Roosevelt has never made any effort to influence me one way or the other. I wish the people would let me be Nicholas Longworth and not always think of me as the son-in-law of Colonel Roosevelt."

BATTLE FOR McKINLEY



Republicans and Democrats, Insurgents and stand-patters agree that there is going to be a desperate battle in the coming fall for seats in congress. It has been a long time since such a bitter struggle was so easily foreseen. It always is that way after congress has made a change in the tariff law. To pass a tariff law that would please everybody is impossible.

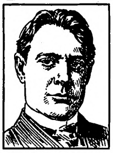
A wealthy, good-natured son of Illinois is the man who will have to stand the brunt of the battle for the Republicans this year. He is William Brown McKinley of Champaign, who was born September 5, 1856, in Petersburg, Ill.

Representative McKinley is the chairman of the Republican congressional committee and as such wil have to lead the fight to maintain the Republican majority in the house of representatives. Those who know Mr. McKinley know he is a fighter and they say he will not be found wanting when the opposing forces clash.

It takes only six lines in the congressional directory to tell who Representative McKinley is, not because his record as a citizen and member of congress is not one of which he may well be proud, but because of his opposition to self-praise. Some congressmen who have not done near as much for party or country consume three or four times as much space, but Mr. McKinley is content to have his birthplace, age, occupation and the date of his first election to congress published.

It has been said of Mr. McKinley that he is one of the wealthiest men in the house. Nobody would think it to observe his conduct. He is jovial, democratic and makes no display of the fact that he has wealth. Mr. McKinley controls miles and miles of interurban electric lines in Illinois. He owns farms and he's a banker.

BEVERIDGE, INSURGENT



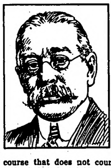
"I could not stand for it then and and I cannot stand for it now."

These are the words used by Albert J. Beveridge, senior senator of Indiana, as he dissected the new tariff law paragraph by paragraph, in his speech before the Indiana Republican convention in Indianapolis recently. The senator's speech attracted attention all over the country. Senator Beveridge has been an active member of the upper branch of the nation's congress from the day he took his seat in that august body. In one way he differs from many other members of the senate. He is not a millionaire. But this has made no difference with the senator. In odd times he has used his pen—maybe it was a typewriter—to good effect. A prominent weekly journal has printed many good stories by the senator from Indiana. Monthly magazines also have shown a preference for his writings.

Mr. Beveridge is one of a few members of the senate who does not give interviews to the newspapers. He has made it a rule not to express his opinions of political happenings in the daily press.

The day after the Indianapolis convention Senator Beveridge was in Chicago. He greeted the newspaper reporters who called upon him cordially, but never a word had he to say of the things that transpired in the Republican gathering.

WICKERSHAM AS A TARGET



When George W. Wickersham, attorney general of the United States, in his speech before the Hamilton club at its Appomattox day banquet in Chicago, commanded the Insurgents to "get behind Taft or get out of the party," he made of himself a target at which grape and canister, dumdum bullets and 13-inch shells are likely to be fired.

In fact one bomb has been hurled at the attorney general, Senator La Follette of Wisconsin having had some pointed things to say about the cabinet officer in the same speech in which he called J. Pierpont Morgan a "thick-necked bully." Then came Representative Rainey of Illinois, who nipped the cabinet target through a bullet aimed at the sugar trust.

Mr. Rainey, however, is a Democrat and of course that does not count, for Democratic congressmen may be expected to hurl their broadsides at Republican cabinet officers every once in a while.

But the big part of the target shooting is yet to come, if reports from Washington are to be believed.

In his Chicago speech the attorney general boldly said:

"The time of running with the hare and hunting with the hounds is over. Everyone must now choose whether or not he is for the president and the Republican party. He that 'hath no stomach for the fight' let him depart. Treason has ever consisted in giving aid and comfort to the enemy. If anyone wishes to join the Democratic party let him do so.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Men's Club to Ask Tax on Bachelors

AW! WAW
I'D STAY SINGLE AT ANY COST

CHICAGO.—Not satisfied with having styled the bachelor an undesirable citizen and the spinster a detriment to her sex and an injury to society, the Men's club of the Green Street Congregational church is preparing to levy per capita and income taxes on unmarried folk. C. W. Monroe, a lawyer, who drew a bill arraigning those who shun the married state, said he would bring forward more tax bills as soon as those now in preparation are enacted by the club. Mr. Monroe also advocates a pension for parents.

"The only thing about these taxes," commented F. V. Johnson, president of the club at the meeting, "is that a good many bachelors will think their freedom is worth a good deal more than that, and it won't remedy affairs at all."

Meanwhile the sweeping legislation of the club is arousing opposition. The bachelors at the meeting were outnumbered hopelessly, and, seeing defeat, sought by strategy to secure a modification of the original charges.

The proposed tax follows:

PER CAPITA TAX.

Men, 28 to 70 years old	$100
Women, 25 to 65 years old	50
Preachers and teachers	Exempt

INCOME TAX.

	Per cent.
Annual income under $500	Exempt
Income $500 to $1,000	5
Income $1,000 to $1,500	7
Income $1,500 to $2,000	10
Income $2,000 to $3,500	15
Income $3,500 to $10,000	20
Income over $10,000	25

P. A. Heinlich, the bachelor spokesman, held a short party caucus and decided to attempt a flank movement.

"I agree with you that the bachelor by choice is undesirable," he amazed his hearers by saying. "Still there are many great men who have been bachelors, and I think you should cross out the terms of 'leech' and 'menace' from your indictment."

The change was rushed through by an ally before the radical party had recovered.

Women were not permitted to enter the debate, but sent in written opinions to the meeting. One of them, Miss Clara Kent, who is proud of her ability to work, wrote:

"You are all wrong. Let the old maid and the bachelor alone, for there are few who stay single from choice.

"The kind of bachelor I would condemn is the man who has a good position and is capable of caring for a family, but stays single because he doesn't want to give up his freedom and assume the responsibility of a home. Yet, on the other hand, a man with such selfish desires would make a poor husband and ought to stay single."

Says Wireless Is a Snag to Japanese

WE HAVE CAPTURED NO BOYS
HOW ABOUT THE BOYCOTT?

SEATTLE, Wash.—Wireless telegraphy is the one field of American industry in which the Japanese seem unable to compete successfully, according to W. B. Southwick, Pacific coast manager for a big company.

"So far," said Mr. Southwick, "the Orientals have copied and competed with the Yankees in almost every line of invention and industry. But in the wireless method of communication they seem to have made a fizzle of their attempts.

"Either in war or commercially I do not believe they would be dangerous because of the misunderstanding they have over the American way of talking. They take things literally. If a message is sent to them it keeps them guessing so long that little satisfaction can be obtained.

"As an illustration, one of our operators on an Alaskan steamer heard a Japanese liner working and asked for his position and who he was. The reply came back that he was Togo somebody and that he was in the wireless room. Another operator asked a Japanese boat for news of the Ketchel-Johnson fight, and the Oriental wireless man asked why the Hon. Ketchel and Johnson combated.

"When an operator spoke a Jap boat regarding the report of a great typhoon in midocean the Japanese replied that it was an ill wind that blowed no one any great good.

"Another operator, desirous of obtaining foreign news for a newspaper ahead of the arrival of the steamer, asked about the prevailing boycott, and the Oriental replied that so far as he remembered there had been no boys captured by his vessel for some time."

Blood Shows Man-Monkey Relationship

PHILADELPHIA.—Dr. Edward Tyson Reichert, an investigator and professor of physiology at the University of Pennsylvania, has published his observations made in the series of experiments with blood crystals of animals and men, and has, he believes, a strong argument in favor of the Darwinian theory of evolution.

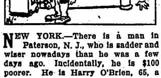
His conclusions are based on a study of 2,500 photomicrographic negatives. These negatives were obtained from the blood of virtually every species of animal.

Evolution observed from a chemical standpoint is so vast in its possibilities that it will require the combined efforts of a hundred investigators, working incessantly for several generations, to complete the task, according to Doctor Reichert.

Not only will the experiments have an important bearing on the evolutionary theory, but the ability to distinguish by comparison of crystals between the different types of man will be of immense importance in the examination of blood in murder trials.

By Doctor Reichert's method it is possible to establish definitely whether the blood is of man or animal, and to say with a degree of positiveness whether it is the blood of a negro or a white person.

Strawberries Used in a New Skin Game



WONDER IF HE THINKS I AM COMING BACK

NEW YORK.—There is a man in Paterson, N. J., who is sadder and wiser nowadays than he was a few days ago. Incidentally, he is $100 poorer. He is Harry O'Brien, 65, a merchant.

While journeying homeward from a visit in Montreal he was much bored by the scenery between Albany and New York, so he leaned back with a deep sigh.

"What is the matter?" said a sympathetic voice, "are you ill? Can I be of any assistance?"

The owner of the voice was a very pleasant man. He sat down beside O'Brien, who explained that it was nothing—just the confounded monotony of travel. The stranger understood. He asked more questions. He said his name was Jim. And while O'Brien poured out his life history Jim acted the part of a human information sponge.

Arriving at New York they started for the West Twenty-third street ferry. While waiting for a car an excited man rushed up to "Jim."

"Strawberries!" he yelled. "Packages, boxes, crates of luscious strawberries! Just arrived—on a pier—consigned to me; oh, so perishable! I simply must get them away, Jim, but—I have not a cent in my clothes except a check for $900."

"Jack," said the pleasant stranger, "I have only $10. What shall we do?"

What could O'Brien do but offer to help?

"You may have $100," said O'Brien. And off rushed Strawberry Jack with O'Brien's $100.

He told the other two a smooth faced driver of a truck would soon pass them with the strawberries. A smooth faced driver presently hove in sight. "Strawberries!" he snapped in answer to queries. "That truck's full of pigs' heads!"

RESTORING A LOST EMPIRE.

The possible realization of the project for reopening the old empire of Nebuchadnezzar to civilization, a project which only yesterday was only a dream, is foreshadowed by the efforts of the Turkish government to reclaim 12,500,000 acres of waste land in Northern Mesopotamia through irrigation, says New York World. Given the success of the experiment, the ancient realm of Assyrian and Babylonian monarchs may then be refertilized and repeopled with an industrious race and the world's old granary restored after centuries of desolation. Mesopotamia's greatness was due to a system of irrigation canals in connection with the Tigris and Euphrates. It was by their neglect that it declined and was transformed into a sandy plain, the haunt of nomad races. Within recent times the engineer and the archeologist have invaded it, the former plotting the route of the Bagdad railway which is to unite it with the Western world and the latter delving in the dust heap which have disclosed in turn the site of Nebuchadnezzar's palace, the hall in which Belshazzar gave his feast and the very site of Babel. To reclaim it to cultivation will cost $200,000,000.

Mr. Durand, the director of the census, has been casting a preliminary glance over the field, and he makes a rough estimate that the enumeration this year will show a population of between 88,000,000 and 90,000,000. The director's estimate would seem to be conservative as it does not include any extraordinary growth. In fact, according to his total the ratio of increase would be smaller than in the preceding ten years. The census of 1900 gave a population of 76,303,387, a gain of nearly 14,000,000 over 1890. A corresponding gain from 1900 to 1910 would send the figures considerably over the 90,000,000 mark. In fact, the World Almanac, taking the estimates of governors of states and territories, places the population for the United States at present at 94,049,810. There has been some remarkable development in some localities, and the final results of the census taking this year may furnish some surprises.

The factions have not yet got together in Nicaragua, but it looks more and more as though they are likely to do so. President Madriz has made peace proposals, and General Estrada the leader of the insurgents, has replied. The offer is not accepted, but General Estrada suggests meditation, with the United States as the deciding power. Uncle Sam is not looking for any such mission, but if he can be instrumental in bringing about an honorable adjustment of the quarrel and in restoring peace to a distracted region perhaps he will not object. And the steps taken looking to the withdrawal of the American naval forces in that quarter would seem to indicate that apprehensions of further serious trouble are no longer entertained.

This is the age of the automobile. Yet the horse is not wholly a negligible quantity, and coaching, that sport so popular with lovers of the equine, still flourishes. A notable record was made by a four-in-hand from New York to Atlantic City. Of course the automobile will continue its triumphs. But there is a great deal that is inspiring in a drive though the country behind spirited and speedy horses.

The Duke of Orleans, the French pretender, again offers himself at this crisis to save the ship of state, declaring that republican institutions are responsible for corruption. But it is not the use of republican institutions which is at fault; it is merely their abuse, and the obliging Duke will probably be politely so informed, and his help as politely refused.

Another little row has generated among those touchy South American nations. Peru has become huffy at Chile, and has withdrawn the legation to the latter country. What seems to be almost as much needed as a Hague tribunal is an arbitration court that will smooth over those Latin-American squabbles.

The frequent appeals to aid the census takers are an indication that there is some fear of a disinclination to reveal family secrets for the benefit of the statisticians.

A wireless motor car is going to be a part of the Glidden tour this year. Oh, pshaw! They'll make those things so comfortable after awhile there will be no fun going on them.

Two Chicago bandits distinguished themselves by going into a restaurant, robbing it and getting out without tipping a single waiter.

The hat pin couchant may slay its thousands, but the umbrella point rampant slays its tens of thousands.

"MARK TWAIN" DEAD

HEART IS BROKEN BY GRIEF

Passes Away Surrounded by Daughter and Few Friends—Will Be Buried at Elmira Beside Bodies of Wife and Children.

New York, April 23.—With the simplicity which he requested a few hours before death claimed him, the funeral services of Samuel L. Clemens, "Mark Twain," were conducted in New York this afternoon.

He will be buried Sunday in one of the white flannel suits which he had worn so frequently in his declining years, at Elmira, N. Y., where in the family plot lie his wife and three children.

In a severely plain mahogany casket the body was brought from his country home, Stormfield, at Redding, Conn., in a private car attached to the regular morning express. At three o'clock there was a formal service at the brick Presbyterian church, Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke of Princeton, preaching a short sermon.

Services Are Semi-Public.

The services were semi-public with an advance admission by card for relatives and friends. Within a week or ten days, according to F. A. Duneka of Harper & Brothers and Fred Bigelow Paine, the humorist's secretary, there will be a public memorial service in one of the large halls of the city. This will give the general public a chance to show their grief at his death and their appreciation of the works he leaves behind.

Redding, Conn., April 22.—Mark Twain, beloved the world over because he made it laugh, is dead.

He passed away without pain last evening in his country home, "Stormfield," back in the wild Camarack hills.

For five hours he had been unconscious and the end was almost unnoticeable. It was simply a cessation of pulse and respiration.

Daughter Is at Bedside.

At his bedside were his only living child, Clara, who is the wife of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist; Albert Bigelow Paine, his secretary and literary executor, who was almost a son to him; Drs. Edward Quintard and Robert Halsey, the heart specialists who had kept him alive by stimulants for nearly twenty-four hours, and his servants, headed by "Old Katie," who for 30 years had been his housekeeper.

His last words were spoken to his daughter. What they were she only heard, for they were faint and almost inarticulate. Unable then to speak, he grasped a pad and pencil—the instinct to write seeming dominant even in the face of approaching senselessness.

Angina Pectoris Causes Death.

Angina pectoris, the doctors have it, ended the life which everyone who had ever sailed with Samuel Langhorne Clemens hoped might be spared longer. That malady was coupled to some extent with asthma of the heart, brought about by excessive smoking.

But what laymen call a broken heart was more responsible than the world in general knew. When his chum, Henry H. Rogers died last year, those close to Mr. Twain saw that his grief was intense.

Daughter's Death Great Sorrow.

When his only unmarried daughter, Jean, was drowned in her bath during an attack of epilepsy just before Christmas, his nearest remaining tie was severed. He was a lone sorrow stricken man. After the passing of his friends, William Laffan of the Sun, and Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century, he said sadly: "How fortunate they are! No good fortune of that kind comes to me!"

Yet the fun he so loved on occasions overpowered his grief. He joked with friends and neighbors within the last few days.

SIX CONVICTS FLEE PRISON

Capture Switch Engine at Leavenworth Penitentiary and Escape—Four Are Recaptured.

Leavenworth, Kan., April 22.—Arthur Hewitt, Thomas Keating, Bob Clarke, John Gideon and Frank Grigware, life-timers, and Theodore Murdock, a ten-year counterfeiter, escaped from the federal penitentiary by capturing a switch engine and crew.

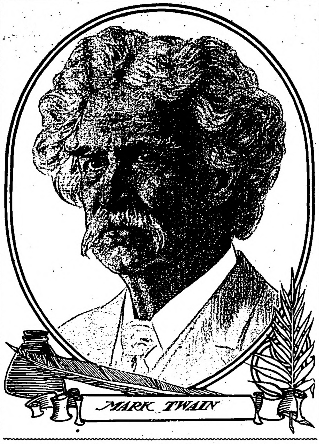
With dummy revolvers the engineer was forced to run his engine six miles to a place where a bridge was jacked up so they had to stop, when the convicts separated and started to work their way across the country.

Bob Clarke was captured first and an hour after Gideon was made to surrender by farmers armed with shotguns. Hewitt and Keating were found hiding in a clump of bushes by three guards, who made them surrender.

Deputy Warden Lemon, with forty guards and many farmers, are out scouring the country eleven miles west of here and expect to capture Grigware and Murdock.

Nothing Slow About This.

New York, April 23.—The marriage of Lawrence Swift and Miss Elizabeth M. Hurry, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Hurry, was celebrated at the Church of the Epiphany.



CAREER OF "MARK TWAIN", HUMORIST

Interesting Life of the Man Who Made the World Laugh.

RIVER PILOT IN HIS YOUTH

Did His First Literary Work in Nevada—Sad Events That Clouded His Later Years—A Clean Life Record.

Samuel Langhorne Clemens, America's foremost humorist and known the world over as "Mark Twain," was born in the little town of Hannibal, Mo., in November 30, 1835.

His father, John Marshall Clemens, came from an old Virginia family, and with his young wife, Elizabeth Lampton, a descendant of the early settlers of Kentucky, he joined the sturdy band of pioneers who pushed over the Alleghanies in the early part of the last century and settled along the banks of the Mississippi river.

In the uncouth environment of the then little frontier town of Hannibal the famous author spent his boyhood days. Here he fished, hunted and lounged along the river banks with his sturdy companions, living a healthy outdoor existence, which undoubtedly accounted for his long life, in the face of his many afflictions.

He attended the little school, but not being of a very studious disposition, he learned far more from contact with the rough companions whom he immortalized in later years as "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer," and others of their type.

At the age of twelve his meager school education was brought to a sudden close by the death of his father.

His older brother, Orion S. Clemens, was the proprietor of a printing shop in the village, and young Sam Clemens began his journalistic career there as a "printer's devil." In the course of a few years he learned the trade as a compositor, and in 1853 he left his native town and began a wandering existence. He journeyed from place to place, working at his trade in New York and the principal cities of the middle west.

But while he gained a vast amount of experience during his travels, which proved of the greatest value in the preparation of some of his works in later years, this period was rather unprofitable from a financial standpoint, and he was finally compelled to return to his home along the banks of the great river, in rather straitened circumstances.

Becomes River Pilot.

The life of a steamboat pilot had always appealed to his youthful imagination, and now that he had grown to manhood, he resolved to realize his ambition. He was fortunate enough to become a pupil of Horace Bixby, and he was soon guiding the awkward river craft along the tortuous channel of the muddy stream.

The idea of his becoming an author had never entered his mind at that time, but he absorbed enough of the pilot life to enable him to describe the difficulties encountered in guiding a boat along the great river in his "Life on the Mississippi River," which he wrote many years later.

At the outbreak of the Civil war steamboating came to a standstill, and young Clemens enlisted in the Confederate army. A soldier's life, however, was not to his liking, and after a few weeks' service he joined his brother Orion, who had received an appointment as secretary of the Territory of Nevada. He acted as secretary to his brother, but as his duties were almost nothing and his salary even less, he spent most of his time in the mining camps. His experiences in this section are depicted in his "Roughing It," and "The Jumping Frog."

First Literary Work.

In 1862 he began his first regular literary work on the staff of the Virginia City Enterprise. He wrote a column daily, dealing with the political situation in the state, that attracted wide attention. These articles he signed with the nom de plume "Mark Twain," which he had heard sung out on the Mississippi steamers to let the pilot know that the sounding showed two fathoms of water.

He resigned his position at Virginia City and went to California, where he worked on the Sacramento Union; but after a brief period, he left his desk and went to Hawaii to write up the sugar interests. His work was very successful, and on his return to California he delivered a number of lectures, which netted him considerable money.

In March of 1867, Twain published his first book, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County." The book made quite a stir in that part of the country, but only 4,000 copies were sold. It attracted the attention, however, of the editor of the Alta California, who sent the author out as a newspaper correspondent on a steamboat excursion to southern Europe and the Orient.

His letters were published from time to time, and in 1869 the author revised them and published them in book form under the title of "The Innocents Abroad." This work made "Mark Twain" famous, and compelled his recognition as America's foremost humorist. In the first 16 months, 85,000 volumes were sold, and many more subsequently. This was a record sale for those days.

Marries Miss Langdon.

It was on his trip in the Mediterranean that Mark Twain met Olivia L. Langdon of Elmira, N. Y. They fell in love with each other, and in 1870 were married. Their married life was one of perfect harmony and four children blessed their union.

Mr. Clemens resided in Buffalo for a year after his marriage, and was nominally the editor of the Buffalo Express. In 1871 he joined the literary colony at Hartford, Conn., where he lived for a great many years, and where he did the greater part of the work that has made his name immortal.

In 1872 "Roughing It" appeared, and in the same year "The Gilded Age," written in collaboration with Charles Dudley Warner, was published. "Tom Sawyer" came in 1876, and "Huckleberry Finn" nine years later. Of the stories with an historical setting "The Prince and the Pauper," "A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," and "Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc," appeared in 1882, 1890 and 1894 respectively. In 1893 that curious philosopher "Pudd'nhead Wilson," made his bow.

But while the great humorist was meeting with well-deserved success from a literary standpoint, the imps of misfortune seemed to dog his very footsteps.

In 1884, he conceived the idea of reaping the publisher's as well as the author's profits from some of his works. Accordingly he organized a stock company known as C. L. Webster & Co., in which he was the largest stockholder, to publish his works. He had accumulated considerable wealth and was rated as a millionaire.

His financial ability, however, was none of the best, and in 1894 his entire fortune was swept away by the failure of the publishing house. Mr. Clemens was abroad at the time, and although 60 years of age, he started out on a tour of the globe, delivering lectures and writing articles in order to pay the debts of the defunct firm.

He had scarcely begun his great task when fate struck him another hard blow. This was the death of his eldest and most accomplished daughter, Miss Olivia S. Clemens, who died in August, 1896, at the age of 24. Broken in spirit, he continued his great task and in two years he had paid off his debts.

It was during this dark period that the veteran humorist was reported destitute and dying in London. A public appeal was sent out through a New York paper and $3,000 was raised for him. But although pressed for funds, he still retained his dignity and refused to accept the money.

Wife Passes Away.

As if in sympathy with her husband's misfortunes, his wife's health began to fail. He moved to Florence, Italy, in the hope that the mild climate would restore her, but it proved of no avail, and on November 6, 1904, she died in that far off land.

About this time the humorist met H. H. Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate, and the men became fast friends. Rogers gave his literary friend the aid of his financial experience, and Clemens was soon in possession of a comfortable income.

Although the future took on a brighter aspect, his evil spirit was only slumbering, and one day, without asking the advice of his shrewd companion, "Twain" was lured into another disastrous investment. He placed $32,500 in the "Pleasure Company of America," a pure food organization, and was elected president. But the company went to the wall in 1907, and with it the $32,500 disappeared.

And now misfortune selected another weapon with which to attack the white-haired author. Heretofore his books had escaped harsh criticisms, but in November, 1907, "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn," his boy masterpieces, were withheld from youths by the Brooklyn Public libraries, as "unfit for young minds." Comptroller Joy of Detroit, Mich., declared his work, "A Double Barrelled Detective Story," was "literary junk, unfit for a public library," and a Massachusetts public library refused to give shelf room to his "Eve's Diary," declaring that the book was "shocking."

Worn out by his lectures, after dinner speeches and misfortunes, "Twain" purchased a farm in Redding, Conn., and erected a $40,000 villa, which he called "Stormfield.". With his two daughters, Clara and Jean, he moved there in 1908, and settled down to a life of ease.

But a series of fresh misfortunes was in store for him. He had vigorously denounced the rule of the late King Leopold II. in the Kongo Free State, and just when the reform movement was at its height, his ill health compelled him to abandon his work.

The "Children's Theater," which was founded by "Mark Twain" in New York, and which represented one of his life-long ambitions, was forced to close through lack of funds.

Then the humorist and his daughter Clara became involved in a lawsuit over a farm which he had presented to his former secretary, Mrs. Ralph Ashcroft, on her wedding day, and which he later attached on the advice of his daughter.

The facts regarding this disagreeable affair were aired in the press, much to the humiliation of the veteran humorist.

In the early part of 1909 his staunch friend and adviser, H. H. Rogers, died suddenly at his New York home. This great financier and the white haired humorist had been inseparable companions for a number of years. They had made trips to Bermuda together, and when Rogers opened his railroad in Virginia, "Twain" was one of the guests of honor. The author was greatly affected by the financier's sudden death.

Daughter Dies Suddenly.

In the latter part of 1909, "Twain" made another trip to Bermuda, and on his return his feeble appearance attracted a great deal of attention. Then the last crushing blow came the day before Christmas, when his youngest daughter, Jean, was found dead in the bath tub at his Redding home. The young woman had been a victim of epileptic fits, and had been seized with one while in the bath tub, which resulted in her death.

"Why, Ostend?" asked his mother in surprise.

"Well, you see, I've promised little brother the biggest part of it."

SAW CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY

Unreasonable Attitude of His Friend Naturally Disgusted Man of Business.

Solomon and Moses, while walking by the canal, saw a notice board which stated that five shillings would be paid to whoever rescued another man from drowning.

It didn't take them more than a minute to arrange that one should fall in and be saved by the other, and the "stakes" divided.

In went Sol, and found it rather deeper than he expected. However, he splashed about, crying:

"Come on, Moses! Save me!"

Moses hesitated.

"Sol," he said, "I've been reading that notice board again, and it says, 'Ten shillings for a dead body.' Now, do be reasonable."—London Tit-Bits.

"I tell you this youngster is remarkable, no matter how you may sneer. I've seen him do a thing that I don't suppose any other boy of his age could possibly do."

"What's his specialty? Mathematics?"

"Mathematics? I should say not. He hasn't any more of a head for figures than I have, and learning the multiplication table was the hardest work I ever did in my life."

"In what branch of science does he seem to be particularly interested?"

"He isn't interested in science at all; but the other day a friend of mine who has a big automobile left the machine standing in front of my house for more than half an hour, and, although the boy was playing around outside all the time he did not once climb into the automobile or even toot the horn."

Up to Papa.

"John, I think you would better give Edgar a good whipping."

"What has he been doing?"

"He won't study his lessons or do any chores about the house."

"What reason does he give?"

"No reason that amounts to anything. I tell him that I want him to study and work in order that he may become a great and successful man, and he just says he would rather be like you."

Civilization and Missions.

There is a question that is larger than government or trade, and that is the moral well-being of the vast millions who have come under the protection of modern governments. The representative of the Christian religion must have his place side by side with the man of government and trade, and for generations that representative must be supplied in the person of the foreign missionary from America and Europe. Civilization can only be permanent and continue a blessing to any people if, in addition to promoting their material well being, it also stands for an orderly individual liberty, for the growth of intelligence and for equal justice in the administration of law. Christianity alone meets these fundamental requirements. The change of sentiment in favor of the foreign missionary in a single generation has been remarkable.

Have Their Troubles.

Samuel Gompers, at the recent convention in Washington of the Civic Federation, said of children:

"Children should be protected from wage slavery, for, when free as air, they have enough trouble, dear knows.

"Walking along an East side street, I came on two tiny tots, the smaller of whom was bawling as if to break his lungs.

"A window opened and a little girl shrieked:

"'Tommy, who's been a-hittin' of ye?'

"'Nobody's been a-hittin' of him,' the larger tot answered. 'He's swallowed a worm.'"

A Real Story.

"Mike is a lobster!" announced Pat, bringing his fist down on the table.

"Now, Pat," we expostulated, "why call him such a name as that?"

'I mane exactly phwat I say. He's nayther more n'r less th'n a lobster. He star'rts out green, all roight, but the' minit he gits into hot wather, he turns red!"

Why She Permitted It.

"Why did you ever permit your husband to buy a flimsy, rickety automobile like that?"

"He recently got himself heavily insured against accidents."

POSTUM FOR MOTHERS

The Drink That Nourishes and Supplies Food for Mother and Child.

"My husband had been unable to drink coffee for several years, so we were very glad to give Postum a trial and when we understood that long boiling would bring out the delicious flavour, we have been highly pleased with it.

"It is one of the finest things for nursing mothers that I have ever seen. It keeps up the mother's strength and increases the supply of nourishment for the child if partaken of freely. I drank it between meals instead of water and found it most beneficial.

"Our five-year-old boy has been very delicate since birth and has developed slowly. He was white and bloodless. I began to give him Postum freely and you would be surprised at the change. When any person remarks about the great improvement, we never fail to tell them that we attribute his gain in strength and general health, to the free use of Postum and this has led many friends to use it for themselves and children.

"I have always cautioned friends to whom I have spoken about Postum, to follow directions in making it, for unless it is boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it is quite tasteless. On the other hand, when properly made, it is very delicious. I want to thank you for the benefits we have derived from the use of your Postum."

AMERICAN NATIONS IN A PEACE RALLY

New Building for the Bureau of Republics Dedicated.

PALACE GIVEN BY CARNEGIE

Formal Opening Is a Brilliant Affair and Is Followed by a Great Reception in the Evening.

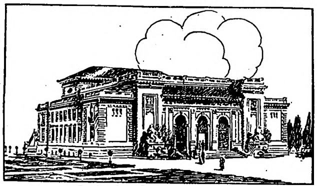
Washington.—The beautiful marble palace erected as a home for the International Bureau of the American Republics was dedicated Tuesday with elaborate ceremony in which the representatives of the nations of the western hemisphere, as joint proprietors of the building, took the chief part.

The erection of the building was made possible by Andrew Carnegie, who gave $750,000 of the million which it and its site have cost, and the ironmaster was one of the chief guests and speakers at the dedication ceremony. President Taft delivered a fine address, and speeches were made by Senor de la Barra, the Mexican ambassador; Secretary of State Knox and John Barrett, director of the bureau, who was in charge of the ceremonies. Prayers were delivered by Cardinal Gibbons and by a clergyman of the Protestant faith.

Of course all the members of the diplomatic corps who were in the city were present, and these brilliantly uniformed gentlemen, together with scores of ladies in their beautiful spring costumes, made the scene most picturesque.

Brilliant Evening Reception.

Nearly everybody in Washington wanted to attend the dedication ceremonies, but the "hall of ambassadors" seats only 800 people. So Mr. Barrett arranged for a reception in the evening in honor of President and Mrs. Taft and Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie. Invitations were sent to members of the diplomatic corps and to official and resident society, and the reception proved to be one of the most brilliant affairs of the season. The Marine band was there, playing a repertoire of Latin-American anthems, a fountain outside the building was illuminated with electric designs of the South and Central American countries, and elaborate refreshments were served.

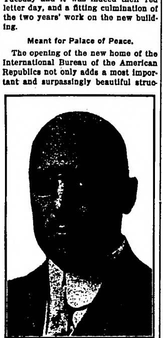


Pan-American Bureau's New Home.

The affair was a great credit to Director Barrett and to Francisco J. Yanes, the able secretary of the bureau. These gentlemen and their fellow workers in the bureau have given a vast amount of time and labor to the task of perparing for the event of Tuesday and it was indeed their red letter day, and a fitting culmination of the two years' work on the new building.

Meant for Palace of Peace.

The opening of the new home of the International Bureau of the American Republics not only adds a most important and surpassingly beautiful structure to the public buildings at Uncle Sam's seat of government, but gives added dignity and prominence to an institution of significance throughout the world, and especially in the new world. The new building is notable, primarily, as the home of that rapidly developing institution, the Pan-American bureau, but of yet deeper meaning in its avowed function as a center of arbitration on this continent.

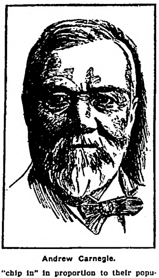


Director John Barrett.

It was because of the hope that this new Pan-American palace would serve as such an agency of peace for the various independent nations of North, Central and South America that Andrew Carnegie was induced to make the donation of the sum of $750,000 which has been expended in the erection of this monumental structure. Indeed, the famous philanthropist has designed the new building as a "peace palace," and a feature of its interior, specially provided with a view to this phase of the matter, is a great auditorium or "hall of American ambassadors" designed as a meeting place for all sorts of international conferences having as their purpose harmony and co-operation on the part of the republics of the western hemisphere.

Growth of the Bureau.

As most people are aware, the institution known as the International Bureau of the American Republics, or the Pan-American bureau, as it is usually called, is a sort of common headquarters and clearing house for information, maintained jointly by all the American nations from the great lakes to Cape Horn. It was the outgrowth of the first Pan-American conference, which was held in Washington in 1889, and it is maintained by a common fund to which all of the independent nations of the three Americas "chip in" in proportion to their population. Inasmuch as the United States by this plan pays more than half of the expenses of the bureau, its headquarters have from the outset been located in Washington.



Andrew Carnegie.

Some years ago when the rented quarters of the bureau in Washington became manifestly inadequate for its expanded activities, a project was set afoot to erect a permanent home for it. It was to cost $125,000, and the different republics were to contribute in proportion to population as they do for the annual expenses of the institution. Several of the South American countries proceeded on this basis, and there was something like $50,000 on hand when the congress of the United States declared for a more pretentious building and appropriated $200,000 instead of merely its share of the $125,000. Soon after Andrew Carnegie came forward and offered to donate the whole sum needed for a building—and a much finer building than had previously been thought of. He had previously donated millions of dollars for the famous "peace palace" at The Hague, and it was his idea to have the new edifice in Washington occupy the same relations to the cause of international peace on this continent that The Hague palace does to the cause of international arbitration throughout the world.

Beauties of the Marble Building.

With three-quarters of a million dollars provided by Mr. Carnegie for a building, the Pan-American bureau was enabled to devote $250,000 on hand to the purchase of a site, and a most admirable tract of several acres was secured in an ideal location south of the White House and overlooking the Potomac river. Here a surpassingly beautiful marble palace has been reared from the prize designs submitted in a competition which was entered by architects in all parts of the country, and, indeed, of the continent. There is a distinct touch of the Spanish in the architecture, markedly in the introduction of a tile roof and the provision of a "patio" or inner court, such as constitutes the most distinctive feature of the typical Latin-American mansion. The whole architectural policy in the case of this building has been to provide a structure more suggestive of a palatial residence than a public office structure.

The "patio," or picturesque court yard, is protected from the sun by an overhanging roof and cooled by the waters falling from a beautiful marble fountain. On all hands are tropical plants, while the quaint pavement, white stucco walls and low doors suggest the Spanish atmosphere. Much space in the rooms which open from this "patio" is given over to the Columbus Memorial library.

St. Paul. — Hennepin county will have 111 delegates in the democratic state convention, Ramsey county 78 and St. Louis county 39. The apportionment of delegates has not been determined, but the plan presented to the democratic state central committee by John King, state librarian, met with the approval of the members. It is based on one delegate for each 250 votes cast for John A. Johnson in November, 1908, and in addition each county is to have three delegates-at-large, making a total of 947. Hennepin county loses six from its representation of two years ago.

The apportionment will be made by the executive commimttee which will be appointed by Frank A. Day. This committee also will fix the time and place of the convention, but will select either Aug. 17 or 24.

TAKES $80 FROM TREASURER.

Stranger Reaches Through Grating of a Winona County Office.

Winona.—County Treasurer Ben Kalmes is out $80 as a result of the antiquated equipment provided in the treasurer's office at the courthouse. The openings at the bottom of the brass gratings at the paying windows are so large that a person can force his arm thorugh entirely across the counter. A taxpayer went inside of the office through the adjoining office of the county auditor and paid $80 on taxes, on which change of 60 cents was due him.

While making change Treasurer Kalmes placed the $80 on the counter, and when he turned to give back the change the money was gone. It is regarded as certain that some person outside the railing reached in and took it.

REFUSE TO PAY TAX.

Two Duluth Phone Companies Oppose Gross Earnings Levy.

Duluth.—In proceedings brought to force the Duluth and Zenith City telephone companies to pay their personal property taxes for 1909 both companies filed their answers with the clerk of the district court.

In answers filed by the companies, which are much the same, the claim is made that the personal property tax was levied without considering that each year they pay a gross earnings tax.

They claim also, if they have paid their gross earnings tax for the year 1909, they are therefore exempt from the personal property tax. The amount of the tax of the Zenith company is $3,810 and was based on a valuation of $100,000, the assessed value of the property. The Duluth company paid $5,715 on a valuation of $150,000.

NYE URGES INCREASE.

Wants Limit of Cost for Minneapolis Postoffice Raised to $750,000.

Washington, D. C. — Representative Nye appeared before the house committee on public buildings and urged favorable action on his bill to increase the limit of the cost of the postoffice building in Minneapolis from $50,000 to $750,000. Nye said he was confident the committee would authorize the increase if a public building bill is reported.

WANTS CONSERVATION CONGRESS

Ralph Wheelock Urges Claims of the Twin Cities.

Washington, D. C. — Minnesota's invitation to the National Conservation league to hold the next conservation congress in the Twin Cities was presented to Thomas R. Shipp, secretary of the National Conservation league, by Ralph Wheelock, secretary to Governor Eberhart.

In his presentation to the league Wheelock goes into details relative to the interest in conservation in Minnesota as evidenced at the recent conservation congress in March. He states that local organizations of the Twin Cities are already perfected, and that in the important matter of publicity the Twin Cities and the state as a whole have already in perfect working order exceptional facilities for covering every detail of such work. In both cities, the commercial clubs and other business organizations, including the Publicity Club of Minneapolis, are ready to push the congress in every way possible.

Pledges Support of Press.

"Behind all this," says Wheelock, "newspapers of the Twin Cities are in full accord with the conservation movement in all its bearings. It is safe to say that their efforts in behalf of the national gathering would be measured only by the physical limitations of their respective editorial staffs and mechanical plants. What is true of daily newspapers is equally applicable to all other classes of publications in country."

Wheelock discusses climatic conditions, hotel facilities, and calls particular attention to a recent increase in the latter in both cities and also to near-by lake resorts, where such delegates as choose may secure quiet accommodation. He also calls attention to railroad facilities, including twelve of the leading railroads of the country which center at the Twin Cities.

Will Meet Other Propositions.

Closing his statement on behalf of Governor Eberhart and the Twin Cities, Wheelock says: "While it is not possible at this time for your committee on the one hand and our representatives on the other to enter into any specific arrangement as to provisions for the general expenses of congress, I am authorized to say that all such expenses will be taken care of. I would suggest in this connection that should you decide upon the Twin Cities an early conference should be held on the important details, and pending such conference I can only say further that the interests of the Twin Cities will meet any proposition that may be advanced on behalf of other cities seeking this same honor."

Discussing prospects of having the congress held in the Twin Cities, Wheelock said: "I feel confident that the committee will decide in our favor."

"DRYS" GAIN TERRITORY.

Not a Saloon Left Between Mankato and Des Moines.

Mankato, April 17.—As a result of elections held this week, there is not a saloon between Mankato and Des Moines, Iowa, along the Omaha road, a distance of 201 miles.

In Blue Earth county, Lake Crystal, Garden City, Vernon Center and Amboy have voted out the saloons. They have been "wet" towns, but last year they went "dry," and this year voted to continue so. This week Amboy voted on the license question and defeated it on a tie vote, in a total vote of 128. It was the most strenuous campaign that the village has seen in years. Conveyances were sent miles to bring back voters temporarily sojourning in nearby villages.

Charles Chamberlain was elected mayor, Nathaniel Stephens, Stephen Lamos and Fred Appitz councilmen, J. H. Dredge recorder, Charles Ott treasurer, N. W. Sargent justice, and Charles Chamberlain, constable.

NEW MAYOR PUTS ON "LID."

Sunday and Early Closing to Be Observed at Sauk Center.

Sauk Center.—The "lid" is on in Sauk Center, the first time for some months. The day on which he took the reins of municipal government in his hands, the new mayor, Dr. H. F. Hennemann, held a conference with the saloon men and told them he expected them to obey the law in all respects. He expected them to close, he said, at 11 p. m. on weekdays, to keep closed on Sundays, and to have regard for other provisions of the liquor laws.

The conference was a good-natured one and the liquor dealers agreed to assist the mayor in the strict enforcement of the laws. No threats were made, but every man present showed the right spirit and all went away feeling kindly toward the new executive. Mayor Hennemann says he expects this condition to continue throughout his administration.

BUSINESS MEN ORGANIZE.

New Club Selects "Boost for Owatonna" as Slogan.

Owatonna.—"Boost for Owatonna" is the slogan of the newly formed Owatonna Business Men's Association, and the idea is to be carried out in every possible way. At a banquet held in the Hotel Owatonna the business men decided to push Owatonna in every way. Over 100 business men have been enrolled in the new club, and each month a banquet will be held.

DRIP! DROP! SPLASH!

There's that old roof leaking again. The wind got busy and blew off a few shingles and now the only thing to be done is to put the dishpan under the leak and catch the drip, drop and splash. The plaster is down in patches and the walls are ruined.

Cheer up, though—We're going to get a new roof of GAL-VA-NITE that won't leak summer or winter — rain or snow. It never needs painting or patching, won't rot, rust or warp and blow off. Any handy man can put it on and then we won't have any more of the grief of leaky roofs and the annoyance of drip, drop and splash.

GAL-VA-NITE comes in rolls complete and all ready to be put on. The secret of its ability to withstand the elements lies in the fact that it is waterproofed with three coats of mineral asphalt and weatherproofed with an "armor-plating" of flaked mica.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905 at the post office at Sunbeam Minn under the Act of Congress of March 3 1879

Thief River Falls is going to try to move the U. S. Land office up from Crookston, but as the government has their own building at Crookston it is not likely they will make the change.

The Thief River News claims that Al. H. Jester is not a farmer, and all we know about it is what we have heard, but of one thing we are sure, and that is that he could not possibly be as poor a stick as this district has been sending to the legislature,

Judgeing from a cartoon in the last weeks Thief River Falls Press the mud barrel in the division of the county fight must be on tap. We resolved to keep out of this campaign, but if we do get into it we will get Ole Olson and Sam Lessor to write a few articles for us, who have the reputation of being two the best mud throwers that ever struck northern Minnesota.

Andre N. Setor has been appointed postmaster at Highlanding. Which seems to be very satisfactory to John Eastman, of Thief River Falls, and he says to his henchmen. We have not one word to say against Mr. Setor, or his appointment, as we do not propose to follow the tactics of Mr. Eastman & Co., of trying to gain a point [illegible] injuring a neighbor, but there [illegible] a lot of fellows that feel [illegible] they have been handed a [illegible] and a package of garden seeds on this deal, and that it is a [illegible] long road that has no turn, and they will be looking for the turn.

Thief River Falls Next.

Chief special Officer Johnson, has closed the Plummer saloons, and Thief River Falls is the next station that the bootleggers and Indians will go to get their hides and grips filled up with bug juice. If they can get liquor at Thief River Falls the next man the saloon men will hear from will be Johnson in replying to a letter from mayor Enrow of Plummer Mr. Johnson says:

"After we issued the first order closing the Mahnomen country the bootleggers and Indians began [illegible] up to Plummer on the evening train and returning on the midnight train with grips full of liquor which they secured at your two saloons. Both of these saloons catered to this trade. Half a dozen sales were made in both of your saloons to Indians in the presence of my men

It might as well be understood now that these boundry lines will be extended from time to time as may be necessary. It is for the liquor dealers themselves to determin themselves how far they will compell me to go in this respect."

It can be seen from the above that Johnson is onto his job and means business, and Thief River Falls is the next station. The first to arrive will be the Indians and bootleggers, ready to pay a big price for whiskey. Then comes Johnson to close up the saloons. Will the saloonmen refuse to sell to the Indians and bootleggers? It may happen in a city of that size that a lot of saloons that are doing a legitimate business will have to close up because some unprincipled ones are selling to Indians and bootleggers.

Where Jester Stands.

Re-Apportionment,
Taxation of Sate Lands.
Rurial High Schol Board.
Good Roads and Bridges
Forest Fire Protection.

Re-apportionment is the paramount issue at this time, and until a fair, reasonable and honest re-apportionment is gained, the development of northern Minnesota must necessarily be retarded and our progress slow discouraging.

I believe that the chief obstacle to the more rapid development of northern Minnesota has been our numerical weakness in the the state legislature.

No extensive colonazation of unocupied lands of northern Minnesota can be accomplished until GOOD ROADS AND BRIDGES ARE CONSTRUCTED. I believe it expdient, proper and absolutely necessary that the legislature submit to the people a constitutional amendment providing for a general property-tax of one mill for roads and bridges, the fund thereby created to be distributed by the State Highway commission among the counties of the state of Minnesota.

The state lands should, in my opinion, be taxed, in addition to this one mill tax, for the purpose of building roads.

I do not believe that it is good business management for our state to loan all its surpluss money to other states. I think the board of investment should be compelled to dispose of enough of the bonds of other states held by this state to create additional roads, bridge and school funds and loan the same to its own counties for the purpose of further developing good roads, bridges and rural schools.

I believe that the legislature should establish a rural high school board, and secure an appropriation for the establishment of a system of rural schools including a course of agriculture, manual and economic training for the proper education of farm boys and girls in their home schools.

The state legislature should likewise appropriate a liberal and adequate sum annually for the use of our State board of Immigration in acquainting the homeseeker with our beautiful climate and fertil soil; give us a little less surplus funds and more settlers on our splendid agricultural lands.

With the terrable lesson of the Chisholm fire, and its millions of dollars lost and [illegible] of lives, and the distruction [illegible] of vast tracts of standing timber, farm homes and other property, we should have a better system of fire protection for our forests; a $3,000,000 loss annually caused by forest fires, on account of lack of funds in the hands of the state fire warden to supply the necessary protection against these devastating fires. This policy is I believe poor business management. Appropriate sufficent funds for this department to properly police there forests and to successfully cope with, and eliminate this awful waste.

If elected to the office of senator for the Sixty first district, I pledge myself to support the above mentioned issues, and to devote my time and energies for the best intererests of the district.

Babies' Bank Accounts.

In Schoenberg, a suburb of Berlin every baby is born with a banking account. No Schoenberg baby can help this even if it wants to. The municipal regulations provide that whenever the birth of a child is recorded the officials of the municipal savings bank shall issue a bank book in the said baby's name. The city itself then deposits 1 mark (about 25 cents) and immediately allows interest. With this nest egg the authorities believe that the parents of the child will be encouraged in thrift and that the baby itself will have a fair start on the road to wealth. No withdrawals are allowed in less than two years, and the ordinance applies to all children, whether they are members of poor families or descended from millionaires.

Babies are popular in Schoenberg.

The Lost Donkey.

In Turkey they tell stories about Nasr-ed-Din and his donkey. Once upon a time when the donkey was lost Nasr-ed-Din went about seeking it, at the same time giving thanks as he went.

"Why do you give thanks?" asked his friend. "I see no cause for thankfulness."

"Cause enough!" was the prompt reply. "Why, man alive, if I had been along with that donkey I'd have been lost too!"—New York Tribune.

Use For the Anchor.

"Captain," remarked the nuisance on shipboard who always asks foolish questions, "what is the object in throwing the anchor overboard?"

"Young man," replied the old salt, "do you understand the theory of seismic disturbances? Well, we throw the anchor overboard to keep the ocean from slipping away in the fog."

An Obliging President.

During a short lived revolution, says Harper's Weekly, there came to be the head of the government in a little Central American republic a man who was above all things courteous and who was, moreover, very anxious to gain the good will of the foreign consuls. One of the latter, having heard that a certain countryman of his had died, addressed a note to the head of the new government, in which he stated that his own government would be grateful for a certificate of death of the individual in question. A few days later the consul received this communication:

> Esteemed Senor—I blush to say that I cannot at present comply with your excellency's request for a death certificate of the man named. I sent my soldiers, but he got away, to my shame. I shall use every effort to catch him, however, and hope to send your excellency the desired certificate at an early date.

Needless to say, the consul lost no time in communicating to the obliging president the information that the certificate was undesired, in view of the fact that the individual was able to "get away."

A West Indian Wife Catcher.

As is customary with Indians the world over, the Caribs are expert basket weavers, and many strong and handsome baskets are to be bought in Roseau at reasonable prices if one finds the right shops, writes Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly. A peculiar instrument, made of basket straw and woven closely together so as to form a hollow tube ending in a thong of twisted ends and commonly dubbed a wife catcher, is also made and sold by the Caribs. By slipping the hollow end over a man's finger above the joint and pulling on the twisted end the catcher will tighten around the finger and the captive will be unable to release his hand. It is claimed that the Indians formerly employed this device as a handcuff for prisoners, using several for each hand and leading the captives by the fingers. Few tourists are permitted to leave Roseau without a wife catcher, for which sixpence is willingly exchanged.

When the President Lost His Hat.

The Crystal palace exhibition opened at New York July 15, 1853, was the first affair of this kind in the country for which foreign exhibits were solicited. The "big show" began with a procession, in which President Franklin Pierce, mounted, was a conspicuous feature. The hero of the day rode a mettlesome steed, and while proceeding up Wall street the presidential headgear, a new silk hat of the prevalent style, was incontinently tumbled to the pavement. Another horse recklessly stepped upon the unfortunate tile, crushing it out of the semblance to itself, besmearing it with mud—real Wall street mud. What was left of the misshapen and bedaubed hat was worn by the president, to the great amusement of the spectators, until a substitute could be secured.

A Witty Retort.

One day while dining with the secretary of the admiralty William IV., then heir presumptive to the British crown, said: "When I am king, sir, you shall not be the secretary of the admiralty, I promise you. What do you say to that, eh?"

"All I can respond in such case," returned the witty official, "is, 'God save the king!'"—St. Louis Republic.

Shortly before Dr. W. T. Bull, New York's famous surgeon, was stricken with his fatal illness a young east side physician called at his office and said that he was attending a poor girl over in his neighborhood who would surely die unless operated on. The family was too poor to pay and the doctor did not feel that he was equal to the operation. Would Dr. Bull give him a little advice as to how to proceed?

"Well, I guess we had better go and take a look at the patient," said Dr. Bull, putting on his coat.

They found the patient in an east side tenement, and in less time than it takes to tell it Dr. Bull had the room cleared and began the operation. When he was leaving the father of the girl met him in the hall and forced a quarter into his hand. Dr. Bull thanked him and went off feeling happier than if he had received a $1,000 fee. The girl got well.

The Third Way.

The Midland express was slowing up in Derby station. An American traveler, his finger keeping the place in his Baedeker, addressed the carriage:

"Can you tell me whether this place is 'Derby' or 'Darby?' I have heard both."

"The original and therefore the correct pronunciation," replied a precise looking passenger, "is 'Darby.' I have seen it spelled 'Darbie' on old maps. It is also the form used in common speech."

"You'll find 'Derby' is right," rejoined a passenger, less precise. "It's spelled like that, and the people up in the north of the county say 'Derby.'"

At this point the train stopped, and a porter bawled loudly into the carriage, "Dawby!"—Manchester Guardian.

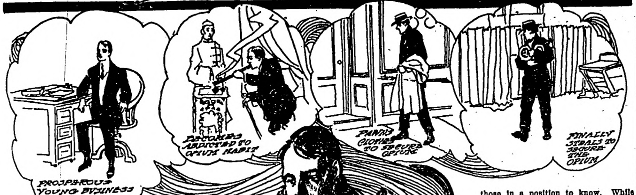
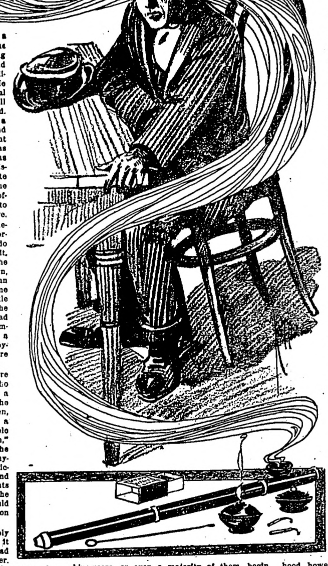
The CURSE of OPIUM

Copyright by [illegible] Pub. Co.

By ELLIOTT FLOWER



PROSPEROUS YOUNG BUSINESS MAN
BECOMES ADDICTED TO OPIUM HABIT
PAWNS CLOTHES TO SECURE OPIUM
FINALLY STEALS TO SECURE THE OPIUM



THERE came to a western state some years ago a young man of energy and more than the ordinary ability. He started a general store in a small place and prospered. He moved to a larger place and prospered. He went into politics and was successful. He was elected to the legislature, became president of the state senate, and in such esteem was he held that there seemed to be no office within the gift of the people to which he might not reasonably aspire.

Then opium claimed him as a devotee—not directly, but through morphine, one of its derivatives. I do not know how he acquired the habit, but the effect was soon apparent; he began slipping backward—down, down, down—much more rapidly than he had climbed up. In a short time he was out of politics, and a little later he was out of business. The foundations of success, that he had laid with such labor and pains, crumbled away; he became a "fiend," a pitiable wreck of an able man, a byword and a joke among the more thoughtless of those who knew him.

In time he reached a point where he "borrowed" from anybody who would "lend" him anything from a nickel to a dollar. So strong was the instinct of the man in him, even then, that he would accept nothing as a gift, but resorted to the miserable makeshift of entering every "loan," however small, in a notebook that he carried for that purpose. Could anything be more pathetic than the picture of a man of his attainments and early promise "borrowing" 15 cents or a quarter that both he and the lender knew he never would or could repay? Yet he always insisted upon this form.

This story would unquestionably have a more horrible ending were it not for the fact that the victim had a devoted and prosperous brother. This fact kept the "fiend" out of the gutter, for provision was always made for his material wants, although it was quite impossible to intrust him with the money for his board, lodging and other necessities. The brother did all that was possible to do to break the habit, and he finally succeeded in getting the unfortunate one into an asylum and under the watchful care of physicians. The habit was there broken, but the patient nearly died in the breaking. Furthermore, the harm had been done, and, although the man never went back to morphine, he never was anything but a miserable wreck, of no use to himself or to anyone else. His brother provided for him, but he continued to be a joke or tragedy (as you happened to look at it), to the day of his death, and he died miserably.

That's one story of opium in one form; a promising career checked in the very moment of its greatest promise, and then ruined. There are many others, where there is no devoted brother, that will surpass it in horrid details of degradation, but the very fact that this man, with all the uplifting influences and help that he had, fell so swiftly and so far makes his story impressive and illuminating.

Smuggled opium drifts naturally into those channels that lead to its vicious and harmful use. Duty-paid opium is also thus used to a large extent, but the smuggled article is almost wholly for that market. Indeed, without that market there would be little smuggling.

There are restrictions placed upon the sale of opium and its derivatives, but these restrictions cannot well be made to apply to what is contraband anyhow and liable to confiscation wherever found. Neither national nor state government can successfully regulate the sale and use of an article that neither is able to find. So smuggled opium naturally follows subterranean channels and reaches those who would have difficulty in buying openly. The very fact that it is contraband compels it to seek this market, and the very fact that this market is under the ban of the law compels it to depend largely upon the contraband article. The fact that it is cheaper than the duty-paid article also commends it, but that is merely incidental.

Smuggled opium it is for the most part that supplies the opium "joints," and the "joints" not only cater to the smuggled article, but create the habits that make the demand for it.

Morphine is a derivative of opium, and is properly to be considered therewith. Opium contains an average of about nine or ten per cent. of morphine. There are also other derivatives of opium that produce some of the sensations the "fiend" learns to crave, but morphine alone seems to take the grip on him that becomes a habit. He passes quite easily and naturally from opium to morphine, usually taking it internally at first, and then with the "needle." It is a saying among physicians that "a man is lost when he begins to use the needle." This is not to be understood as meaning that all opium-users, or even a majority of them, pass to morphine, or that all morphine-users, or even a majority of them, begin with opium. On the contrary, the morphine habit is distinct and is usually acquired without any preliminary "pipe" experience, but the road from opium to morphine is open and easy.

Cocaine, on the contrary, bears no relation to opium. It is not a derivative; it gives entirely different sensations; and it is a separate and distinct habit. It is allied to opium only in this: the morphine victim occasionally turns to cocaine for relief when trying to break himself of the morphine habit, and, according to the Chicago police, there are occasional "fiends" so far gone that they use both, finding that one so counteracts the other in its physical effects that it is possible to use more of each without danger. So, while cocaine itself bears no relation to opium, there is an occasional connection between the cocaine habit and the morphine habit, and the confusion that makes it necessary to include cocaine in a discussion of opium and its derivatives is not altogether without justification.

It is a common belief that desperate criminals are generally, or at least often, "dope fiends." When the perpetrator of a particularly daring crime is caught, it is not unusual to find the newspapers gravely announcing that he is a victim of the cocaine habit. It may be morphine, or it may be just "dope" generally, but it is usually cocaine. The more sensational the crime or series of crimes for which a man or a gang is responsible, the more certain we are to learn that "dope" had much to do with the making of the criminal or criminals. It takes such a hold on a man, we are told, that he will commit any crime to obtain it. Being in need of his cocaine or his morphine—opium itself has not such a bad name in this way—we picture him taking his magazine pistol and going out to get the necessary money.

I asked a Chicago policeman of much experience about this.

"If a dope fiend needed his dope," he said, "and had a magazine gun or any other kind of a gun, he'd hock the gun."

"If he had no gun?" I suggested.

"He'd try to borrow dope from another fiend."

"And if he couldn't do that?"

"He'd hock his clothes—all that he could get along without."

"And if he had nothing to pawn?" "He'd beg."

"Might he not become desperate enough to go out with a club or slung-shot and slug some unsuspecting wayfarer?"

"Rarely. One of them may occasionally do something like that, if very desperate and conditions are just right, but he seldom has confidence enough in himself to attempt it. Whisky would be much more likely to result in an act like that. Whisky gives a man nerve, dope takes it away. Dope fiends are almost invariably arrant cowards; they have not even the nerve to be good sneak-thieves. They are responsible for a lot of petty crime that calls for neither courage nor exertion, but that is all."

The impression that the use of these narcotics leads to insanity is also an error, according to those in a position to know. While under the influence of the drug a man may be temporarily insane, but, deprived of it, he recovers very much as a man gets over a drunk. He may be, and usually is, weakened mentally, but his condition is not such as to warrant his continued restraint in an asylum. In fact, he seldom gets to an asylum. Dr. Adolf Meyer, director of the Pathological Institute of the New York state commission in lunacy and head of the Phipps Research commission, quotes a report that shows only 12 out of over 1,500 cases investigated to be due to the use of opium, cocaine, etc., although he adds that private sanitariums would probably show a larger proportion.

Dr. Clarke Gapen, now located at Madison, Wis., but formerly at the head of the Illinois Eastern Hospital for the Insane, at Kankakee, could find only nine in a report covering four years, and 2,181 cases of insanity. "The effects, so far as the necessity for restraint are concerned," said Dr. Gapen, "are temporary. The Keeley cures and private asylums undoubtedly get a larger proportion than the public asylums, but even there they are usually discharged quickly. And most of those in these places are not classed as 'insane' anyway; they are merely there to be assisted in breaking a habit. Some should be kept under restraint, at least much longer than they are, as the only means of keeping them from dropping back into the old rut, but you can't hold in an asylum a man, otherwise mentally sound, just because he has a weak will."

Then what is the fate of the "dope fiend?" He seldom finds his way to the penitentiary or the asylum, so what does become of him?

Well, that question is answered in part by the story that leads this article, and here is another:

A young man of Los Angeles, California, was engaged to be married to a charming girl of the same city. She was of excellent family, a favorite in society, accomplished, and the future seemed rosy. He was a youth of excellent standing and good business prospects. But he had acquired the opium habit. He still had the manhood, however, to confess this to her before marriage. He was, of course, going to break himself of the habit, and she, womanlike, was willing to risk her happiness on the chance of reclaiming him.

They were married, and for a year, with her help he succeeded in keeping away from the stuff. The habit, apparently, was broken. Then, in some way, he drifted back to it. His wife tried again and again to lead him back to the decent and safe life, but it was the old, old story; the man who has not the strength to reform to get the wife he wants is very, very seldom reformed by her afterward.

The young wife became discouraged. The task was hopeless, the future was black, and there was nothing to keep up her courage. Now, a person in that frame of mind is the one to whom opium or morphine most appeals—if he or she happen to have knowledge of the effect. It is when the gloom is deep that the drugs that bring temporary solace seem most alluring. And the wife tried opium and opium claimed her.

They drifted away from Los Angeles, and no more was heard of them—until they were arrested in St. Paul for running an opium den. Another young man and another young woman were arrested with them when the police raided the place. All four were under the influence of the drug.

The following, also from the police report, seems to be at variance with the policeman quoted previously and also with the views of the physicians: "No crime, great or small, is beyond the reach of the person surrounded by such conditions."

The habit is sometimes acquired unconsciously, but this does not apply to opium smoking. No one ever "hit the pipe" without knowing exactly what he was doing, and no one ever had a legitimate excuse for trying it. Opium may be administered in other ways for an entirely proper and sometimes necessary purpose, and out of this may grow the habit, but it does not lead to the "pipe." On the contrary, it is much more likely to lead to the morphine needle. So opium smoking may be said to be the least excusable of the habits, and, except as it leads to morphine, it is the least harmful.

The morphine and cocaine habits, and other forms of the opium habit, may be acquired by one who takes no such deliberate or conscious risk. Reputable physicians are extremely chary these days of administering any of these drugs, avoiding them so far as possible; but they were not always so careful, and there are physicians now who are somewhat reckless in using them.

Physicians, however, maintain that neither the morphine nor the cocaine habit is often acquired as a result of the use of the drug under a doctor's directions in cases of illness or to allay pain.

Strangely enough, the white man is the victim of opium rather than the Chinaman.

With regard to the class from which it claims its victims, a report from the Pittsburg police to the International Opium commission puts physicians in the lead among professional men, with ministers second.

The Pittsburg report also says that thieves, gamblers and disorderly women furnish a large number of the victims.

"Young man," inquired her father, sternly, "will you give her a home like the one she has been used to?"

"No," replied the truthful suitor, "for there will be no grumpy father to come home and make every one miserable by his kicking over trifles and swearing at matters in general. There will be no mother to scold her from morning to night for wasting time merely because she wants to be neat. There will be no big brother to abuse her for not doing half his work, and no little brother to make enough noise to drive her crazy when her head aches. I rescued you from a watery grave and we were friends at once." He called the waiter. "Bring me the wine list," he said, explaining. ROOTS THAT NEEDED SOAKING

Pat at Least Told the Exact Truth in His Application for Whisky.

The town of Dedham is under prohibition law, apothecaries alone being permitted to sell alcoholic stimulants. The other day a son of the Emerald Isle entered a drug store there, and, taking a bottle from his pocket, asked for a quart of whisky. The salesman asked to what use it was to be put, and the reply was:

"To soak roots in it."

The order was filled, and the clerk, after handing over the bottle and its contents, inquired, in a conversational manner:

"What kind of roots are you going to soak?"

Pocketing the bottle, the customer said:

"The roots of my tongue, be jabers!"—Argonaut Storyette (1886).

Took Them at Their Word.

"Any article removed from the window," was the notice prominently displayed at an outfitter's shop. Attracted by it, a supercilious person entered the shop and asked to be allowed to inspect a particularly vivid tie in the front row. The salesman having disarranged the window and brought out the desired object, the supercilious person remarked: "Rather loud, isn't it?"

"Well, somewhat striking," agreed the shopman.

"I thought so," replied the visitor, as he turned to leave the shop. "It offends my taste. You needn't put it back. Good day!"

Getting Even.

William, aged five, had been reprimanded by his father for interrupting while his father was telling his mother about the new telephone for their house. He sulked a while, then went over to his mother and, patting her cheek, said:

"Mother, dear, I love you."

"Don't you love me too?" asked his father.

Without glancing at him, William said disdainfully: "The wire's busy."

Just the Job.

Old Argus was boasting about his hundred eyes.

"A useful man for an office," cried the populace.

"Yes," added Argus, "and I can keep half of them closed when I want to."

Here the populace clapped their hands wildly.

"We'll make him custom-house inspector," they declared.

The Worst of It.

"Oh, she's awful. Whenever she tries to sing a song she simply murders it."

"But that's not the worst of it. If she'd only murder it outright, I wouldn't mind, but she tortures it so long."

Ex-President Roosevelt
Delivers a Notable Public Address
At the Sorbonne, Paris

Paris, April 23.—Theodore Roosevelt's address to the faculty and students at the Sorbonne was as follows:

Strange and impressive associations rise in the mind of a man of the world who speaks before this august body in this ancient institution of learning. Before his eyes pass the shadows of mighty kings and warlike nobles, of great masters of law, and theology; through the shining dust of the dead centuries he sees crowded figures that tell of the power and learning and splendor of times gone by; and he sees also the innumerable host of humble students to whom clerkship meant emancipation, to whom it was well nigh the only outlet in the dark thraldom of the middle ages.

This was the most famous university of medieval Europe at a time when no one dreamed that there was a new world to discover. Its services to the cause of human knowledge already streched far back into the remote past at the time when my forefathers, three centuries ago, were among the sparse bands of traders, plowmen, wood choppers, and fisher folk, who, in hard struggle with the iron unfriendliness of the Indian-haunted land, were laying the foundations of what has now become the giant Republic of the West. To conquer a continent, to tame the shaggy roughness of wild nature means grim warfare, and the generations engaged in it cannot keep, still less add to, the stores of garnered wisdom which were theirs, and which are still in the hands of their brethren who dwelt in the old land. To conquer the wilderness means to wrest victory from the same hostile forces with which mankind struggled in the immemorial infancy of our race. The primeval conditions must be met by primeval qualities which are incompatible with the retention of much that has been painfully acquired by humanity as through the ages it has striven upward toward civilization. In condition so primitive there can be but a primitive culture. At first only the rudest schools can be established, for no others would meet the needs of the hard driven, sinewy folk who thrust forward the frontier on the teeth of the savage and savage nature; and many years elapsed before any of these schools could develope into seats of higher learning and broader culture.

The Growth of the Nation.

As the country grows, its people who have won success in so many lines, turn back to try to recover the possessions of the mind and the spirit, which perforce their fathers threw aside in order better to wage the first rough battles for the continent their children inherit. The leaders of thought and of action grope their way forward to a new life, realizing, sometimes dimly, sometimes clear sightedly that the life of material gain, whether for a nation or an individual, is of value only as a foundation, only as there is added to it the uplift that comes from devotion to loftier ideals. The new life thus sought can, in part, be developed afresh from what is round about in the new world; but it can be developed in full only by freely drawing upon the treasure houses of the old world, upon the treasures stored in the ancient abodes of wisdom and learning such as this whereof I speak today. It is a mistake for any nation merely to copy another; but it is an even greater mistake, it is a proof of weakness in any nation, not to be anxious to learn from another, and willing and able to adapt that learning to the new national conditions and make it fruitful and productive therein. It is for us of the new world to sit at the feet of the Gamaliel of the old; then if we have the right stuff in us, we can show that Paul in his turn became a teacher as well as a scholar.

Today, I shall speak to you on the subject of individual citizenship, the one subject of vital importance to you, my hearers and me and my countrymen, because you and we are citizens of great democratic republics. A democratic republic such as each of ours—an effort to realize in its full sense government by, of and for the people—represents the most gigantic of all possible social experiments, the one fraught with the greatest possibilities alike for good and for evil. The success of republics like yours and like ours means the glory, and our failure the despiccy, of mankind; and for you and for us the question of the quality of the individual citizen is supreme.

France a Great Teacher.

France has taught many lessons to other nations; surely one of the most important is the lesson her whole history teaches, that a high artistic and literary development is compatible with notable leadership in arms and statecraft. The brilliant gallantry of the French soldier, has for many centuries been proverbial; and during these same centuries at every court in Europe the "Free Masons of Fashion" have treated the French tongue as their common speech, while every artist and man of letters, and every man of science able to appreciate that marvelous instrument of precision, French prose, has turned towards France for aid and inspiration. How long the leadership in arms and letters has lasted is curiously illustrated by the fact that the earliest masterpiece in modern tongue is the splendid French epic which tells of Rolands' Doom and the vengeance of Charlemagne, when the Lords of the Frankish Host were stricken at Roncesvelles.

Let these who have, keep, let those who have not strive to attain a high standard of cultivation and scholarship. Yet let us remember that these stand second to certain other things. There is need of a round body, and even more need of a sound mind. But above mind and above body stands character, the sum of those qualities which we mean when we speak of a man's force and courage, of his good faith and sense of honor. I believe in exercise of the body, always provided that we keep in mind that physical development is a means and not an end. I believe, of course, in giving to all the people a good education, but the education must contain much besides book learning in order to be really good. We must ever remember that no keenness, and subtleness of intellect, no polish, no cleverness in any way make up the lack of the great solid qualities. Self restraint, self mastery, common sense, the power of accepting individual responsibility and yet of acting in conjunction with others, courage and resolution—these are the qualities which mark a masterful people. Without them no people can control itself or save itself from being controlled from the outside. I speak to a brilliant assemblage, I speak in a great university which represents the flower of the highest intellectual development; I pay all homage to intellect, and to elaborate and specialize training of the intellect; and yet I know I shall have the assent of all you present when I add that more important still are the common plane every day qualities and virtues.

War Sometimes Justifiable.

In the next place, the good man should be both strong and a brave man; that is he should be able to fight, he should be able to serve his country as a soldier if the need arises. There are well meaning philosophers who declaim against the unrighteousness of war. They are right only they lay all their emphasise upon the unrighteousness. War is a dreadful thing, and unjust war is a crime against humanity. But it is such a crime because it is unjust, not because it is war. The choice must ever be in favor of righteousness, and this whether the alternative be peace or whether the alternative be war. The question must not be merely, is there to be peace or war. The question must be, is the right to prevail? are the great laws of righteousness once more to be fulfilled?, and the answer from a strong and virile people must be "Yes" whatever the cost. Every honorable effort should always be made to avoid war, just as every honorable effort should always be made by the individual in private life to keep out of a brawl, to keep out of trouble; but no self respecting individual, no self respecting nation, can or ought to submit to wrong. Finally, even more important than ability to work, even more important than ability to fight at need, is to remember that the chief of blessings for any nation is that it shall leave its seed to inherit the land. It was the crown of blessings in biblical times; and it is the crown of blessings now. The greatest of all curses is the curse of sterility, and the severest of all condemnations should be that visited upon wilful sterility. The first essential in any civilization, is that the man and the woman shall be father and mother of healthy children, so that the race shall increase and not decrease. If this is not so, if through no fault of the society there is failure to increase, it is a great misfortune. If the failure is due to deliberate and wilfull fault then it is not merely a misfortune, it is one of those crimes of ease and self indulgence, of shrinking from pain and effort and risk, which in the long run nature punishes more heavily than any other.

Race Suicide a Crime.

If we of the great republics, if we the free people who claim to have emancipated ourselves from the thraldom of wrong and error, bring down on our heads the curse that comes upon the wilfully barren then it will be an idle waste of breath to prattle of our achievements, to boast of all that we have done. No refinement of life, no delicacy of taste, no material progress, no sordid heaping up of riches, no sensuous development of art and literature, can in any way compensate for the loss of the great fundamental virtues; and of these great fundamental virtues, the greatest is the race's power to perpetuate the race.

But if a man's efficiency is not guided and regulated by a moral sense then the more efficient he is the worse he is, the more dangerous to the body politic. Courage, intellect, all the masterful qualities, serve but to make a man evil, if they are used merely for that man's own advancement, with brutal indifferance to the right of others. It speaks ill for the community if the community worships these qualities and treats their possessors as heroes regardless of whether the qualities are used rightly or wrongly. It makes no difference as to the precise way in which this sinister efficiency is shown. It makes no difference whether such a man's force and ability betray themselves in the role of money maker of politician, soldier or orator, journalist or popular leader. If the man works for evil, then the more successful he is the more he should be despised and condemned by all upright and far seeing men. To judge a man merely by success is an abhorrent wrong; and if the people at large habitually so judge men, if they grow to condome wickedness, because the wicked man triumphs, they show their inability to understand that in the last analysis free institutions rest upon the character of citizenship and that by such admiration of evil they prove themselves unfit for liberty.

Justice In Toleration.

The good citizen will demand liberty for himself, and as a matter of pride he will see to it that others receive the liberty which he thus claims as his own. Probably the best test of true love of liberty in any country is the way in which minorities are treated in that country. Not only should there be complete liberty in matters of religion and opinion, but complete liberty for each man to lead his life as he desires, provided only that in so doing he does not wrong his neighbor. Persecution is bad because it is persecution, and without reference to which side happens at the moment to be the persecutor and which the persecuted. Class hatred is bad in just the same way, and without any regard to the individual who, at a given time, substitutes loyalty to a class for loyalty to the nation, or substitutes hatred of man because they happen to come in a certain social category, for judgement awarded them according to their conduct. Remember always that the same measure of condemnation should be extended to the arrogance which look down upon or crush any man because he is poor, and to the envy and looks down upon or crushes a man because he is wealthy. The overbearing brutality of the man of wealth or power, and the envious and hateful malice directed against wealth or power, are really at root merely different manifestations of the same quality, merely the two sides of the same shield. The man who, if born to wealth and power, exploits and ruins his less fortunate brethern is at heart the same as the greedy and violent damagague who incites those who have not property to plunder those who have. Of one man in especial, beyond anyone else, the citizens of a republic should beware, and that is of the man who appeals to them to support him on the ground that he is hostile to other citizens of the republic, that he will secure for those who elect him in one shape or another, profit at the expense of other citizens of the republic. It makes no difference whether he appeals to class hatred or class interest, to religious or anti-religious prejudice. The man who makes such an appeal should always be presumed to make it for the sake of furthering his own interest. The very thing that an intelligent and self respecting member of a democratic community should not do is to reward any public man because that public man says he will get the private citizen something which this private citizen ought not to posses. Let me illustrate this by one anecdote from my own experience:

A Anecdote of the West.

A number of years ago I was engaged in cattle ranching on the great plains of the western United States. There were no fences. The cattle wandered free, the ownership of each being determined by the brand; the calves were branded with the brand of the cows they followed. If on the roundup an animal was passed by the following year it would appear as an unbranded yearling and was then called a Maverick; by the custom of the country these Mavericks were branded with the brand of the man on whose range they were found. One day I was riding the range with a newly hired cowboy, and we came upon a Maverick. We roped and threw it, then we built a little fire, took out a cinch ring, heated it at the fire, and the cowboy started to put on the brand. I said to him: "It is so—and—so's brand," naming the man on whose range we happened to be. He answered: "That's all right, boss, I know my business." In another moment I said to him: "Hold on, you are putting on my brand." To which he answered: "That's all right, I always put on the boss's brand." I answered: "Oh, very well, now you go straight back to the ranch and get what is owing to you, I don't need you any longer."

He jumped up and said: "Why, what's the matter? I was putting on your brand." And I answered: "Yes, my friend, and if you will steal for me you will steal from me."

Now, the same principal which applies in private life applies also in public life. If a public man tries to get your vote by saying that he will do something wrong in your interest, you can be absolutely certain that if ever it becomes worth his while he will do something wrong against your interest.

France a Great Republic.

And now, my host, a word in parting. You and I beling to the only two republics among the great powers of the world. The ancient friendship between France and the United States has been, on the whole a sincere and disinterested friendship. A calamity to you would be a sorrow to us, but it would be more than that. In the seething turmoil of the history of humanity certain nations stand out as possessing a peculiar power or charm, some special gift of beauty or wisdom of strength, which puts them among the immortals, which makes them rank forever with the leaders of mankind. France is one of the nations. For her to sink would be a loss to all the world. There are certain lessons of brilliance and of generous gallantry that she can teach better than any of her sister nations. When the French peasantry sang of Malbrook, it was to tell how the soul of this warrior-foe took flight upward through the laurels he had won.. Nearly seven centuries ago Froissart, writing of a time of dire disaster, said that the realm of France was never so stricken that there were not left men who would valiantly fight for it. You have had a great past. I believe that you will have a great future. Long may you carry yourselves proudly as citizens of a nation which bears a leading part in the teaching and uplifting of mankind.

STANDS FOR BALLINGER.

Seattle Bar Association Says Magazine's Attack Was Unwarranted.

Seattle, April 23.—The Seattle Bar association adopted with but one dissenting vote a resolution condemning the action of an eastern magazine in publishing an article containing an attack upon Secretary Ballinger in which he was referred to as a "shyster."

The magazine article was termed an "unwarranted and vicious assault" upon the character of Mr. Ballinger and a reflection upon the good name of the bar and of the federal courts of Seattle.

The resolution reviews at great length the court records in the cases referred to in the article and the report of the special referee in bankruptcy and a previous investigation of the bar which exonerated Ballinger and declares that the charges made by the magazine are without any foundation whatever.

"There, whenever, in a prosecution under state law, a rule is allowed by the court in term time, or an order is made by the judge of such court at chambers, asking for copies of records or returns, the copies desired should be carefully prepared and forwarded to this office, with a full statement of all the facts and circumstances known to the collector, for determination as to whether the public interest requires compliance with the rule."

Must File New Petitions.

Pierre, April 23.—The state supreme court decided unanimously that a law attempting to divide the state into congressional districts is subject to the provision of the state constitution. This means that progressive Republican candidates of the state will be compelled to file new nomination petitions.

Western Canada As A Grain Producer

NEVER SAW SUCH FINE WHEAT ANYWHERE.

Gust. Anderson of Maidstone, Sask, was formerly of Minnesota and has been in Central Canada three years. On January 16, 1910, he writes:

"Arriving fifteen miles from Maidstone, I bought a couple of steers from a rancher, as my capital was not large, and with the two oxen I brought with me, I broke 25 acres which I put in crop in 1908 and had to clear some brush. I earned $45.00 by breaking fifteen acres for a neighbor and during the summer I put up hay and hauled timber and put up houses for other settlers. Notwithstanding a heavy frost on August 12th, I had 22½ bushels of wheat per acre and 60 bushels of oats. Off 35 acres of wheat in 1909, I got 27 bushels of wheat per acre and 1,300 bushels of oats off 20 acres. I never saw such fine wheat anywhere. We have plenty of rain between May and August and after August seldom any but dry warm days. Water can be had at from 20 to 40 feet and plenty of grass for cattle."

The evidence of Mr. Anderson is given because it is encouraging to the man of small means who is desirous of bettering his condition. It shows what can be done, and there is really but small limit to the man with push and energy to become wealthy on Canadian lands. And the grain that he raises is good. A press dispatch says:

The quality of the wheat continues to be the feature of the deliveries. In the total of 3,378 cars in the February inspections there were 2,847 of high grade stuff, a percentage of 84.28. For January the percentage was 82.21, and for the six months it was 88.6. This is an unusually high average, and it demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt that the farmers in this part of the Dominion still know how to grow first-class wheat. The crop of 1908 was considered good enough, and its average of contract wheat was only 70 per cent. Good weather throughout the season was an important factor, of course, in insuring the high quality of the grain, and it is not likely that atmospheric influences of so favorable a character will be encountered for a long time to come. The best that can be expected is that a fair average for a term of years will be maintained.

Giving Papa Away.

London is smiling over a story told regarding little Miss Asquith, who is at that tender age when indiscreet remarks are still pardonable.

Mrs. Asquith had taken her small daughter out to tea, and while her mother was talking to some friends at the other end of the room little Margaret endeavored to entertain a conservative statesman who sat near her.

"Do you like Mr. Lloyd-George?" she asked when there was a lull in the conversation.

"No," said he, smiling, "I can't say that I do."

"Neither does daddy," said the prime minister's 10-year-old daughter, blithely.

Stop Women And Consider
This Fact—that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.
The present Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, was for years under her direction, and has ever since her decease continued to advise women.
Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty causes them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. Such questioning and examination is unnecessary. Without cost you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.
MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION:
Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established this confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.
Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.
Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

A NEW STYLE IN THE PANHANDLE

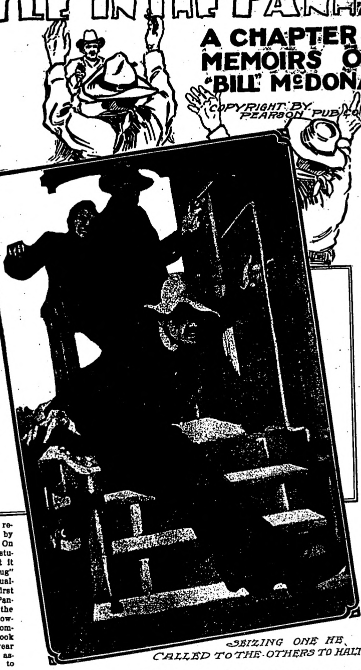
BY ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE



COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB CO

SEIZING ONE HE CALLED TO THE OTHERS TO HALT

CAPTAIN BILL boarded a train one day in Fort Worth just as it was pulling out of the station. He noticed two disreputable-looking characters crowding against a well-dressed old gentleman and an instant later heard the latter exclaim:

"I have been robbed!" At the same moment the two toughs started to leap from the car steps.

Capt. Bill seized one of the men and called to the other to halt. The man detained made an attempt to strike his captor, who promptly "bent" his gun over his head—mildly at first, then with force, bringing the offender to his knees. The Ranger captain now pulled the bell cord, brought the train to a standstill, turned his prisoner over to a policeman who had appeared on the scene, and set out in pursuit of the other thief, who by this time had obtained a healthy start.

Capt. Bill is built like a greyhound, with long hind legs, and a prow designed for splitting the wind. The thief was active, and making good time, but he was no match for a Ranger of that architecture. The distance between them closed up rapidly, and presently the fugitive, having reached what is known as "Niggertown," dived into one of the houses, causing a regular stampede among the inhabitants. Men, women, and a rabble of little pickaninnies fell out in every direction. Capt. Bill, now close behind, added to the excitement as he plunged in, only to find the room vacant. A quilt, however, hung across a second doorway, and stepping over to it, his six-shooter ready for emergency, he drew the hanging quickly aside. As he did so, he was confronted by a man standing on a chair, holding in his hand a bottle filled with some transparent liquid, which he was in the act of throwing. The crack of McDonald's revolver was followed by such a sudden collapse of the would-be vitriol-thrower, that the Ranger captain thought he had wounded him seriously, though his intention had been merely to disable the arm in action. Investigation showed, however, that the thief was only frightened; that the ball had grazed his arm, also his ear, cutting a hole through the rim of his hat.

Securing the vitriol as evidence, Capt. Bill marched his man back to where he had left thief Number One, only to find that the inexperienced policeman had allowed him to escape. He did not trust him with his second capture, but personally saw him safely locked up, and then set out for home by the next train.

Not long after, a package arrived one day in Amarillo, and upon being opened, it was found to contain a handsome gold medal, contributed by a prominent jeweler and others of Fort Worth.

This decoration was engraved with Capt. McDonald's name and official title; and an accompanying letter stated that it was awarded as a token of appreciation of his efforts in bringing criminals to justice, and as a premium for his superior swiftness of foot.

It was during the Panhandle period that Charles A. Culberson—son of the Dave Culberson who nearly 30 years before had cleared the boy, Bill Jess McDonald, from a charge of treason—was attorney general for the state of Texas. Capt Bill was at Quanah, one day, when he received notice from Culberson that the latter was anxious to locate the 100th meridian, preliminary to beginning a suit against the United States to test the claim made by Texas for Greer county—now a portion of Oklahoma. The attorney general invited Capt. Bill to accompany him as guide and body-guard, knowing him to be familiar with the district and capable of talkng care of such an expedition.

They left the railroad at Vernon, Wilbarger county, proceeded in a buckboard to Doan's Store on the Red river, and crossed over into Greer county. It was a pleasant drive across the prairies and Capt. Bill, who felt in good practice, beguiled the time by bringing down prairie-dogs, running rabbits, sailing hawks and the like, using his six-shooter with one hand and his Winchester with the other, riding along as they were, without stopping. To Culberson, this performance was amazing enough.

"Captain," he said, "that beats anything I ever saw. Why, I believe you could throw a nickel up in the air and hit it before it touched the ground."

McDonald smiled in his quiet way.

"Do you think so?" he said. "Well, I reckon I might, but I wouldn't want to waste a nickel that way."

Capt. Bill then gave a few exhibitions of what he really could do in the way of shooting, and Culberson declared without hesitation that there was not such another marksman in the state of Texas. The attorney general was enjoying himself immensely.

They camped that night, and next morning were continuing their journey toward Mangum, the county seat of Greer, when they began to meet men and women on horseback, evidently getting out of that section of the country without much waste of time. Capt. Bill inquired the reason of this exodus and was told a cowboy had killed an Indian over on the North Fork of the Red, and that the Indians were getting on their war-paint, preparatory to making a raid—Comanches and Kiowas.

"General," said Capt. Bill, "I'll have to look into this thing. You can go on to Mangum with the team and I'll get me a horse and go over and take a hand in this trouble."

"Not at all," said Culberson. "You've undertaken to see me through this trip and I'm not going to let you desert, now, Indians or no Indians."

"But I've got to, general. This here's a pleasure trip, and that's business. Them devils are goin' to start something over there and it's my duty as Ranger to investigate it."

Culberson laughed.

"Now, captain," he said, "you know very well that all you want is to get over there where there's a chance to give a shooting exhibition. You've got tired of hawks and prairie-dogs and want to try your hand on Indians."

A new arrival just then furnished the information that the offending cowboy had been jailed at Mangum, and that the Indians were likely to storm the jail. This settled the matter, for Ranger duty and inclination now lay in the same direction. McDonald and Culberson drove as rapidly as possible toward Mangum, then about 50 miles away, changing horses once on the hard journey. The town was well-nigh deserted, as nearly everyone who could get a gun had gone to the scene of the killing. Capt Bill therefore established himself as guard of the jail where the cowboy was confined, and waited results. Nothing of consequence happened. The country quieted down, Culberson and Capt. Bill presently returned to Quanah.

But a few days later when the attorney general had arrived in Austin, Capt. Bill received a package by express, prepaid. On opening it he was stupefied to find that it contained a "plug" hat of very fine quality. It was the first silk hat in the Panhandle, where the soft wide-rimmed cowboy Stetson predominated, and it took more courage to wear it than to face an assault with intent to kill.

But Capt. Bill was game. He was a "brother-in-law to the church," as he said—his wife being a member—and the following Sunday he put on the silk hat and accompanied her to meeting.

Their seat was up near the front, only a step from the pulpit—a good thing for the minister, otherwise nobody would have looked in his direction. As it was, all eyes were aimed toward Capt. Bill and his hat. The congregation had seen him come in with it in his hand, and they could still observe the wonder, for it would not do to put so fine a piece of property on the floor, while to set it toppling on his lap would be to court disaster. It seemed necessary therefore to hold it in his hand, raised a little, and at a distance from his body, in order that by no chance movement the marvelous gloss of it should be marred. The people of Quanah who attended church that day were glad to be there. They are still glad. They do not remember the sermon they heard, but they do remember that hat. Even the minister wandered from his text in his contemplation of the splendid exhibition. Those of Quanah who remained away from service on that memorable Sunday have never entirely recovered from their regret. For it was their only opportunity ever to see Capt. Bill in a plug hat. When services were over, the congregation crowded about for a nearer view. Cowboys stood up on the backs of the pews to look over the shoulders of those in front of them. Homesick women who remembered such things back east, shed tears. Many wanted to touch the precious thing—to stroke its silken surface, and among these were little children who insisted on rubbing the fur the wrong way.

Capt. Bill got out at last and headed for home. Once there, the gift of the attorney general was reverently damned and laid away. Somewhere in a secret stronghold, deep buried from mortal eye, it exists to this hour.

Culberson became governor in the course of time, and, remembering Capt. Bill's peculiar talents, was wont to rely upon him for special work in any portion of the state where nerve, determination and prompt, accurate marksmanship were likely to be of value.

During February, 1896, a national sporting event—a ring contest between Bob Fitzsimmons and Pete Maher—was advertised to take place at El Paso, a busy city dropped down on the extreme western point of the Texas desert, on the banks of the Rio Grande. Gov. Culberson, speaking for himself as well as for the better class of citizens in his state, announced that, so long as he was in office, Texas would not go on record as a prize-fighting commonwealth, and that the fight would not take place.

Whereupon there came a crisis. Certain interested citizens of El Paso had made up a purse of $10,000 to bring this event to the "Paris of Texas," and these and their friends were filled with indignation. Dan Stuart, prominent in Texas sporting matters and promoter of this particular event, issued a proclamation which bore not only the announcement that the fight would take place as advertised, but a picture of Dan himself. Also, it was declared that there was no law in Texas which would prevent prize-fighting, and the preparations for this particular event continued. Thereupon Gov. Culberson promptly called a special session of the legislature to pass a law which would be effective, and Adjt. Gen. Mabry ordered the State Ranger Service to assemble at El Paso to see that this law was enforced—it having been widely reported that Bat Masterson with a hundred fighting men would be present to see that fight come off. Then, when it was rumored that the contest would take place in either old or New Mexico—the boundaries of both being near El Paso—President Cleveland ordered the United States marshal of New Mexico to proceed to the vicinity of El Paso and guard the isolated districts of that territory, while the governor of Chihuahua took measures to discourage the enterprise in that state.

Things began to look pretty squally for the sporting fgraternity, both in El Paso and at large, and they were mad clear through. The city council assembled and passed a denunciatory measure, condemning the governor for asking for Rangers, the adjutant general for sending them and the Rangers for being present. It was no use. The Rangers went quietly about the streets, paying no attention to unfriendly looks and open threats as they passed along. They were quiet, but they were ready for business and the fighters knew it. Efforts were made by the principals and their friends to elude the Rangers, but with no other result than that a Ranger was appointed as a special body-guard to each of the pugilists, while a third, Capt. McDonald, took charge of Dan Stuart. They had nothing particular to do—these Rangers—except to be companionable and pleasant, and to stay with their men. Wherever Stuart and Maher and Fitzsimmons went their official attendants went with them, and even if not always welcome they were entertained with sufficient courtesy, for the person of a Ranger is sacred—besides, he is reputed to be quick and fatal.

Such sport became monotonous. The pugilists and their friends gave up the El Paso idea, and, still accompanied by the Rangers, took the train for Langtry, a point where the Southern Pacific railway touches the Rio Grande.

Arriving at Langtry, Stuart, Fitzsimmons and Maher were escorted to the Rio Grande, where, with all their fraternity, they crossed over to Mexican soil and the fight was pulled off in good order. It was a good fight, as fights go, and Fitzsimmons won with a knock-out landed on Maher's jaw; but it did not take place on Texas soil.

The absence of Capt. Bill and his Rangers from the Panhandle was construed by Kid Lewis as an invitation to rob a bank. He selected the City National of Wichita Falls for his purpose and with a partner named Crawford rode up to that institution one day about noon, and entering, demanded the bank funds. Cashier Frank Dorsey failing to comply with that demand, was shot dead; H. H. Langford, bookkeeper, was wounded, and the vice-president of the bank escaped by having in his left breast-pocket a small case of surgical instruments. This deflected the ball which otherwise would have entered his heart.

The robbers then secured whatever money was in sight—about $600 in gold and silver—then ran out the back door, mounted their waiting horses and galloped away. The citizens were by this time alarmed and a number set out in pursuit, full speed. There was a running fight, during which Lewis' horse was shot, but an instant later he was clear of it, and leaping behind Crawford the two went plunging away double, until they met an old man driving into town with a single horse, which they appropriated forthwith, leaving their pursuers a good way behind. Still farther on, they crossed Holiday creek and came to a field where a man was plowing. They now abandoned their blown horses and at the point of a gun took his heavy Clydesdale team and once more dashed away, making for the Wichita river. Their pursuers gained on the clumsy animals and fired several more shots at the fugitives, then decided to return and organize a posse, which they raised in short order. This posse followed the track of Lewis and Crawford beyond the Wichita river, to a place where the robbers had taken to the thick brush overgrowing the river bottom. Here the trail was lost.

Capt. McDonald, returning from the Fitzsimmons-Maher contest, via Fort Worth, had got as far as Bellevue in the adjoining county when he was met by a telegram, containing the news of what had happened that morning at Wichita Falls. He immediately wired the authorities at the Falls to have horses in readiness for himself and men.

The Rangers reached the city about two in the afternoon and mounting the horses, already waiting, dashed away in the direction the robbers had taken.

Presently they met the local posse coming back. The posse had given up the chase but was able to furnish information. Capt. Bill and his Rangers learned where the robbers had disappeared, and pressed on in that direction; the posse followed, a respectful distance behind.

It was now getting toward evening and would soon be dusk. It was desirable to make an end of matters by daylight, if possible, and the Rangers wasted no time. They picked their way as rapidly as possible, into the thick undergrowth of the bottoms, and suddenly in a bend of the river discovered the Clydesdale horses tied close to the bank. Their riders were believed to be close by, and the Rangers expected to be fired upon at any moment. Without waiting for any such reception, they charged in the direction of the horses, with no other result than that Ranger Sullivan broke a stirrup, fell, and with a fractured rib, retired from action.

Lewis and Crawford had abandoned the horses, and their trail led down the river bank. Finally the tracks led to the river where it was evident the bandits had crossed.

It was February and the water was very cold. Capt. Bill had not entirely recovered from the bullet wounds received in the fight with Matthews two months before, and was bent and debilitated, but he did not falter. With Queen and Harwell he plunged in and waded the icy water, chin deep, to the other side. Twice more the trail led to the river and crossed, and twice more McDonald and his men waded that bitter current.

McDonald now made up his mind that the robbers would be likely to cross a road that had been cut through the bottoms, and head for the Territory. He called to one of his men—Ranger McClure, who appeared just then, a little distance away—to get all the force he could and guard that road, while he, McDonald and Queen and Harwell, would continue to beat the brush and search carefully through the bottoms. At that moment Lewis and Crawford were near enough to hear this order, and the realization that it was Bill McDonald and his Rangers who were on the trail gave them a sudden and more severe chill than the icy water they had waded.

They had been heading for the Territory as McDonald suspected, but decided to change their course toward a creek that ran parallel with the river. On their way to it they were obliged to cross an open field, and though by this time it was night—between nine and ten o'clock—a full moon had risen and they were discovered by the men guarding the road, and fired upon. They returned the fire as they ran, but no damage was done on either side. Meantime, McDonald and his two companions, nearly perishing with wet and cold, having come upon a house in their search, had stopped to try for a cup of hot coffee. At the sound of the shots they rushed out. A horse was hitched at the door and Capt. Bill leaped into the saddle and hurried in the direction of the alarm. As he rode up, he saw in the moonlight a crowd, the local posse, gathered on the little hill overlooking the wheatfield where the robbers had crossed. The Ranger captain fully expected to find the captured or dead bandits in that crowd, and called out as he came up:

"Boys, where are they? Where are the robbers?"

"Right over there, Cap. They ran in the brush, over by yonder big tree."

"Well, boys, we've got them. We'll charge in there."

They pushed rapidly into the bushes without further parley—McDonald aiming for the tree, McCauley and McClure spreading out to the right.

Suddenly the captain found himself confronted by a creek, and looking across saw two armed men squatting in the weeds. They appeared to be on the point of raising their guns to fire, but with McDonald's appearance and his sharp command: "Hold up, there!" made from behind his own leveled Winchester, they were unable to complete the action. Their guns dropped into their laps—they seemed stupefied.

"Throw up your hands!" was the next order. The hands went up.

Capt. Bill stepped into the creek, about three feet deep, and, waded across. He noticed a bag, doubtless containing the stolen money, and observed that the outlaws had laid their cartridges out on a log for convenient use.

McCauley and McClure waded across and assisted in searching the prisoners. A purse of gold was found in one of the men's pockets. The bag on the ground contained the silver.

A reward of $2,000 for the capture of Lewis and Crawford was paid by the two banks of Wichita Falls. The local posse divided it into 32 equal parts, in which they shared pro rata with the Rangers.

IS GREAT TRAVELER

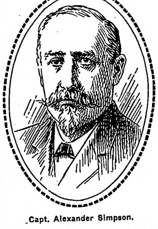
Capt. Simpson Has Circled the Globe Eighty Times.

Tests Ocean Currents With Bottles Thrown Into Sea and Gathers Valuable Data for Mariners —Sails 2,060,800 Miles.

Sydney, Australia.—"Round the World in Eighty Days," or 80 times round the world—which is the more surprising record? Jules Verne's well-known romance has made us familiar with the former adventure. Now Capt. Alexander Simpson, commander of the Pericles of the Aberdeen line of steamships, has just performed the latter feat. He has traveled no less than 2,060,800 miles at sea, a record probably unique in the annals of the mercantile marine.

All through his career the captain has remained faithful to the Aberdeen line; and since the days when he served his apprenticeship in their old teak-built and copper-fastened clipper, Queen of the Nations, a sailing vessel of 846 tons, he has witnessed some marvelous developments in the mercantile service.

When the Aberdeen line began to run steamers in 1882, Captain Simpson was appointed chief officer to the steamship Aberdeen, which was the first vessel to introduce triple expansion engines. A little later, while in command of the steamship Australasian, he began to take an interest in tracing the trend and speed of ocean currents, a hobby which has developed into so important a business that the United States government is about to bring out a new set of charts entirely drawn from his data.



Capt. Alexander Simpson.

These valuable records, which now fill many bulky log books, had their origin in a joke. On one of his voyages, nearly 30 years ago, a passenger was showing him an "Ally Sloper" watch he had received as a reward for sending in the requisite number of coupons to an illustrated comic paper. The captain jocularly remarked that he would try to earn a watch also, and accordingly had the coupon in the comic sheet manifolded and dropped overboard in beer bottles every day throughout the voyage.

On his return to London, Captain Simpson was surprised to find that many of the coupons had reached their destination, and he was duly presented with a watch. The proprietors of the paper also printed thousands of the coupons for the captain to use during his voyages. The results were astonishing and when he realized what extraordinary distances some of these sea messages covered before they were picked up, he decided to deal with the matter in a serious and methodical way. Every day a coupon was placed in an empty beer bottle, corked down and sealed by dipping the neck in molten marine glue, which sets hard. It was then thrown overboard at noon.

Messages of His Own.

When his supply of coupons had been exhausted, Captain Simpson prepared a message of his own, and the following was printed on a slip of paper in English, French, Spanish, German and Italian:

> This paper was put overboard for the purpose of tracing ocean currents. The finder to please forward, stating when and where it was found, and reap a just reward.

The captain's name and address at the offices of his company were appended. The "just reward" referred to used to consist of a copy of Froude's "Oceana."

Bottles have landed on the shores of Portuguese and French Guinea, on the coast of Africa, and, in fact, in almost every quarter of the globe. Many have been picked up by natives, who imagined they had secured a prize in the carefully sealed beer bottle, and their chagrin on drawing the cork can be easily imagined. A negro in Sierra Leone, who picked up a bottle and did not receive the promised reward, wrote to say: "I am sorry to insinuate you that the copy of Froude's 'Oceana' was not transmitted to me."

A bottle thrown overboard one day near the Cape of Good Hope was, after a long interval, found on the west coast of Scotland, having, it is supposed, gone round by the West Indian Islands, until it was caught by the Gulf Stream and carried to its landing place. Shortly after his appointment to the Pericles, Captain Simpson threw over a bottle when about 140 miles from Cape Town. It was washed ashore five months later at Parahyba, in the Brazils, having traveled 4,000 miles.

"Automobile Face" Scare Vanishes

WASHINGTON.—A little while after automobiles had come into general use, those newspapers which concern themselves more with fancy than with fact began to worry in their columns about what they termed "the automobile face." They had cartoons showing faces lined and marked, with squinted eyes.

These came, the papers said, from the habit of speeding cars. The papers figured that when a motorist gripped the wheel and started ahead at the strip of dusty road that was spinning under the car, there was so much tension that the lines and squint came without the driver's being aware of them.

The papers have ceased to worry about that now; for such papers do not worry about any particular thing for long. The automobile has established itself, and the human countenance remains about the same, according as the individual thinks and feels.

Which is apropos of horseback riding. Here in Washington the automobile is in more or less general use, but it is not crowding the horse as it is doing in Cleveland. Though Roosevelt is not here to keep the fashion going, to insist upon it by his example, horseback riding is much in vogue. And a majority of the riders are women. This brings us to the "horseback face." It is the haughtiest face we have seen. When the daughter of a diplomat, say, goes forth—riding astride by the way—she look neither to the right nor to the left. She poises her bare head erect, and spurs over the hills and far away.

Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth started from Mount Vernon, with a party of friends as her guests, recently. After luncheon they began a 300-mile journey, visiting Manassas, Shenandoah, and other places of historic interest. This announcement was made:

"It has been Mrs. Wadsworth's custom for the last six years to ride to her home in Livingston county, Tennessee. This spring, however, she has arranged for a short trip."

Suffragettes Mildly Storm Congress

I AM VERY BUSY
COME HERE!
CONGRESS
PETITION

"IT'S up to you," said the suffragists to congress, and it took 50 automobiles and a ton of paper to carry the message to the capitol. Those who expected to see a suffragette demonstration, as often occurs in the halls of the English houses of parliament, were disappointed.

With banners afloat and finery aflutter, in a procession of taxicabs nearly a mile long, the suffragists moved on Capitol hill and presented to congress 400,000 individual demands for votes for women. The mammoth national petition was divided into little ones, each nicely tied with a bit of yellow ribbon and grouped into little bundles of just the convenient size for a suffragette to carry under her arm.

Senators and representatives from every state received some part of that petition.

Some of the Iowa delegation were frightened when they heard some members of the house had refused to present the petition. They sent for Senator Dolliver.

"I would advise those members to take a day off and study the Constitution of the United States," declared the senator, as he shouldered an armful of petitions. "I construe that honorable instrument to make the presentation of petitions mandatory, but I would present them gladly even if no such duty were imposed upon me."

The senator made a sweeping bow and the women applauded loudly.

It had been intended to carry the petitions to congress in an automobile truck, making a very impressive-looking load.

"Goodness, no; some of them might get lost!" exclaimed half a dozen delegates. So while the procession was forming at the Hotel Arlington the petitions were unloaded again and distributed among the delegates. Meanwhile some of the enthusiastic did a little electioneering.

Admiral Schley passed by on his morning constitutional. Two suffragettes hopped out of a taxicab and pinned a "votes for women" button on the admiral.

"Thank you, ladies," said he, "I will co-operate."

Biscuits Not Harmful, Says Wilson

I WOULDN'T EAT THESE THINGS FOR A FARM BISCUITS

SECRETARY WILSON of the department of agriculture has assailed an old-time food notion. We have always been told—at least since food began scientifically to be studied—that hot biscuits were almost indigestible. Wilson has permitted to come from his office a pamphlet which sets forth that hot biscuits will never keep one awake o' nights because of a dull, heavy feeling in the stomach.

"As far as now known," says the bulletin, "the changes ordinarily occurring in good bread as it ages do not affect its digestibility unless it becomes so dry as to be unappetizing."

So that we need no longer run away from the little brown loaves as they come hot from the oven. We mind the time, indeed, when they went very well with maple syrup.

There has always been a suspicion that Doctor Wiley, who, Cannon has complained, wants a man to know just what he is putting into his stomach when he goes to take a drink doesn't live up to his pure food notions. And now it comes out that Wiley takes his luncheon at a restaurant known as "The Dirty Spoon." We never have eaten there, so that we can't tell about the usual condition of the pewter ware; but it is a fact that the other noon Wiley was seen in this restaurant munching a ham sandwich, washing it down with large gulps of coffee.

Hickory Stick "Tune" in High Court

OW

IS THE "tune of the hickory stick" in the teaching of "reading and writing and 'rithmetic" to be given the moral support of the Supreme court of the United States?

That is one of the questions the court will be called upon to decide between now and vacation days.

If the court gives its approval to this ancient method of discipline, Annie Kelley, an Illinois school mistress, will escape from a school squabble with no greater punishment than having been declared a bankrupt.

In 1906 Miss Kelley was teaching in the primary department of the public schools of Tolono, Champaign county, Illinois. According to a brief Miss Kelley has just filed in the Supreme court, Michael Burke, an eleven-year-old lad in her school, was not as good as he could be.

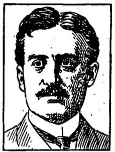
In the presence of the school, on December 6, 1906, so Miss Kelley tells the court, he "committed a breach of proper decorum by using indecent, vulgar and profane language at and toward your petitioner and jerking her upon the floor and, while in that position, striking and kicking your petitioner."

Then, after the principal had ordered her to chastise Michael, she flogged him with a pointer, and the state courts of Illinois found that she did not stop with the job half completed. In fact, when the Burkes brought a suit for damages against her, alleging trespass and other things, the state courts, in a general verdict, rendered a judgment against Miss Kelley.

The district court of the United States for the Eastern district of Illinois admitted testimony offered by Miss Kelley to show that this was not a debt incurred through willful and malicious injuries, and the court found it was not.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

HERRICK DEPLORES WASTE



Myron T. Herrick, former governor of Ohio, Cleveland banker, railroad director and possessor of enough of this world's goods to keep the wolf away from most any old door, has been mentioned again recently as a possible member of President Taft's cabinet.

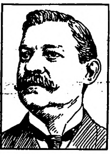
The sun hardly rises and sets in Washington without some rumor that a cabinet officer intends to resign and the latest of these involves Franklin Mac Veagh of Chicago, secretary of the treasury. Mr. Mac Veagh said it was news to him, but, despite his statement, some of the wiseacres proceeded to pick his successor and Herrick headed the list. Nobody doubts that Mr. Herrick would make a good secretary of the treasury. He knows the financial game from A to izzard and recently in a speech in New York showed that he has some ideas concerning how Uncle Sam's money matters should be handled.

Uncle Sam is extravagant and wastes his money, according to Mr. Herrick, who explained by way of preface that in the early history of the United States, where there were foreign complications, men of ability preferred government service because of the prominence it gave them. Later, when these foreign complications had disappeared and the country was once fairly started, this class of men preferred to devote their energies to commercial and industrial enterprises, which may be taken to mean that the former governor doesn't want a cabinet job at all.

"Many of those who have assumed the administrative functions of government," he said, "are so poorly qualified that the consequent waste and extravagance are appalling. The evidence is conclusive that in the national government itself there is a vast and growing amount of extravagance in administration.

"Senator Aldrich gives it as his opinion that the national government could save $300,000,000 a year if it were conducted on a business basis and managed as cleverly and efficiently as a large corporation. This amount is 40 per cent. of the whole cost of running the government and it is $33,000,000 more than all the dividends paid to all the stockholders of all the railroads in the United States."

POLICE CHIEF FOR LIFE



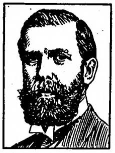
The board of police commissioners in St. Louis has chosen a chief for life. Col. William Young is the man who heads the police department of the fourth largest city in the United States.

Most everybody in St. Louis who knows Colonel Young at all calls him "Billy." He has been on the St. Louis police force 32 years, starting as a patrolman and working himself up round by round until he now enjoys a salary of $5,000 a year, an automobile and other accessories that go with such a job.

When Col. Edmond P. Creecy got into the mixup over the shortage in the police relief association's accounts, although he was in no wise guilty of any connection with the alleged embezzlements, Governor Hadley, who appoints the police board, decided that a change in chiefs was necessary.

Chief Young showed his common sense the day after his appointment when he announced that the police would not molest the Chinese of St. Louis for playing fan tan. He said a Chinaman had as much right to play fan tan as a German has to play pinochle. Then the new chief said he would permit boxing before regularly organized clubs. "Billy" Young is worth $100,000, according to reports, but his wealth has never interfered with his duties as a policeman. Many a poor family down in the old Soulard street district, where Young was captain for several years, knows how some of his wealth has gone to relieve suffering. Colonel Young was at the head of the regular police force on the world's fair grounds and his work in that respect helped a lot when the board investigated his record.

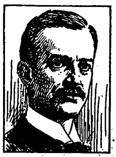
HUGHES FOR SUPREME COURT



Charles Evans Hughes, governor of New York, who in October will leave the executive chair at Albany to don the robes of the Supreme court of the United States, has been in the limelight ever since he conducted the probe that revealed the big scandals in the insurance world.

After he defeated William Randolph Hearst for governor, Mr. Hughes naturally got into line for the presidency, as a New York governor always is regarded as a possibility. Theodore Roosevelt, however, wanted his friend Taft to be president and the result is history. But Governor Hughes kept on doing things, as the race track gamblers, among others, can testify, and in 1912 it is more than probable that the name of Hughes would again be heard in connection with the presidency had not President Taft appointed him to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Justice Brewer. Governor Hughes recently announced that he intended to retire from politics and devote his attention to making money for his family. As governor he receives $10,000 a year and as a justice of the Supreme court he will get $12,000. He could earn much more practising law. On this account he hesitated about accepting the honor offered him by the president, but after being urged by Senator Root and other party leaders he took it.

NEWEST DEMOCRATIC HERO



"Great Scott! Why, if this thing keeps up, even John Dalzell and Gen. Harry Bingham ain't safe."

It was a Republican member of congress talking the day after James S. Havens, Democrat, was elected representative of the thirty-second district of New York. Following so soon after the election of Foss in one of Massachusetts' Republican strongholds, the election of Mr. Havens, who was not known outside of his own state, naturally created more than a ripple in the Republican ranks.

Mr. Havens, who made the high cost of living his battle cry, just as a lot of other Democratic candidates are going to do in the campaign that is to come this fall, sums up his election like this:

"This is not wholly a partisan victory. It is a victory over the things for which Cannon has stood and for the ideals which Governor Hughes typifies."

Mr. Havens is a lawyer and a former partner of the late Representative James Breck Perkins, whom he succeeds. He was born in Weedsport, Cayuga county, in 1859. He was graduated from Yale in 1884.

He went to Rochester immediately after graduating, was admitted to the bar in 1886, and has practised law ever since. Although active in Democratic politics, he has never before held public office. He is regarded as a typical Democrat of the old school.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Thief's Arrest Reveals Honest "Cop"

CHICAGO.—There is at least one policeman in Chicago who is absolutely on the square. In fact, he is so honest that an attempt to present him with part of the proceeds from a net job of "frisking" startled him, and he simply gasped for breath. The doctors say his heart may have been injured by the shock.

The policeman is "Honest Pat" Duggan of the Desplaines street station. Duggan was standing at South Jefferson and West Madison street talking to Henry Habalt, an old friend of the honest copper.

Knute Gabrelson, a friend of Habalt, but evidently a stranger to Duggan, approached and joined in the conversation. Now, even if Pat is honest, his eyesight might be a little bad. At least he did not see Gabrelson extract $50 from Habalt's pocket while directing the latter's attention to a pretty girl in a window across the street.

As Habalt walked away Gabrelson approached Duggan with perfect confidence and flashed the $50 before his eyes.

"Gee, but that was dead easy. Say, I feel like I had grabbed a baby's bottle. That guy is so green that he will loose his balance if he loafs around here long.

"And you ought to see the roll. I bet he's got 200 beans in his inside pocket, which won't worry him by night. Here, you take $25 of this and when I get the roll I will split. Have a drink."

When Gabrelson began to talk the policeman smiled a wise smile and twirled his club as he assumed a pose. Of course the fellow was only fooling. He wouldn't dare tell a policeman anything like that.

But as the fellow proceeded with his line of talk something began to loosen up in Duggan's head and he turned pale. Then he gasped and finally grasped a beer sign for support. By the time Gabrelson had finished the policeman had recovered enough to connect Gabrelson's head with a night stick and call a patrol wagon.

Parrot Used as Collector of Bad Bill

GWAN
SAY THAT AGAIN YE-

NEW YORK.—A credit man, upon the beginning of his connection with a large wholesale grocery house, found on the books an account of long standing, amounting to some $700, against the proprietor of a general store in a western state. The merchant was a man financially able to pay the bill ten times over and never miss the money. On account of some grievance against the house—they were unable to straighten it out because he would never tell them what it was—the old man flatly refused to pay and told them to sue for their money.

The new credit man was a fellow who believed that every man—like Achilles of old and his heel—had a vulnerable spot somewhere, and he set himself to the task of discovering the weak spot in the makeup of the old merchant. He found it—it was parrots!

Two months later the old merchant received a handsome South American parrot with the compliments of the firm with which he was at outs.

It took the parrot about a week to get used to the surroundings, then, one morning when the old man was playfully stroking the back of its head and admiring its beautiful plumage, it cocked one eye up at him knowingly and in guttural, croaking tones inquired:

"Why don't you pay Blank's bill?"

The old man nearly fell from his chair. At first he was furious, but little by little the funny side of the situation grew upon him.

The next day the old merchant sat himself down and penned a letter to Blank & Co., whose credit man gave every evidence of excessive pleasure when he opened, for it read:

"Find inclosed check to balance my account. Send down your traveling man and we'll kiss and make up again. I guess, after all, that you're no bigger robbers than the rest of them. That parrot is a —bird!"

Night Watchman "Worked" by "Coeds"

CHICAGO.—Even policemen are human, although they do not always show it. If anything can bring out their human qualities it seems that a lot of fair but sometimes recalcitrant "co-eds" would. This is why some one has advanced the theory—just theory, mind you—that some of the girls at Willard hall, the girls' dormitory at Northwestern university, have so placed themselves in the good graces of the night policeman stationed at the door that they may come in a little late and not be reported.

The theory came to the notice of Miss Mary Ross Potter, dean of women, and she lectured the girls collectively and some individually about the rule that they must be in by 10 p. m., unless having special permission otherwise. She also has enforced more strictly the rule governing young men callers.

Each night when the young women leave the hall they are required to register their names in a book with the maid. When ten o'clock comes the maid writes in a smaller book the names of those not yet in and hands it to the policeman. He, Frank Krueger, is supposed to check off the tardy ones.

Nobody, so far as is known, has charged Officer Krueger with neglect of duty, but it is known that some of the girls have staid out late. Miss Potter admits this and says she knows more than the girls suspect.

"Of course," said one, "I can't recall the names of any girls who stay out after closing hours, but there are plenty of them that have a 'stand-in' with that policeman and they make good use of it, too."

Chicken Explodes, Butcher Is Sued

NEW YORK.—It would disconcert anybody to have a roast chicken, nicely browned, explode with a loud noise just as the knife was inserted in it, and it would startle the most intrepid epicure if the explosion was followed by a gas that drove everybody from the room.

Therefore, it is not to be wondered at that Mrs. Elizabeth Jones of Brooklyn was much agitated when a chicken she had bought from Butcher David Kahn and which was bought, dressed and cooked under her personal supervision, should burst like a black hand bomb just at the instant she was about to carve it.

Mrs. Jones had invited company to dinner and got the chicken for the especial benefit of her guests. Mrs. Jones jabbed the fork into one of the wings of the fowl to steady the bird, brandished the carving knife aloft, and in her most winning way asked:

"Mrs. Smith, will you have some of the white meat?"

Mrs. Smith smiled her acquiescence and Mrs. Jones plunged the point of the blade into the chicken just below the breast bone.

Instantly there was an explosion like that of a big firecracker, and the interior decorations of the bird were scattered to the ceiling. Mrs. Jones and her guests pulled away from the table immediately and looked at the chicken with bulging eyes.

Mrs. Jones went out and got a policeman and told him to go into the dining-room and see for himself. He did so, and by an exhibition of unparalleled heroism got the fowl into a bag and took it to the station house.

Then Mrs. Janes got out a warrant for Butcher Kahn and he was arraigned in the New Kersey avenue station. Magistrate Hylan held him in $500 for explanation.

SWAMP LANDS.

An enterprising citizen of New Orleans has obtained title to 1,000,000 acres of swamp lands in Louisiana, and in concert with the Illinois Central and Southern Pacific railroads and some capitalists of Chicago it is proposed to raise $1,500,000 to expend in draining the swamp, says Washington Post. The soil is the richest in the United States, and equal to any in the world. It is estimated that with proper tillage it will produce over three bales of cotton to the acre, whereas the average crop of that staple is less than one-half bale to the acre. In fertility the soil of the swamp lands near the Mississippi is practically inexhaustible, and there are 7,000,000 acres of such lands in Louisiana alone, or more than 10,000 square miles. Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa and the states farther north have immense areas of swamp lands more fertile than Goshen, which are now practically worthless for lack of drainage. Upon the idea that prompted the act levying a tax on oleomargarine, our government can do anything that is expedient. It has been held that the government can conserve waters in the woolly west to irrigate the public domain and subdue it to the husbandman, and it has been argued that it should remove water from lands in the Mississippi river bottoms to render them fit as field, garden and orchard, but nearly all the swamp lands of the great valley are the property of individuals, and that fact may serve to deter congress from the enterprise.

In our exploitation of the west and southwest the "south" has been largely neglected, but it has not been forgotten, and recuperation has now started new development. The south is coming into its own again and is attracting both wealth and energy from other quarters, while its home production has assumed in value enormous proportions, says Omaha Bee. The latest feature in this development is the establishment of experimental farms in many southern states for educational purposes along scientific lines. The south is ambitious and is omitting no effort to secure the best and most up-to-date methods and equipment for the full utilizing of its resources. The climate and the soil of the south are suited to a marked degree to the development of agricultural pursuits. Richer soil is to be found in but few places. Timber abounds, the summer season is long, the rainfall is plentiful and everything that nature can put at the disposal of a country to make it agriculturally productive is there.

Some of the possibilities when aerial navigation becomes common and general are suggested by a recent performance at—or above—the frontier between the United States and Mexico. A man in a flying machine made half a dozen or more trips back and forth between the two countries, and the customs officers of both nations looked on and were powerless to interfere with him. The aviator made no attempt at smuggling, but had he been so inclined he could have carried goods subject to duty and defied the laws. Obviously there is likely to be some sort of international understanding regarding the use of airships which pass from one country to another.

The cruise around the world of the American battleship fleet had so many valuable results that it is not out of order to have a repetition of the experience to a certain extent. It is announced from Washington that the Atlantic fleet will visit the Mediterranean sea next fall. The vessels will go in division formation, to give the commanders, officers and men the advantage of maneuvering in that shape. Among the ships will be some which made the world tour, and Europe will have another opportunity to see what a first-class American naval force looks like. The excellent impression made by the battleships is likely to be deepened.

The catch of 45,000 seals by the steamer Florizel, reported from St. Johns, N. F., need cause no worry as to the future of seal life. The seals taken in the North Atlantic ocean are not the fur seal, but an amphibious animal that is plentiful in comparison, and in little danger of extermination, notwithstanding heavy annual onslaughts.

EDWARD VII KING OF ENGLAND DIES SUDDENLY

SUCCUMBS TO ATTACK OF BRONCHITIS WITHIN A DAY AFTER BEING IN BEST OF HEALTH.

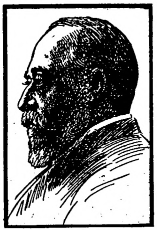
SERVED HIS COUNTRY LESS THAN TEN YEARS

Famous the World Over As a Traveller, Sportsman, Social Arbiter, and Free Mason and Popular With All Classes.

London, Eng. — King Edward VII died at 11:45 p. m. Friday. The Prince of Wales is king, assuming the title of George V, and took the oath before the privy council at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Gathered around the bedside of the dying king were the queen and princesses. No hope had been held out throughout the day for the recovery of his majesty, whose death, it is believed, was due to pneumonia, following bronchitis contracted shortly after his return from Biarretz.

Throughout the empire the word was flashed, and flags are floating at half mast the world over. Besides the social gloom which the king's death casts over England, several important and long planned official events must be abandoned. The Prince and Princess of Wales were to go to South Africa with the squadron, and the prince was to open the first parliament of the new confederation, but his accession to the throne will prevent this.



The Late Edward VII.

The death of his majesty must also mean the abandonment of the principal functions of former President Roosevelt's tour. The official receptions and the embassy entertainments will be cancelled, and the presentation of the freedom of the city and the luncheon at Guild Hall probably will be given up.

The Prince of Wales succeeded to the throne immediately, according to the laws of the kingdom, without official ceremony. His first official act was to despatch to the lord mayor the announcement of his father's death, in pursuance of custom. His telegram read:

"I am deeply grieved to inform you that my beloved father, the king, passed away peacefully at 11:45 tonight."

(Signed GEORGE."

His Last Words.

One the last utterances attributed to King Edward was:

"Well, it is all over, but I think I have done my duty."

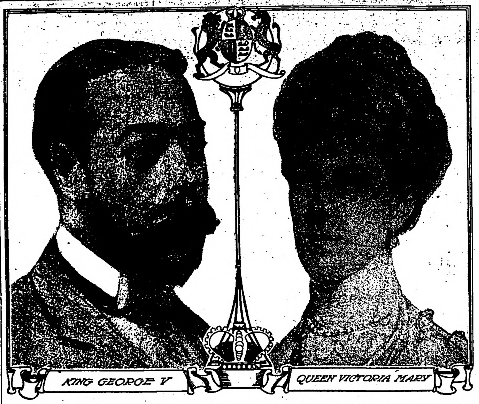
The political situation is terribly complicated by the death of the king. His world-famed diplomacy was believed equal to the task of settling the disputes between the Liberals and Conservatives, but no such strength is credited to the new king, George V.

It is predicted that the abolition of the house of lords may follow the death of the king.

Shortly after the king's death, messages of condolence began pouring in from all over the world. The following was received from President Taft:

"In the sad occasion of the death of Kind Edward, I offer to your majesty and to your son, his illustrious successor, the most profound sympathy of the people and of the government of the United States, whose hearts go out to their British kinsmen in this, their national bereavement. To this I add the expression to your majesty and to the new king of my own personal sympathy and of my appreciation of those high qualities which made the life of the late king so potent in influence toward peace and justice among nations."

Edward VII, who ascended the throne upon the death of his mother, Queen Victoria, Jan. 22, 1901 was born in Buckingham palace Nov. 9, 1841. He was christened Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, receiving the name Albert after his father and Edward after the Duke of Kent, his grandfather. The title of Duke of Cornwall fell upon him at birth, he being the eldest son of his ruler, and he was made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester before he had lived a month. The other titles that fell upon him were the Duke of Rothsay, Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Prince of Saxony Earl of Carrick, Earl of Dublin, Baron Renfrew and Lord of the Isles.



The baptism was performed in St. George's chapel, Windsor, with great ceremony in January, 1842, and the early education of the child who was heir to the throne was intrusted to Lady Lyttleton who cared for the mental training of the prince, as well as the royal children who followed him, until he was six years old.

The following year Rev. Henry Mildren Birch was appointed tutor and served until 1851, when he was succeeded for seven years by Frederick W. Gibbs. His royal highness studied for a session at Edinburgh, entered Christ church, Oxford, where he attended the public lectures for a year, and afterwards resided for three or four terms at Cambridge for the same purpose. On his eighteenth birthday he was made a colonel in the army, with Colonel Bruce as his governor. He received the Order of the Garter on the same day.

The first official appearance of the young prince was at the opening of the coal exchange in London, Oct. 30, 1849. Queen Victoria was detained by sickness and was represented by the prince and the princess royal. He also assisted in the opening of the exposition of 1851, and was present with the queen at the house of lords for the first time when the answers to her message announcing the opening of the Crimean war were read.

As Prince of Wales his majesty traveled extensively. At the age of seven he journeyed to Ireland for the first time, and in 1855 visited Paris with his parents and the princess royal. With his tutor the prince walked through the west of England, incognito, when 14 years old, and later visited for some time in Germany. Many journeys to all parts of the continent were taken, the prince generally going incognito under the name of Baron Renfrew. The prince decided to visit Canada and the United States in 1860. Arriving at St. John's, he visited Niagara falls and traveled west to Chicago, where he was met enthusiastically, although he followed his custom of using the name of Baron Renfrew.

The prince went from Chicago to St. Louis and arrived in Washington late in October, where he met President Buchanan and spent several days in the White House. He visited other places of interest in the east and sailed for home from Portland, Me. The following year he again traveled on the continent of Europe and later spent some tome in Egypt and the holy land.

While on this visit to Europe the Prince of Wales met the Pricess Alexandra of Denmark, and their betrothal was announced Sept. 9, 1862. The wedding ceremony took place in St. George's chapel at Windsor, March 10, of the following year, and the prince and his wife furnished an establishment at Sandringham. Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, was the first child, born in 1864. He died in 1892. The other children in the order named were Prince George of Wales, born 1865; Princess Louise, Duchess of Fife, born in 1867; Princess Victoria, born 1868; Princess Maud, Queen of Norway, born in 1869, and Prince Alexander, who was born in 1871 and died the same year.

Ireland received a visit from the Prince of Wales and his wife 5 years after they were married, and in 1868 they traveled extensively through the east, returning through Russia. The prince made his memorable visit to India in 1875.

The death of William I of Germany caused the celebration of the prince and princess' silver anniversary to be a quiet one. The eldest daughter. Princess Louise, was married to the Earl of Fife in 1889. The prince figured as a witness in the famous bacarat case in 1891. The Princess Maud of Wales was married to Prince Charles of Denmark in 1894 and in 1906 they became king and queen of Norway.

Coronation In 1902.

Upon the death of Queen Victoria in 1901 the Prince of Wales assumed the title of King Edward VII. With Queen Alexandra he was crowned with great ceremony in Westminster Abby, August 9, 1902. On the eve of the date orignally fixed for the coronation, which was earlier in the summer, the king suffered an attack of illness and was obliged to undergo a serious operation. For a time it was feared his life was in danger.

As a ruler the king displayed the same tact and political sagacity that had distinguished him for so many years as Prince of Wales.

All his life long his majesty was a champion of outdoor sport, and each year his stable carried away a list of the most costly prizes offered by the English turf. In 1900, while still Prince of Wales, he headed the list of winning owners, gaining the "triple crown" by capturing the Derby, the St. Leger and the Two Thousand Guineas races. His winnings for the season amounted to $148,000. Horse racing was one of his principal pastimes and his influence did much to make the English turf freer from fraud than that of any other racing country in the world.

That the king was deeply interested in both domestic and foreign politics every one knew. As Prince of Wales he frequently visited the house of lords and there were few more attentive listeners to the debates. But whether he leaned toward the conservatives or toward the liberals, whether he favored the nationalist cause in Ireland or that of the Orangemen, whether he preferred an understanding with France to one with Germany, or vice versa, few could say positively. This was because his attitude on public questions was so rarely expressed. When he believed it wise and for the public good to make his influence felt in affairs of state he went about the business so quietly that few were aware that he had anything whatever to do with bringing about the results. He took no pains, however, to conceal his belief in a understanding between Great Britain and the United States, which friendly feeling for America and Americans he inherited from his mother.

King Edward was the most prominent living Free Mason. For more than thirty-five years he was identified with the order, during which time he served as grand master of the grand lodges of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and also grand prior of the order of Knights Templar in England and grand patron of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite of Free Masonry in the United Kingdom, having received the thirty-third and last degree in that branch of Free Masonry. There was not a member throughout the world who took a deeper or more active interest in the affairs of the Masonic order. Masonry everywhere received his hearty and unqualified support and his presence at important Masonic functions was always sought for and usually with success.

From the time of his marriage he was the leading figure in English society, and to a great extent its arbiter. Possessed of unrivaled and unfailing tact, of an extremely level head, and of knowledge of the world, his majesty's position as Prince of Wales and as king endowed him with a social power superior to that enjoyed by any continental sovereign.

The English people are indebted to King Edward for many reforms, brought about by him in his role as social arbiter, and which afforded an excellent indication of his character. It is, thanks to him, for instance, that hard drinking and coarseness of language went out of fashion. And if a higher tone of morality and a greater sense of proprity now prevail than in the earlier half of the last century, it is in a great measure due to the unobtrusive but excellent care which his mejesty took to keep out of society those who had forfeited their rights to remain within its pale. He was as ready as any other votary of pleasure to meet them in the sphere to which they had descended and to treat them there with kindness and consideration, but he would not tolerate their presence in houses that were respectable, and took quiet means to eliminate them therefrom.

One of the most pleasing traits of King Edward was his singulaly happy home life. He was the object of many stories of a more or less slanderous nature, which he always considered it beneath his dignity to deny or refute. But it was only necessary to see the king among his family at Sandringham, and to observe the affection with which his nephews and nieces spoke of "Uncle Bertie," to realize that much that was spoken and written about him was absolutely false.

King George V.

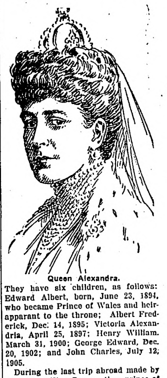
George V. Prince of Wales, who succeeds to the throne, was born at Marlborough House, London June 3, 1865, and was the second son of King Edward. He became heir-apparent to the throne on the death of his elder brother, the Duke of Clarence and Avondale on Jan. 14, 1892.

Prince George Frederick Ernest Albert, his full name, began his career as a cadet of the Royal Navy on the training ship, Brittannia when twelve years of age. In 1887 he and his brother started on a two years' cruise around the world on the Bacchante, an experience which he repeated in 1901 when as Duke of Cornwall and York, he made a tour of the British Colonies on the Ophis.

After the cruise of the Bacchante, Prince George was stationed on the Coda, rose to lieutenant in 1885 and commander in 1891. In 1891 the ancient dukedom of York was revived in his favor, he being the twelfth holder of the title since its creation by Edward III.

He was made a captain in 1893 and he then ended his sea service, although he was raised to the rank of rear-admiral in 1900.

He was married to his second cousin, Princess Victoria Mary, daughter of the Duke of Teck, July 6, 1893.



Queen Alexandra.

They have six children, as follows: Edward Albert, born June 23, 1894, who became Prince of Wales and heir-apparent to the throne; Albert Frederick, Dec. 14, 1895; Victoria Alexandria, April 25, 1897; Henry William, March 31, 1900; George Edward, Dec. 20, 1902; and John Charles, July 12, 1905.

During the last trip abroad made by his father, King George, then prince of Wales, had to take on his shoulders some of the kingly duties. The result startled England.

New King a Surprise.

The new king previously had been best known for the things he didn't do. Even the most loyal supporters of the royal family did not take him seriously. Good-hearted, quiet, reserved, unenergetic, perhaps a little negative—this was the general estimate.

But when Prince George took the tiller, he forced his critics to admit they had underestimated him. He showed evidences of careful study of European and colonial conditions, he was widely read on every subject. He made speeches that were clear, straightforward, illuminating, forceful. He showed himself one of the best informed men in England on naval affairs.

Marries His Brother's Fiancee.

The prince came into the world a "younger son." Death in 1892 made him heir to the British throne by carrying off his brother, the duke of Clarence, who was 10 years his senior.

Prince George, then 27, succeeded his brother in the affections of the popular Princess May of Tech, as well as in the line of succession. Just a month before the duke of Clarence was to marry the Princess May an attack of influenza carried him off. The marriage of Prince George and the princess was at the wish of Queen Victoria.

Queen May, whose full name is Victoria Mary, was destined for a throne from her birth. She was born in the royal palace of Kensington on May 26, 1867. She is the mother of six children.

New King a Family Man.

The new king and queen are very devoted, and are seen everywhere together. Queen May is pretty, a great lover of her home, and is thoroughly English in her thinking and tastes. She knows no other language.

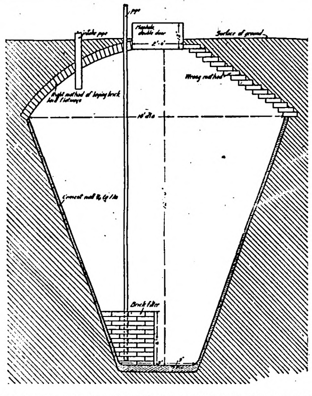
Farm School Letter

Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

A Cistern On the Farm.

A cistern on the farm can be easily and cheaply constructed. Most of the work can be done by the farmer himself, while the materials necessary are of an inexpensive character, consisting chiefly of a few barrels of Portland cement and a few bricks. Mr. C. E. Brown, of Elk River, tells the Farmers' Institutes how successfully he constructed one in a sandy soil. He first dug the cistern full size and depth desired, but gave the sides more slant than he would have done in a clay soil. This to prevent caving. He says the walls were made by plastering against the sides of the dirt with a good, rich cement mortar. Two coats were used. The right coat consisted of one part cement and three parts screened, sharp sand. The second coat was made of one part cement and two parts sand. The first coat was allowed to "set" a little while before the second one was put on, but both were applied in one day. Do not trowel the first coat; just take what the trowel will hold and make a straight stroke side ways (not up and down), because the end of the trowel will dig into the sides of the cistern. Leave no place uncovered in either coat. The second coat can be smoothed a little more than the first one, but it cannot be made smooth enough with a trowel. While the mortar is still soft take a whitewash brush, wet it and brush the wall.



Cut showing construction of cement cistern in sandy soil. Note proper and improper method of laying brick for arch.

Leave the bottom until the cistern is otherwise all done and then clean out all the rubbish. Now, cement the bottom partly over, and lay a board on that part to stand on while putting the cement on the remainder of the bottom. Make the bottom about three inches thick.

After the cement is set enough, say the next day, build the filter. No cistern is complete without one. It may be about two bricks or sixteen inches square and two feet high. The filter is simply a brick box in the bottom of the cistern into which the pipe connected with the pump extends. It is laid up as tight as possible with cement mortar mixed about one part cement to three parts sand.

To make the top of the filter, lay some iron strips across to hold the brick on the top, then lay on the brick and cover with about one-half inch of cement mortar on top. Set the pipe in and wedge it tight. Make the connection while the filter is being made, so that the pipes may not be loosened after the mortar is set. Let the pipe extend to within two inches of the bottom of the filter. The water will run into the bricks as fast as it can be pumped out, and it is always clear and much purer than unfiltered water.

Build the arch by starting low enough so the top of it will just come even with the top of the ground, if the cistern is to be built out of doors. A cistern under the house causes more or less dampness and rots the sills and joists.

Start the arch one-fourth of the diameter of the cistern below the surface of the ground. For a cistern measuring ten feet across the top, the arch should be started two and a half feet below the surface. The manhole at the top should be built up about a foot above the ground, and have two covers with an air space between them to prevent freezing. Dig back of the walls of the cistern and start laying the bricks the same as for any other arch, so that the weight will come on the solid ground instead of on the walls. (See cut.)

Lay the bricks on a slant as shown in the cut. They may look as though they would not stay, but they will. When the course is laid clear around they will bind themselves. When the next course is started, break joints the same as in any other brick work.

Keep the inside as smooth as possible. Plaster the arch inside and outside with cement mortar. Don't forget to put in an intake pipe near the top of the arch. An old pump cylinder makes a good one, but a piece of four inch drain tile makes a better one and will not rust. A staging may be built inside the cistern to work on while building the arch. When all is done, we have a cistern that will not hold water until it is coated with a wash made quite thick of pure Portland cement—just thin enough to spread easily. With a whitewash brush give the inside of the cistern a good coat of this cement. The cistern is then complete and will hold water.

Wetting the walls thoroughly and then going over them while wet with a whitewash brush and dry Portland cement is recommended also as a reliable way of making the walls water tight.

Prof. Robertson, of the Crookston Experiment station, who recently died, told the Farmers' Institute of a method of making cisterns in a clay soil that proved eminently satisfactory. An egg-shaped hole was dug in the clay, narrowing the hole to the proper size at the top, and plastering onto the earth with cement mortar, the same as outlined for work on sandy walls. Such cisterns may be made with or without a brick arch. To arch such a cistern with brick, a shelf should be cut in the earth at a point where it is desired to begin the arch. This shelf may be the width of a brick. From here up the arch may be made just as described for the cistern made in sand. Made as directed these cisterns will last for years without giving any trouble, unless they are cracked by freezing. In that case the cracks may be washed with a coating of cement as described for a finishing coat for a new cistern.

Time of Sowing.

Early Spring is the best time to sow a lawn, as grass makes a better growth during the cool, moist weather of Spring than later. July and August are usually too dry.

Seeding Banks.

Trouble is often experienced in getting grass to grow on a steep slope. This is usually because the heavy rains wash the seed out before it becomes established. This may be prevented by running a heavy board along the top of the slope, to turn the water to some convenient place where a box culvert may carry the water over the edge of the slope until the sod is established. It is also a good plan to sow plenty of seed.

Mowing.

As soon as the grass is high enough it should be kept mowed with the lawn mower, as this makes a thicker, closer stand of grass. The clipping may remain on the ground if not too heavy, and protect the plants from drying out.

The Plum Curculio and Codling Moth are destructive of fruit. Spray the trees now with arsenate of lead or arsenate of soda and water, or in place of water use Bordeaux mixture; spray again just as the blossoms fall; again ten days later. Eighty per cent of the fruit can be saved. Three pounds of arsenate of lead, to fifty gallons of water or Bordeaux mixture, should be used for the curculio; Paris green arsenite of lime or arsenate of lead kills the insects.

ROOSEVELT GIVES NOBEL LECTURE

As Recipient of Peace Prize He Talks in Christiania.

ENDING OF WARS HIS TOPIC

Treaties of Arbitration, Development of Hague Tribunal and Check on Growth of Armaments Urged by the Ex-President.

Christiania.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt, former president of the United States, lectured on "International Peace" Thursday, May 5, before the Nobel prize committee which awarded him the peace prize for his successful efforts in ending the war between Russia and Japan. The great hall where the lecture was delivered was filled to the doors, many distinguished persons being in the audience, and Colonel Roosevelt's words were heartily applauded. His lecture follows:

Need of Industrial Peace.

It is with peculiar pleasure that I stand here today to express the deep appreciation I feel of the high honor conferred upon me by the presentation of the Nobel peace prize. The gold medal which formed part of the prize I shall always keep, and I shall hand it on to my children as a precious heirloom. The sum of money provided as part of the prize by the wise generosity of the illustrious founder of this world-famous prize system, I did not, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, feel at liberty to keep. I think it eminently just and proper that in most cases the recipient of the prize should keep for his own use the prize in its entirety. But in this case, while I did not act officially as president of the United States, it was nevertheless only because I was president that I was enabled to act at all; and I felt that the money must be considered as having been given me in trust for the United States. I therefore used it as a nucleus for a foundation to forward the cause of industrial peace, as being well within the general purpose of your committee; for in our complex industrial civilization of today the peace of righteousness and justice, the only kind of peace worth having, is at least as necessary in the industrial world as it is among nations. There is at least as much need to curb the cruel greed and arrogance of part of the world of capital, to curb the cruel greed and violence of part of the world of labor, as to check a cruel and unhealthy militarism in international relationships.

When Peace May Be Evil.

We must ever bear in mind that the great end in view is righteousness, justice as between man and man, nation and nation, the chance to lead our lives on a somewhat higher level, with a broader spirit of brotherly good will one for another. Peace is generally good in itself, but it is never the highest good unless it comes as the handmaid of righteousness; and it becomes a very evil thing if it serves merely as a mask for cowardice and sloth, or as an instrument to further the ends of despotism or anarchy. We despise and abhor the bully, the brawler, the oppressor, whether in private or public life; but we despise no less the coward and the voluptuary. No man is worth calling a man who will not fight rather than submit to infamy or see those that are dear to him suffer wrong. No nation deserves to exist if it permits itself to lose the stern and virile virtues; and this without regard to whether the loss is due to the growth of a heartless and all-absorbing commercialism, to prolonged indulgence in luxury and soft effortless ease, or to the deification of a warped and twisted sentimentality.

Moreover, and above all, let us remember that words count only when they give expression to deeds or are to be translated into them. The leaders of the Red Terror prattled of peace while they steeped their hands in the blood of the innocent; and many a tyrant has called it peace when he has scourged honest protest into silence. Our words must be judged by our deeds; and in striving for a lofty ideal we must use practical methods; and if we cannot attain all at one leap, we must advance towards it step by step, reasonably content so long as we do actually make some progress in the right direction.

Now, having freely admitted the limitations to our work, and the qualifications to be borne in mind, I feel that I have the right to have my words taken seriously when I point out where, in my judgment, great advance can be made in the cause of international peace. I speak as a practical man, and whatever I now advocate I actually tried to do when I was for the time being the head of a great nation, and keenly jealous of its honor and interest. I ask other nations to do only what I should be glad to see my own nation do.

Treaties of Arbitration.

The advance can be made along several lines. First of all there can be treaties of arbitration. There are, of course, states so backward that a civilized community ought not to enter into an arbitration treaty with them, at least until we have gone much further than at present in securing some kind of international police action. But all really civilized communities should have effective arbitration treaties among themselves. I believe that these treaties can cover almost all questions liable to arise between such nations, if they are drawn with the explicit agreement that each contracting party will respect the other's territory and absolute sovereignty within that territory, and the equally explicit agreement that (aside from the very rare cases where the nation's honor is vitally concerned) all other possible subjects of controversy will be submitted to arbitration. Such a treaty should insure peace until one party deliberately violated it. Of course, as yet there is no adequate safeguard against such deliberate violation, but the establishment of a sufficient number of these treaties would go a long way towards creating a world opinion which would finally find expression in the provision of methods to forbid or punish any such violation.

Work of Hague Tribunal.

Secondly, there is the further development of The Hague tribunal, of the work of the conferences and courts at The Hague. It has been well said that the first Hague conference framed a Magna Charta for the nations; it set before us an ideal which has already to some extent been realized, and towards the full realization of which we can all steadily strive. The second conference made further progress; the third should do yet more. Meanwhile the American government has more than once tentatively suggested methods for completing the court of arbitral justice, constituted at the second Hague conference, and for rendering it effective. It is earnestly to be hoped that the various governments of Europe, working with those of America and of Asia, shall set themselves seriously to the task of devising some method which shall accomplish this result. If I may venture the suggestion, it would be well for the statesmen of the world, in planning for the erection of this world court, to study what has been done in the United States by the Supreme court. I cannot help thinking that the Constitution of the United States, notably in the establishment of the Supreme court and in the methods adopted for securing peace and good relations among and between the different states, offers certain valuable analogies to what should be striven for in order to secure, through The Hague courts and conferences, a species of world federation for international peace and justice. There are, of course, fundamental differences between what the United States Constitution does and what we should ever attempt at this time to secure at The Hague; but the methods adopted in the American Constitution to prevent hostilities between the states, and to secure the supremacy of the federal court in certain classes of cases, are well worth the study of those who seek at The Hague to obtain the same result on a world scale.

Undue Growth of Armaments.

In the third place, something should be done as soon as possible to check the growth of armaments, especially naval armaments, by international agreement. No one power could or should act by itself; for it is eminently undesirable, from the standpoint of the peace of righteousness, that a power which really does believe in peace should place itself at the mercy of some rival which may at bottom have no such belief and no intention of acting on it. But, granted sincerity of purpose, the great powers of the world should find no insurmountable difficulty in reaching an agreement which would put an end to the present costly and growing extravagance of expenditure on naval armaments. An agreement merely to limit the size of the ships would have been very useful a few years ago, and would still be of use; but the agreement should go much further.

Finally, it would be a master stroke if those great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves, but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others. The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power to enforce the decree of the court. In any community of any size the authority of the courts rests upon actual or potential force; on the existence of a police, or on the knowledge that the able-bodied men of the country are both ready and willing to see that the decrees of judicial and legislative bodies are put into effect. In new and wild communities where there is violence, an honest man must protect himself; and until other means of securing his safety are devised, it is both foolish and wicked to persuade him to surrender his arms while the men who are dangerous to the community retain theirs. He should not renounce the right to protect himself by his own efforts until the community is so organized that it can effectively relieve the individual of the duty of putting down violence. So it is with nations. Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power, competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations. As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could best be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions. The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions; but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

BIG MEN MEET IN CHICAGO

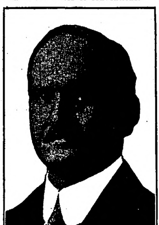
Culmination of Most Remarkable Religious Campaign in Which All Protestant Churches of America Are United.

Chicago.—Leaving their business affairs to consider the evangelization of the world in this generation, 4,500 men gathered at Chicago May 3, to attend the Laymen's National Missionary congress. They represented every Protestant church in America.

Among them were men of national and international prominence. Former Vice-President Fairbanks attended as a representative of the Methodist Episcopal church. Several governors were present. United States Senators Dolliver of Iowa and Beveridge of Indiana and former Senator Teller of Colorado were present at the first session. A number of former governors of states were registered. Among them were former Governor Hadley of Missouri, former Governor Yates of Illinois, and former Governor Hanley of Indiana. Soldiers, sailors, business men, professional men and ministers were in attendance. The congress closed on Friday.

Close of Remarkable Campaign.

This convention marked the close of a remarkable religious campaign. During the winter and spring, missionary conventions were held under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in 75 of the leading cities of the country. The campaign began at Buffalo on October 16. The gathering at Chicago was the climax of the series of conventions.



J. Campbell White.

A national missionary policy was adopted. This policy will be sent to the World's Missionary conference at Edinburgh, Scotland, on June 14, where it is expected to exert a profound conference. The delegates were apportioned amongst the various Protestant churches of America in accordance with their membership and gifts to missions. The Methodist Episcopal church led with 600 delegates. The Presbyterian church was second with 450 men. The The Northern Baptist church had a quota of 330 men, while the Southern Baptist convention sent 200 men. The Southern Methodist church was represented by by 255 men. The Protestant Episcopal church appointed 210 delegates. Most of the other churches had proportionate representation.

The various sessions were held in the auditorium. The congress opened with the singing of "Crown Him Lord of All." Right Reverend Charles P. Anderson, Episcopal bishop of Chicago, made the opening address. He spoke on the "Will of Christ for the World," dwelling upon the need of church unity. Bishop W. L. McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, made the second address. The first evening was devoted to talks by J. Campbell White, general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and J. A. MacDonald, editor of The Toronto Globe.

Notable List of Speakers.

Among the speakers on the program were Prince T. H. Yun of Korea; J. A. MacDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe; Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; William J. Terrors of Frankness.

"There is no worse vice than frankness," said Booth Tarkington, at a farewell dinner in New York precedent to his departure for Europe. "How should I feel, for example, if I asked you for your opinion of my plays, and you answered me frankly, quite frankly?

"Why, I should feel like the poor lady at the bridge drive who said to her hostess' little daughter:

"'Your eyes are such a heavenly blue. And what color are my eyes, darling?'

"The child's high treble traveled easily to the further corner of the quiet room as she replied, looking earnestly up into her questioner's face:

"'Dwab middles, yellow whites and wed wims!'"

Bishop Eats His Own Boots.

Few bishops have to lead such a strenuous life as Bishop Stringer. In company with a missionary companion he made a tour recently to Herschel Island, in the Arctic ocean, and back to Dawson City, where the bishop resides.

Their small supply of food becoming exhausted, they were obliged to eat their muckalucks and moccasins. These, made of raw sealskins, were soaked until they became glutinous, the fire. The bishop says the food and were then toasted in strips over was real good, especially the muckalucks.

The Newspapers in the southern part of the district seems to be in a hot congressional campaign, while the fellows farther to the north are on easy street. It is nice to be out of a job, some times.

Senator Clapp, and Congressmen Steenerson will speak at the annual Indian celebration to be held at White Earth on June 15, and 16th, and then the congressional campaign will be opened.

We notice that our ex Senator Hanson is begining to take an active interest in drainage again Him and Opsahl are two of the awfulest men to work for drainage that you ever saw in your life, when the legislature is not in session.

It looks funny to see the Thief River Falls News supporting A. D. Hanson (a rabid county opitionist).in one colum of his paper and publishing a big add of Hamms Brewing Co. in another colum Does it not look like a funny combination?

Senator Stephens, has not yet filed for re-nomination for the state senate from Polk county, but he don't have to put in six months telling people what he will do, but can say, "Just see what I have done," for A. D. is the man that can and has delivered the goods, as a representative from northern Minnesota.

Must We Take The Medicine

We hope, that when senator Hanson makes up his famous platform, for his campaign, that he will be silent on the question of re-apportionment, for if his bank account can land him in the legislature he had not ought to defeat the cause so dear to the heart of every northern Minnesotian, for if he has it in his plat form, and should happen to be elected there would be no re-apportionment bill passed. Put that in your pipe and smoke it! But he should have at the head of his platform a fine cut of an empty pork barrel, just to remind the poor suckers that supported him in the last campaign, and are now swimming their horses across rivers, of how much state aid they got for the construction of bridges. This district did not get a dollar, and how he has opened up his bank roll and employed the famous Dr. Eastman, to prescribe another dose of the same kind of medicine. Are you going to take it? We are not.

THAT U. S. LAND OFFICE.

Nearly every news paper in this section of the state has had something to say regarding the proposed removel of the U. S. Land Office from Crookston to Thief River Falls, and everyone has been favorable to the removal with the exceptions of THE SUNBEAM.—Thief River Falls News.

There you go again John! We never said anything unfavorable to the removel, what we said was, "as the government has their own building at Crookston it is not likely they will make the change." We of course would like to see the change made, but we propose to publish facts as they are.

Three Tightwads.

Speaking of tightwads, a Texas paper says: It is reported that three of the stingiest men in the state were in town yesterday. One of them will not drink as much water as he wants unless it is from another man's well. The second forbids any of his family from writing anything but a small hand, as it is a waste of ink to make large letters. The third stops his clock at night in order to save wear and tear on the machinery. All of them decline to take their county paper on the ground that it is a terrible strain on their spectacles to read newspapers even in the daytime.

Food Scarce.

In Praise of Cockneys.

Cockneys are the best natured people under the sun. It is notorious that a big London crowd is of all crowds in the world the most harmless and the easiest to manage. But see them also in their ordinary collections, outside the gallery door of a popular theater or crowding in the carriages of an excursion train—what fun and kindness and wholesome give and take! A deliberately rude or offensive cockney is hard ly to be met.—G. S. Street in Pall Mall Gazette.

The Mortality List.

Manager (of great exposition)—What alarms me is our mortality list. Assistant—Mortality list? Why, it's next to nothing at all! "I know better than that. More than one-third of the people that come through the turnstiles are deadheads."

The Color of Lakes.

Some lakes are distinctly blue, others are of various shades of green, so that in some cases they are scarcely distinguishable from their level, grass surrounded banks. A few, too, are almost black. The Lake of Geneva is azure hued, the Lake of Constance and the Lake of Lucerne are green, while the color of the Mediterranean has been called indigo. The Lake of Brienz is greenish yellow, and its neighbor, Lake Thun, is blue.

Fashion, Not Health.

In nine cases out of ten, says the Iowa Health Bulletin, if a physician tells a woman that in order to improve her health she must wear her clothes in a certain way she will follow the advice of her dressmaker instead.

Ljot Signrdson swam a tram of horses acroosss the Red Lake river at Highlandiug Wednesday afternoon. "No use for a bridge."

The cream boat that runs from Little Oak is a big help to the patronage of the Highlanding creamery, as it brings a boat load of cream cans every cream day.

Cherles Enquist, who started blacksmithing at Highlanding last week infotms us that he is doing a good business an is very well satisfled with his location.

The farmers steam boat came up the river yesterday and the steamer Lily went down to Thief River Falls. The Dan Patch boat went down, with another big load of creamery butter this morning.

Mr. E Peterson the Highlanding blacksmith, who went west last fall, for the bennefit of his health returned here on Monday evening. He came up to close up his business and sell his shop, so as to move to a warmer climate.

Johnas Ellingson arrived from Norway on Monday last. He is a yonger brother of Andrew Ellingson the Highlanding merchant, and will join the firm of Ellingson Brs., adding some capatial to the firm.

The Dan Patch boat will leave Highlanding regulary on Friday mornings.

At the last accounts the little dughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry, of Kratka, that was suppose to have fell in Red Lake River last week had not been found, although the search for the body has been persistently kept up. It seems strange that the body does not come to the surface, if it is not under the logs.

There was h big meeting of the share holders of the Clearwater creamory yesterday, to decide on whether to close up their creamery. There must be some thing wrong somewhare when the patrons of a creamery begin to desert it like rats leaving a sinking ship. Hunt out this wrong gentelmen and try to right it, but don't close up your creamery.

Since the orders closing up the Plummer saloons the white men that bought this land of the government begin to find out that they have joind the tribe of Chippawa Indians, according to the orders being issued to saloon keepers. If they wanted this land why in hl didn't they keep it and let the Indians iive on it, so they could issue their orders, to people what to sell or not to sell to them. We are opposed to any white man furnishing liquor to an Indian, and would promptly report anyone we caught selling or giving it to them, but the people liveing on this land now are not Indians, and deny the right of Mr. Johnson to place them on the Indian black-list.

The roads are now in fair condition.

FOILED THEIR PLOT.

The Way Mme. Alboni Frustrated a Scheme to Hiss Her.

"Once upon a time, when Mme. Alboni was at Trieste," writes Henry C. Lahee in "Famous Singers of Today," "she was informed of the existence of a plot to hiss her off the stage. Having ascertained the names of her detractors and where they were to be found, she donned male attire, to which her short hair and robust figure helped to complete her disguise, and went to the cafe at which the conspirators met. Here she found them in full consultation, and, taking a seat at a table, she listened to their conversation for a time. After awhile she addressed the leader, saying: 'I hear that you intend to play a trick upon some one. I am very fond of a little practical joke myself and should be glad if you would allow me to join you on this occasion.'

"'With pleasure,' was the reply. 'We intend to hiss an opera singer off the stage this evening.'

"'Indeed! And of what is she guilty?'

"'Oh, nothing, except that, being an Italian she has sung in Munich and Vienna to German audiences, and we think she ought to receive some castigation for her unpatriotic conduct.'

"'I agree with you, and now please tell me what I am to do.'

"'Take this whistle,' said the leader. 'At a signal to be given at the conclusion of the air sung by Rosina the noise will begin, and you will have to join in.'

"'I shall be very glad to do so,' said the singer and put the whistle in her pocket.

"In the evening the house was packed—every seat was occupied—and the audience warmly applauded the opening numbers of the opera. In due course Mme. Alboni appeared, and at the point at which she was about to address her tutor a few of the conspirators began to make a disturbance, not waiting for the signal.

"Without showing any concern Mme. Alboni walked down to the footlights, and, holding up the whistle, which was hung to her neck by a ribbon, she exclaimed: 'Gentlemen, are you not a little before your time? I thought we were not to commence whistling until I had sung the air.'

"For a moment a deathly stillness prevailed; then suddenly the house broke into thunders of applause, which was led by the conspirators themselves."

"What a beautiful little baby he is!" exclaimed the neighbor who had called. "He isn't six months old yet, either," said the proud young mother, "and he weighs over twenty pounds."

"What have you named him?"

"Well," hesitated the mother, "Henry and I differed a little about that. He wanted to give him one name, and I wanted to give him another, but we finally compromised and agreed to call him John Wesley."

"I see. You named him after the great founder of Meth"—

"No, indeed," quickly interrupted the mother. "That name, as I said, is a compromise."

"But how?"

"The 'John' is for John Calvin, and the 'Wesley' is for John Wesley."

"Oh, I see."—Youth's Companion.

Their Present Names.

"What are the names of that young couple next door?"

"We won't be able to find out for several weeks. They're just been married, and he calls her Birdie, and she calls him Pettie."

German Dialect In Wisconsin.

It is two German women who are speaking in the presence of an Irish woman.

"Th' tap o' th' mornin' t' ye, Mis' Brettschneider. 'Tis glad I am t' see th' likes av ye. Iss yer daughther Gretchen goin t' the Hill th' morrow?"

"Faith an' she is. Ven me bye Heinrich can get th' bay haarse away from th' plowin' I t'ink I'll go meslif, bedad."

This is not travesty. It is a report of German dialect. The manner of speech came about naturally enough. When the Germans arrived here in full force the country was already settled, largely by Yankees and Irish, and the German had to buy his farm here or there. Thus a number of them found themselves located in the town of Erin, where, of course, they learned the language of the country. And I leave it to my fellow citizens in Wisconsin whether a German cannot speak as broad and rich a brogue as any son of Erin.—Charles D. Stewart in Atlantic.

When the President Lost His Hat.

The Crystal palace exhibition opened at New York July 15, 1853, was the first affair of this kind in the country for which foreign exhibits were solicited. The "big show" began with a procession, in which President Franklin Pierce, mounted, was a conspicuous feature. The hero of the day rode a mettlesome steed, and while proceeding up Wall street the presidential headgear, a new silk hat of the prevalent style, was incontinently tumbled to the pavement. Another horse recklessly stepped upon the unfortunate tile, crushing it out of the semblance to itself, besmearing it with mud—real Wall street mud. What was left of the misshapen and bedaubed hat was worn by the president, to the great amusement of the spectators, until a substitute could be secured.

A Witty Retort.

One day while dining with the secretary of the admiralty William IV., then heir presumptive to the British crown, said: "When I am king, sir, you shall not be the secretary of the admiralty, I promise you. What do you say to that, eh?"

"'Cause Fido's tail is so loose that it wiggles."—New York Press.

Shortly before Dr. W. T. Bull, New York's famous surgeon, was stricken with his fatal illness a young east side physician called at his office and said that he was attending a poor girl over in his neighborhood who would surely die unless operated on. The family was too poor to pay and the doctor did not feel that he was equal to the operation. Would Dr. Bull give him a little advice as to how to proceed?

"Well, I guess we had better go and take a look at the patient," said Dr. Bull, putting on his coat.

They found the patient in an east side tenement, and in less time than it takes to tell it Dr. Bull had the room cleared and began the operation. When he was leaving the father of the girl met him in the hall and forced a quarter into his hand. Dr. Bull thanked him and went off feeling happier than if he had received a $1,000 fee. The girl got well.

The Third Way.

The Midland express was slowing up in Derby station. An American traveler, his finger keeping the place in his Baedeker, addressed the carriage:

"Can you tell me whether this place is 'Derby' or 'Darby?' I have heard both."

"The original and therefore the correct pronunciation," replied a precise looking passenger, "is 'Darby.' I have seen it spelled 'Darbie' on old maps. It is also the form used in common speech."

"You'll find 'Derby' is right," rejoined a passenger, less precise. "It's spelled like that, and the people up in the north of the county say 'Derby.'"

At this point the train stopped, and a porter bawled loudly into the carriage, "Dawby!"—Manchester Guardian.

Light on Cause of Tuberculosis.

The sixth annual meeting of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis was held in Washington on May 2 and 3. Among the most interesting papers was one by Dr. William H. Parks, the famous pathologist and head of the leboratories of the New York city department of health. Doctor Park contended that pulmonary tuberculosis is very rarely, if ever, caused by infection from bovine sources, such as the drinking of milk or the eating of meat. Tuberculosis of the stomach and internal organs, which compose only about ten per cent of the sickness from this disease, are often caused by drinking or eating infected matter. Doctor Park substantiated his conclusions by showing the results of years of investigation and examination of pathological specimens. His conclusions are substantially those reached by Dr. Robert Koch, the discoverer of the tubercle bacillus.

CHICLE THE BASIS OF CHEWING GUM

By RUSSELL HASTINGS MILLWARD

NEARLY three billion pieces of chewing gum are manufactured in the United States annually, practically all of which is made from one product of tropical America. This clearly accounts for the $1,500,000 in chicle, annually exported by our sister republics, and brings to light the workings of a most gigantic industry.

A CHICLERO AT WORK

In the fifteenth century chicle was known to the intrepid Spanish explorers, who reported that the Indians employed the gum to quench thirst and relieve exhaustion; but the universal use of the gum can not be said to have begun until as late as 1876. Since that time the demand for this almost mysterious commercial commodity has increased to such an extent that importing firms have been obliged to search the markets and exploit the growing of the tree in order to obtain a supply sufficient to meet existing requirements.

Prior to 1888 chicle sold for from 7 to 8 cents per pound; in 1896 it sold for 36 cents per pound; and now it is selling for $2 per pound.

The tree, Achras Sapota, from which the chicle is obtained, is indigenous to northern South American countries, Central America, and in the Mexican states of Yucatan, Campeche, Tabasco, Chiapas, Veracruz, Oaxaca, Puebla, Jalisco, San Luis Potosi, and the territories of Tepic and Quintana Roo.

A CHICLE TREE IN A TROPICAL FOREST

PRIMITIVE METHOD OF BOILING THE CHICLE GUM

As yet the systematic cultivation of the Achras Sapota has not been carried on to any great extent, but experiments have shown that trees planted at a distance of 10 feet apart, or 400 to the acre, will yield from 5 to 6 pounds of chicle gum when from 8 to 10 years old and from 12 to 15 inches in diameter. In its wild state the tree is usually found in groups, frequently growing to a height of from 40 to 50 feet; it is straight, and has a long, clear length, thus making it most desirable for timber. While it grows well in a variety of soils, it seems to thrive best in a rich clay loam, with good drainage and an annual rainfall of about 90 inches. Lands well adapted to the growing of the tree vary in price from $3 to $15 gold, per acre, and are being largely dealt in at the present time.

The wood is of a reddish color, closely resembling mahogany, is quite hard, heavy, compact in texture, and fine grained. Prehistoric door frames and rafters of sapota wood are found among the Mexican ruins, and are still in an excellent state of preservation. This wood is today greatly in demand by cabinetmakers, who employ it in the manufacture of high-grade furniture and household fittings.

For many years the sapodilla pear, which also comes from the Achras Sapota tree, was a popular variety of fruit found in the markets throughout Latin America; but now, on account of the great demand for chicle gum and the attractive rewards offered for its gathering, the fruit is seldom dealt in by the natives.

The operation of gathering chicle and preparing it for the market is similar to that employed in the maple sugar industry in the United States.

Throughout the rainy season, and while the sap is up, the tapping is done by the chicle gatherers, or "chicleros," as they are called. Their outfit is most simple, and consists in nothing more than a piece of rope and a machete. By means of this rope, which is fastened about the waist and slipped around the tree, the chiclero is enabled to hold any desired position and wield the machete in cutting the incisions or gullies.

Great care must be exercised in tapping not to cut too deeply, as excessive bleeding of the sap will cause the rapid decay of the tree. It is possible for a chiclero to gather, properly, from 10 to 15 pounds of the sap per day, for which he is paid, in most cases, a contract price of from 10 to 15 cents per pound; but on many of the large estates an effort is now being made to effect payments for the labor by the day, week or month, and in this way prevent the destruction of the trees frequently caused by a greedy desire on the part of the chiclero, when under contract, to obtain as much sap as possible without regard to the injuries sustained by the trees.

In granting concessions to gather chicle in the national forest reservations, the Latin-American governments demand that natives shall be properly instructed in the gathering and preparation of the gum, as promiscuous tapping will not be longer tolerated.

In some instances trees have been tapped for 25 years, where care has been taken, although after that time they produced but from one-half to two pounds of sap. However, if allowed to remain untapped for a period of five or six years, they will then produce from three to five pounds of gum. Authorities differ in regard to the average height of the sapota, and the length of time required for its maturity; but a general average height can be placed at from 25 to 40 feet, and maturity is reached at from 40 to 50 years. A tree 25 years old, and producing from 20 to 25 pounds of chicle each year, will measure 25 to 30 feet in height, and 22 inches in diameter.

In tapping the trees a V-shaped incision is cut spirally all around the tree, the arms of the cut extending upward, in order to permit the sap to flow freely to the bottom, where a receptacle is placed at the end of the gully. The sap has the appearance of milk as it flows from the tree, but it afterward takes on a yellowish color, and thickens until it is about the consistency of treacle.

After gathering the sap it is carried to the boiling sheds, and by a rather primitive boiling process is brought to the proper consistency. As the operation continues, it is necessary to knead the mass from time to time, in order to extract the water. The gum, if properly handled, will take on a light gray color, although there is considerable variation in the shades and colors of the products received from the different districts. In the old days much deception was practised by the chicleros, who, in order to increase the weight, would insert stones, bark, sand or wood in the boiling chicle, before it was formed into loaves. This clever deception is a thing of the past, however, as the contracts today call for a pure straight article, and there is little opportunity of adding any foreign substances.

Much of the chicle is shipped in rough, uneven loaves to the United States via Canada, where it is refined and dried out to one-half of its original weight, thereby saving 50 per cent. of the duty.

Under the Wilson bill the gum was admitted free; but in accordance with the tariff-revision act of 1897 a duty of 10 cents per pound was fixed, which is the present rate.

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, there were imported into the United States 5,450,139 pounds of chicle, valued at $1,987,112, as compared with 929,959 pounds, valued at $156,402, in 1885.

Repeated attempts have been made to mix, adulterate, or substitute chicle in every conceivable manner, but nature insists that the gum shall only be used to furnish unlimited molar action, and that it can not be artificially prepared by chemical or mechanical means. No medicinal use has yet been discovered for chicle; but in the manufacture of chewing gum various digestants, such as pepsin, have been added and the product pronounced by eminent medical authorities as pure, free from any injurious substances, and beneficial in the relief of various forms of dyspepsia and indigestion. In the strict sense of the word, chewing gum is an indestructible residuum, the user having the advantage of both the finest confection and a medicament as well. Its distribution extends in the Western hemisphere from Hudson bay to the Argentine Republic; in the east, from London to Hongkong; and the inhabitants of the Australian and South African colonies are large and ever-increasing consumers. It is estimated by a prominent manufacturer that sufficient chewing gum is produced each year to supply every human being on earth with two sticks, and that the daily energy expended in the consumption of this popular masticatory is equal to that necessary to light a city of 250,000 inhabitants for the same period.

There are numerous factories scattered throughout the United States, where can be witnessed the interesting processes by which chewing gum is manufactured. The factories are sanitary in every particular, and methods of absolute cleanliness prevail in each department. An official report by the department of commerce and labor states that a chewing gum factory was the second cleanest plant inspected in the United States.

The process of manufacture consists in simply mixing and boiling the gum, in copper kettles, to a required consistency, and adding some flavoring extract, such as vanilla, peppermint, or wintergreen, and sugar, after which it is transferred to large centrifugal receivers. Here it is whipped into a dough, and afterward removed to tables and kneaded in powdered sugar. It is then rolled into sheets, cut to desired sizes, dried, wrapped by machinery in attractive papers, and placed in boxes ready for the market, the entire process being at all times under the closest inspection.

A visit to any of the chewing gum factories will convince the most skeptical that the product is nothing more nor less than a pure and wholesome article and absolutely harmless to its vast and faithful army of consumers.

OCEAN MONSTERS IN BATTLE

Early on the morning of August 14 last, while engaged in building new quarters for the lighthouse keeper at Breaksea island, near Rottnest, Western Australia, the contractor and his men noticed a bull whale with a cow and a calf passing the island some distance off.

An hour or so later—about nine o'clock to be exact—the men were startled by an extraordinary noise, apparently coming from the eastern end of the island, a noise unlike anything they had ever heard before. Dropping their tools and starting toward the east, they beheld such a sight as it falls to the lot of few people to witness. There, not 500 yards from the shore, was being waged a battle to the death—a fight between the great cow whale previously seen and a school of thresher sharks.

The sharks, as though acting in accordance with some preconcerted plan, had completely surrounded the two whales and, apparently realizing that nothing was to be feared from the calf, concentrated all their efforts upon the cow. Again and again they charged in upon her, their jaws snapping, tearing at her mighty sides until the sea was red with blood. Meanwhile the cow lashed her tail furiously, hurling up sheets of reddened water and occasionally crashing down with terrific force upon one of her voracious opponents.

Presently the spellbound spectators realized two facts—first, that the calf had disappeared in the melee, and secondly that the tortured whale was undoubtedly becoming weaker. It was obvious that the unequal struggle could have only one ending. Still, however, she fought on doggedly, winning admiration and sympathy by her exhibition of hopeless courage. Altering her tactics, by a supreme effort she hurled her whole great bulk clear of the water for a moment and the fascinated onlookers beheld the sharks hanging from various parts of her gleaming body by their serrated teeth. Then down she went again with a crash like thunder and for an instant whale and sharks were buried amid masses of foam, heavily colored with the poor mammal's life blood. Rising again, she essayed another change of plan, making for the rocks and desperately striving to rub off the clinging sharks against their edges. But the threshers were equal to the occasion; while those on the outside maintained their grip, the others dived under their enemy and charged her anew, tearing at the whale's side in an ecstasy of ferocity that was bloodcurdling to witness.

More and more feeble grew the whale's struggles and at last—to the heartfelt relief of the spectators, for her death fight had been terrible to behold—the great body turned over and sank beneath the red-tinted water. The unequal battle was over.

REPUBLICAN VICTORY

HERBERT P. KELLER IS MAYOR BY A MAJORITY OF 5,000 OVER H. G. HAAS.

DEMS. HAVE COUNCIL MAJORITY

Crowe Celebrate Victory—Contests for Comptrollership and City Treasurer's Office Lively.

St. Paul. — The Republicans of St. Paul won a victory which leaves nothing to be desired by the G. O. P. supporters. Herbert P. Keller, Republican nominee for mayor at the capitol city, was elected mayor over his opponent, Henry G. Haas, by a majority of approximately 5,000. It was a landslide for the Republicans. Mr. Keller was not only elected mayor but he appears to have carried most of the ticket with him, with the possible exception of the candidate for city competroller, who may have been defeated by the Democratic nominee.

Outside of the mayorality, interest centered in the contest between W. H. Farnham, Republican, and Edwin J. Bishop, Democrat, for controllership, and between S. A. Farnsworth, Republican, and A. L. Roth, Democrat, candidate for city treasurer. The earlier returns indicated a slight majority for the Democratic candidates, but with the strong Republican wards yet to be heard from it was thought the Republican candidates would pull through. The political complexion of the assembly is close with both sides claiming a majority.

Joy Reigns in St. Paul.

The victory of Keller was properly celebrated in St. Paul. Crowds thronged the streets, watched the bulletins, marched in processions and cheered themselves hoarse for Keller. Probably never before in the history of St. Paul has so much political enthusiasm been turned loose at one time.

Henry G. Haas, the defeated Democratic candidate, acknowledged his defeat early in the evening.

"I had expected to be elected," was his explanation, "but it appears that I am to be disappointed. 'The cry of lower taxes was raised. The people may get lower taxes but they will get smaller improvements."

IRON ORE IN BEMIDJI.

Boys, Wondering Along Lake Shore, Make Rich Discovery.

Bemidji. — Great excitement prevailed for a time in this city when it was announced that a quantity of iron ore had been found on Diamond Point, a stretch of land on the shores of Lake Bemidji and within the city limits.

Wilbur Lycan and Bryon Russell, freshmen in the local high school, while wandering along the shores of the lake found several small pebbles among the sand which looked to them like specimens of ore. The boys took a handful of the pebbles to C. L. Cummer, a local jeweler, who after a thorough investigation declared it to be iron ore.

A. A. White, of St. Paul, president of the Bemidji Concrete and Improvement company, is the owner of Diamond Point. It has been known for a long time that ore existed in this vicinity, but it is not known whether it exists in paying quantities or not, as no drill has ever been sunk or an attempt made to work the beds. An attempt will now be made to discover the extent of the ore.

STORMY LAKE DAMAGES CITY.

Walker, Minn., Residents Lose $16,000 From Leech Lake Waves.

Walker.—It has been estimated the heavy storm on Leech Lake the first of the week did $16,000 damage to Walker.

The Leech Lake Lumber company suffered a loss of several thousand dollars through lumber washed into the water and logs breaking their booms and drifting over the lake.

The village was damaged to the extent of $1,000 on its new dock and the government a like amount.

Other losses are the Walker Boat livery, $500; P. H. McGarry, $1,000; boat houses demolished, $500; and damage to resident lots bordering lake shore, $3,000, resident lots bordering lake shore, $3,000.

Cass Lake. — Word comes from Walker, where the district court is in session, that in a suit for libel, brought by Charles Argal against Samuel Sutor, both of Cass Lake, the jury awarded a verdict of $4,500.

The article was published in the Cass Lake Voice several months ago, not mentioning Argal's name, but presumed to refer to him. Judge Spooner of Bemidji was the attorney for Argal.

CONSERVATION AT ST. PAUL.

National Congress Coming to Minnesota.

Washington, D. C. — The Northwest has captured the national conservation convention. Announcement is made by the executive comitmte of the National Conservation Association through the secretary, Thomas R. Shipp, that the national convention will be held at St. Paul the first week in September. The decision of this matter was reached through a canvass of the executive committee by telegraph and the decision was practically unanimous in favor of St. Paul.

It is the purpose of the secretary, T. R. Shipp, to get in communication with Governor Eberhart and the officials and associations in St. Paul and Minneapolis who will have a part in making a success of the national conservation convention. The plans thus far perfected include an invitation to be extended to President Taft to be present, and it is assured that Theodore Roosevelt will make an address.

Board of trade, chambers of commerce and kindred associations will send delegates and a large gathering of distinguished men will make this by far the greatest asemblage in the interests of conservation ever held in the country.

COOLEY AT WILLMAR.

Says Drainage and Good Foundation Good Road's Necessity.

Willmar.—"Drainage and a good foundation are the two great essentials in road making," said George W. Cooley, engineer and secretary of the state highway commission, in addressing the good roads rally here. "Of course material means something, too, but it is really secondary. Even sand or gumbo, if treated right, can make fair roads. The only trouble is that we have paid but little attention to the science of road making, and still less to maintenance.

"The highway commission is doing its best to show the people how to make the right kind of roads, but it is handicapped by the fact that Minnesota has no law of maintenance. We need such a law, and need it badly."

Mr. Cooley illustrated his lecture with views taken on his recent trip through Europe.

The rally was the most successful ever held in this part of the state. Pathmasters and town supervisors from every part of the country were present and there were representatives from neighboring counties.

ELDER STEWART DEAD.

End Comes to Financier With But Little Warning.

Minneapolis, May 4.—"Elder" Levi M. Stewart, eccentric Minneapolis millionaire, died of inflammation of the lungs and senility. He was 85 years old.

Two months ago "Elder" Stewart again had an attack of inflammation of the lungs and took to his bed. Attending physicians say he has been dying for the last 10 days and his immediate friends, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Gordon, members of his household, Samuel and John Friedman, Mrs. H. Eaton, and Mr. A. Benjamin, have ben with him almost constantly.

Mr. Stewart leaves an estate variously estimated at from two to five millions, in local real estate. He was a keen business man and only a few days before his death executed several one thousand year leases. His nearest relative are two brothers at Corinna, Maine, whence he came in 1821.

Of late her mind has become clouded and she talks of things that happened when she was a little girl. Dissolution is looked for at any time.

PROBE PROMISES REVELATION

PROSECUTOR UNEARTHS EVIDENCE AGAINST LORIMER.

He Finds Two Legislators Whose Testimony Is Regarded as Important.

Chicago, Ill. — "I have two Democratic state representatives who will give important evidence before the special grand jury in regard to the alleged bribery in the election of William Lorimer as United States senator," said State's Attorney John Wayman today, on his return from a mysterious visit to St. Louis and the southern part of Illinois.

"These witnesses will appear before the grand jury Saturday and tell some important things about the election of Mr. Lorimer," Prosecutor Wayman declared. "I am not at liberty to give their names, but I will say they are members of the state legislature whose names have not been mentioned thus far in the investigation. Their identity will be a complete surprise. I brought no one back with me. I left Detective Murnane of my office in St. Louis to finish the work there. The two men in question possibly will appear before the jury on Saturday.

"I consider that my trip to St. Louis has been highly successful. I have nothing more to say."

Prosecutor Wayman disappeared after the grand jury session Monday and did not say where he was going. It was not known here until word came from St. Louis last night that he was there. The grand jury was in session only a short time and no evidence was heard in the Lorimer case because of Mr. Wayman's absence.

Says "the Honor Was for Sale."

"I was repeatedly notified before Congressman Lorimer was elected to his seat in the United States senate that the honor was for sale and would go to the highest bidder."

This was the statement made by former United States Senator William E. Mason last night. Mr. Mason was a candidate for the senatorial nomination before the primaries two years ago. His opponents were Congressman Foss and former Senator Hopkins. Hopkins got the endorsement of the people. Later Mason renewed his fight in the legislature but withdrew before the final vote was taken.

"While the deadlock in Springfield was on I had repeated calls by telephone from persons who told me that they were sure an arrangement could be made whereby I could get a large number of Democratic votes. These persons made no direct statement that money was to be paid, but the fair inference to be drawn from their talk was that something of the kind would have to be done.

"In some cases these would give me their names; in other cases they would not. I was so disgusted with the whole situation that I let the whole matter pass from my mind.

"I believe that 50 per cent of the seats in the United States senate, the most august lawmaking body in the world, can be said to be practically purchased. I hope that I may live to see the day when election to the senate will be by direct vote of the people."

INSURGENTS FORM BLOCKADE.

Cable to Representative in United States Tells of Activity.

Washington, D. C. -- Senor Salvator Castrillio, representative here of the Estrada provisional government in Nicaragua, acting under cabled instructions from Minister Rivera, advised the state department that the insurgent forces had established a blockade of the port of San Juan del Norte, or Greytown, with four ships—three ocean-going tugs equipped as gunboats and a fourth larger vessel armed with rapid fire guns. It is not unlikely that this is the rebel fleet which is on the lookout for the steamer Venus, recently sailed from New Orleans with arms and ammunition for Madriz.

Among Central Americans here it is freely asserted that the rebels are now better equipped to carry on the war than they were at the outset.

DENIAL FROM ROCKEFELLER.

Has Not Abandoned Effort to Have Congress Charter Uplift Foundation Plans.

New York, May 5.—Starr J. Murphy, personal counsel for John D. Rockefeller, said the report telegraphed from Washington and printed in the papers throughout the country that Mr. Rockefeller had decided to abandon his effort to get his proposed foundation incorporated in the District of Columbia was without foundation.

Mr. Murphy said further that Mr. Rockefeller har nothing to do with the "Economic and General Foundation," for which a charter is being sought from the New York legislature, for "an aged man of wealth," said to have $2,500,000 to spend in charity.

Lions Almost Kill Keeper.

Forest City, Iowa.—George Tardy, a lion keeper, was almost killed here during a circus parade when an enraged male lion sprang upon him. One arm was almost torn from his body and his throat and back was terribly lacerated. Two female lions in the same cage followed their mate in the attack and the three fought desperately for possession of their victim. Elephant keepers drove off the lions with bull-hooks and removed Tardy from the cage. It is believed he will recover.

AN INTOLERABLE ITCHING

"Just about two years ago, some form of humor appeared on my scalp. The beginning was a slight itching but it grew steadily worse until, when I combed my hair, the scalp became raw and the ends of the comb-teeth would be wet with blood. Most of the time there was an intolerable itching, in a painful, burning way, very much as a bad, raw burn, if deep, will itch and smart when first beginning to heal. Combing my hair was positive torture. My hair was long and tangled terribly because of the blood and scabs. This continued growing worse and over half my hair fell out. I was in despair, really afraid of becoming totally bald.

"Sometimes the pain was so great that, when partially awake, I would scratch the worst places so that my finger-tips would be bloody. I could not sleep well and, after being asleep a short time, that awful stinging pain —would commence and then I would wake up nearly wild with the torture. A neighbor said it must be salt rheum. Having used Cuticura Soap merely as a toilet soap before, I now decided to order a set of the Cuticura Remedies —Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills. I used them according to directions for perhaps six weeks, then left off, as the disease seemed to be eradicated, but toward spring, eighteen months ago, there was a slight return of the scalp humor. I commenced the Cuticura treatment at once, so had very little trouble. On my scalp I used about one half a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment in all. The first time I took six or seven bottles of Cuticura Pills and the last time three bottles—neither an expensive or tedious treatment. Since then I have had no scalp trouble of any kind. Standing up, with my hair unbound, it comes to my knees and had it not been for Cuticura I should doubtless be wholly bald.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

THE BUZZARD'S WATER-HOLE GANG

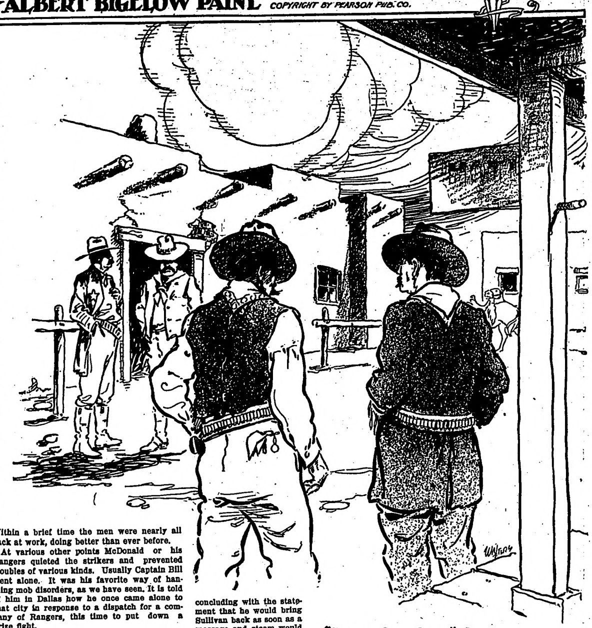
by ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.



"THAT IS BILL OGLE"

DURING the years that ended the old century and began the new—from about 1896 to 1902, or later—there occurred in Texas a series of strike and mob disorders of various kinds. To quiet troubles of this sort is the special province of the Ranger service, and as the Panhandle became more tractable—more range-broken, as one may say—Capt. Bill McDonald and his little force were summoned to points far and near to put down disturbance and to check agitation.

Not long after the bank murder at Wichita Falls, and the capture of Lewis and Crawford, Capt. Bill McDonald was summoned there again, this time to investigate a strike on the Forth Worth and Denver railroad. Things were in bad shape at the Falls. Trains were not allowed to run; engines were not permitted to move. Riot and bloodshed were imminent.

Captain Bill went up to Wichita Falls alone, and learning where the main body of the strikers was assembled, went over there. They had gathered in a hall, and were holding a secret meeting when he arrived. Captain Bill knocked on the door. A doorkeeper came but refused admission.

"I am Captain McDonald of the Rangers," said McDonald quietly, "and I'm here to talk to you men and see what the trouble is. You're all here now, and I think I'll talk to you together."

The doorkeeper went away and reported, and presently returned.

"Where are your Rangers?" he asked.

"I didn't bring any. I don't need any Rangers to help me talk. I'm pretty good at that, single-handed."

There was another consultation inside, and the door opened. Captain Bill went in with a friendly greeting for everybody, given in his genial natural way. Then he got up where he could see his audience.

"Boys," he said, in his slow, friendly way. "I understand you-all are acting mighty sorry over here, interfering with business and making out like you're going to tear up things generally. Now, you know me, and you know that I don't want anything that ain't right, and if a man behaves himself I'll try to get him what's right, if I can. I suppose you think you have a grievance and perhaps you have, but you'll never get it settled this way, and it's my business, as you-all know, not to have this sort of work going on. You have a perfect right to quit work, but you haven't any right to keep other men from working, or to injure people's business, or to break up property. Nothing good can come out of such doings. I didn't bring any of my men along, because I didn't believe I'd need 'em, and I don't think so now; but of course if this thing goes on, I'll have to bring 'em, and then it will be too late to talk all friendly here together as we're talking now.

"I'm well acquainted with President Good of this road, and I know you can't get anything this way; and if you take my advice you'll go back to work and tell him your troubles afterward. Now, boys, that's all I've got to say, and I reckon if you listen to it you'll come out a good deal better than if you listen to one or two men that for some reason of their own are trying to stir up a lot of trouble, and will be in jail before night, as like as not."

Captain Bill went down on the street, and the crowd soon followed. A good many came to him and expressed willingness to go to work. Here and there he talked to a little group in his friendly earnest way. The strike at Wichita Falls was over.

From Wichita Falls, McDonald went over to Fort Worth where there was similar trouble, but learned that a more serious situation existed at the Thurber coal mines, in Erath county. The Ranger captain was urged to take his men to Thurber, but decided to go alone.

Arriving at Thurber, he hunted up the mine officials for consultation. Colonel Hunter, president of the mines, looked at Captain Bill—bent over from his wounds and battered up from illnes and exposure—and shook his head.

"You should have brought your men," he said. "You can't do anything with a gang like ours, alone."

"Well, colonel, I'm using my men in other places. I'll look around a little and do what I can, anyway."

Loitering about the town, he discovered that a number of kegs of beer were going out to a high hill, beyond the outskirts—headquarters of the striking miners. He learned that there was to be a sort of mass meeting there that night, when the leaders and chief agitators would be on hand. He decided to be present.

It was well after dark when he set out, and a good crowd had assembled when he reached the place.

It was nearly 11 o'clock, and a speaker had come to the conclusion that the crowd was in the proper condition to take some good radical advice—advice which might be followed by prompt action—and he proceeded to give it. He told them how they had been mistreated and what they should do. They were to begin by blowing up the mines and the superintendent's office, and he told them which mine to blow up first. Then he told them what they were to do to "Old Hunter," and it was clear from the faces and the mutterings of the listeners that they were ready to do these things.

Captain Bill worked his way through the crowd until he was close to the speaker's log. When the agitator reached what seemed a good stopping place, the Ranger captain suddenly stepped up beside him. The speaker stopped dead still in his surprise. It was Captain Bill's turn.

"Men," he said, "this rascal that has been talking to you is an enemy to you and to the country. He's trying to get you to commit murder, and to get you sent to the penitentiary, or hung. You can quit work, but you can't kill people and destroy property, not in this state. These walking delegates and leaders that are telling you to do these things are just a sorry lot of damned scoundrels, and I'm going to put them where they belong, and where they're trying to get you. I'm captain of Company B, Ranger service, and I'm here alone, but I'll have my men here, if I need them, and I'll hang just such fellows as this man—"

Captain Bill turned to indicate his selected victim, but he was no longer there. He had melted into the crowd, and was seen no more. Within a brief time the men were nearly all back at work, doing better than ever before.

At various other points McDonald or his Rangers quieted the strikers and prevented troubles of various kinds. Usually Captain Bill went alone. It was his favorite way of handling mob disorders, as we have seen. It is told of him in Dallas how he once came alone to that city in response to a dispatch for a company of Rangers, this time to put down a prize fight.

"Where are the others?" asked the disappointed mayor, who met him at the depot.

"Hell! ain't I enough?" was the response, "there's only one prize-fight!"

But the San Saba affair was a different matter. It was in 1897 that certain citizens of San Saba county petitioned the governor to send Rangers to investigate the numerous murders which had been committed in that locality—the number of assassinations then aggregating 43 within a period of ten years.

In an earlier day a sort of vigilance committee or mob had been organized to deal with lawless characters, but in the course of time the usual things happened and the committee itself became the chief menace of the community. Whatever worthy members it had originally claimed, either dropped out or were "removed" and were replaced by men who had a private grudge against a neighbor, or desired his property, or were fond of murder on general principles. In time this deadly organization became not only a social but a political factor, and as such had gathered into its gruesome membership—active and honorary—county officials ranging from the deputy constabulary to the occupant of the judicial bench. Indeed, it seemed that a majority of the citizens of San Saba were associated together for the purpose of getting rid—either by assassination or intimidation—of the worthier element of the community.

This society of death was well organized. It had an active membership of about 300, with obligations rigid and severe. Their meeting place was a small natural pool of water almost surrounded by hills. It bore the curiously appropriate name of "Buzzard's Water Hole," and here the Worthy Order of Assassins assembled once a month, usually during full moon, to transact general business and formulate plans for the removal of offending or superfluous friends.

Members in good standing would make known their desires, setting forth reasons why citizens in various walks of life were better dead, and the cases were considered and decrees passed accordingly.

To break up the Buzzard's Water-Hole roost, and to discourage its practises in and around San Saba, was the job cut out for Bill McDonald and his Rangers during the summer and fall of 1897.

Captain McDonald began the work by sending over three of his men—John Sullivan, Dud Barker and Edgar Neil—to investigate. The trail wound in and out in a hundred directions, and gathered in a regular knot around the seat of justice. Perhaps there were town and county officials who were not in the toils of the deadly membership, but if so they were not discoverable. Sullivan promptly got into trouble with the sheriff by rejailing a man whom he found outside holding a reception with his friends, when the state had paid a reward for his capture. Sullivan and the sheriff both drew guns, but were kept apart, and the district judge, who seems to have been a sort of honorary "Buzzard," holding his office by virtue of society favor, undertook to get rid of Sullivan by sending him a long way off after some witness supposed to be wanted; though why they should want any witness in a court like that would be hard to guess.

Captain Bill himself now came down to look over the field. He had his hands full from the start.

McDonald interviewed the sheriff and the county officials in general, and delivered his opinions of them, individually and collectively, concluding with the statement that he would bring Sullivan back as soon as a message and steam would get him. The sheriff replied that Sullivan and he could not stay in the same town.

"Then move," said McDonald, "the county will be rid of one rascal. It will be rid of more before I get through here."

Captain Bill went to Austin, himself, after Sullivan, so that there might be no mistake about his coming. He presented the case to Governor Culberson and got his sanction; then sent word to his men at San Saba to meet them, and he arrived with Sullivan promptly on time. He had expected that there would be a demonstration by the sheriff and his friend, instead of which the streets of the little town were deserted.

Captain Bill began doing quiet detective work, a labor for which he has a natural aptitude, as shown by the shape of his ears and nose, and from the ferret look of his eyes that this would be so. Good citizens now took further courage and came to the camp with information. The Ranger captain looked over the field and undertook a case of a particularly cold-blooded sort.

A man named Asa Brown, one of the mob's early victims, had been hanged some 10 or 12 years before, and his son Jim, though he had never attempted to avenge his father's death, had fallen under the ban. Jim Brown had never even made any threats, but he must have been regarded as a menace, for one Sunday night while riding from church with his wife and her brother he was shot dead from ambush, his wife, whose horse became frightened and ran within range, receiving a painful wound.

Captain Bill secured information which convinced him that one Bill Ogle had been the chief instigator in this crime.

The murderers now realized that trouble was in store for them. Some of the men began quietly to leave the country. Others consulted together in secluded places and plotted to "kill Bill McDonald." Sympathizing citizens encouraged this movement, and anonymous warnings—always the first resort of the frightened criminal—began to arrive in the Ranger camp. Captain Bill paid no attention to such communications; he was used to them. He went on gathering and solidifying his evidence, preparatory to the arrest of Ogle and such of his associates as the proofs would warrant. Ogle, the "tiger" of the society, as he was considered, McDonald had not yet seen, as the tiger did not live in the town, and for some reason had lately avoided those precincts. He arrived however, in due season. Perhaps the brotherhood let him know that it was time he was taking a hand in the game.

Captain McDonald, one hot afternoon, was talking to an acquaintance on the streets of San Saba, when he noticed a stout, surly looking man with the village constable, not far away. Now and then they looked and nodded in his direction, and presently an uncomplimentary name drifted to his ear.

"Who is that fellow talking to that sorry constable?" he asked.

His companion lowered his voice to a discreet whisper.

"That is Bill Ogle," he said, "the worst man of the murder mob."

Captain Bill looked pleased.

"Good bye," he nodded, "I want to see Bill Ogle."

Ogle had crossed the street and passed through the courthouse to a hardware store on the other side—where a number of his friends had collected.

"Don't go over there, captain," cautioned his friend, "you'll be killed, sure."

"Well, I'll go over and see," Captain Bill replied quaintly, continuing straight toward the mob store.

As he entered there was a little stir, then silence. Evidently those present had not expected that he would walk straight among them. Here he was—they could kill him and put an end to all this trouble in short order. But somehow they didn't do it. There seemed no good moment to begin. Captain Bill walked over and faced Ogle.

"Come outside," he said quietly, "I want to talk to you."

Ogle hesitated.

"What do you want to say?" he asked sullenly.

Captain Bill laid his hand on Ogle's shoulder.

"I want to say some things that you might not want your friends to hear," he said—and a quaver in his voice then would have been death—"Come outside!"

Outside, Captain Bill led Ogle to the middle of the street. It was blazing hot and the sand burned through his boots, but he could talk to Ogle out there and keep an eye on the others too.

"Now, Bill Ogle," he said, in his deliberate, calm way—"I know all about you. I know how you and your outfit murdered Jim Brown—just how you planned it, and how you did it. I've got all the proof and I'm going to hang you if there is any law in this country to hang a man for a foul murder like that. That's what I'm here for, and I am not afraid of you, nor of any of the men over there in that store that helped you do your killing. You are all a lot of cowardly murderers that only shoot defenseless men from ambush, and I'm going to stay here until I break up your gang, if I have to put you every one on the gallows or behind the bars, and I'm going to begin with you."

As Captain Bill talked the sweat began to pour off of Ogle, and his knees seemed to weaken. Presently they could no longer support his stout body, and he sat heavily down in the hot sand, trying weakly to make some defense.

Ogle made several attempts to get on his feet, finally succeeded, and went back to his friends.

Next morning he was taken to jail and a strong guard was set.

Consternation now prevailed among the mob and its friends.

The examining trial of Bill Ogle was an event in San Saba. Josh McCormack was chief witness for the state, and was a badly scared man, in spite of the fact that the Rangers had armed him and guaranteed him protection from the members of the Buzzard's Water-Hole crowd. Other witnesses on both sides were frightened enough, for nobody knew what might happen before this thing ended.

When the court of examination adjourned Ogle was held without bail. Through the efforts of District Attorney Lynden it was decided to transfer the case to Llano county for final trial—Lynden making his fight for the change on the grounds that no fair trial could be obtained in the San Saba court.

In Llano county Ogle's case was fairly tried, and he received a life sentence. When the next election of county officials came around the old lot was wiped out clean, and men of character and probity came into power. The roads that led to the Bad Lands were kept dusty with the emigration of men who had formerly gathered at Buzzard's Water-Hole, and in their stead came those who would give to San Saba nobler enterprise and worthier fame.

YEGG'S LIFE STORY

"Liverpool Jack," Safeblower, Relates Experiences.

Once Tried to Blow Police Headquarters Safe to Get Revenge—Proves Self Guilty to Save Friend.

New York.—How he had once tried to blow open the safe at Mulberry street police headquarters in the '80s, as revenge for an unjust conviction got by one of Inspector Byrnes' men; how he had cleverly fooled a country justice of the peace after being caught on a safe-breaking job, by feigning to be drunk; and how he had later proved his own guilt, to save another man from the crime, was told recently at the new Center street headquarters by James Murphy, safe-breaker, arrested for carrying burglar's tools.

It was Murphy, known as "Liverpool Jack," who, with Red Leary and Johnny and Jimmy Hope, blew open the saft of the Manhattan bank, at Broadway and Bleecker street, in the early '70s. Murphy, now well past 70 years, has been implicated in many of the big safe-blowings of two generations. Released from the penitentiary on Blackwell's island only the other morning he was seized again on a bench warrant issued by Judge Rosalsky, charging him with carrying burglars' tools, at the time of his former arrest for carrying a revolver.

The old safe-blower told Inspector McCafferty of the robbery of the Manhattan bank, and said after his release from Sing Sing he went to Kansas City for five years.

"While I was away from the city," he went on, "a safe was blown. When I got back to New York in 1880 one of Byrnes' men nabbed me and railroaded me to prison, for this crime, of which I knew nothing. That was the one great act of injustice done me in all my career, and even the grave won't bring forgetfulness of that nasty piece of work.

Taken Before a Justice of the Peace.

"After I did that five years in Sing Sing for another man's crime I wanted to get square with Byrnes. I and another set out to blow open the safe in police headquarters. It was then in a little office off the big hall. We were at work on it when we heard footsteps, and if we hadn't been frightened off then we would have blown that cheesebox to bits."

In 1885 he went to Gloversville and robbed a safe there. He was arrested outside of the bank, while feigning intoxication, and actually had the loot on him. The policemen did not search him, but took him before a justice of the peace.

"'He was drunk outside the bank just robbed, your honor,' said the policeman," continued Murphy.

"'What's your business?' asked the justice.

"'I'm—hic—a bricklay—hic—er; hod carrier—hic—anything.'

"'How much money have you?'

"'Three—hic—dollars, judge.'

"'Well, you're fined $3, so you can't get drunk for a few days more.'

"But, inspector," continued Murphy, "the laugh was on me. Peggy Donovan was arrested for this crime I had committed, and railroaded to prison. When I learned of it I gave myself up and confessed to the crime. I had a hard time proving I had done the job. I had to subpoena the justice of the peace and the policeman from Gloversville. They bore out my story as far as they could. I was convicted, Peggy was freed and the three years and three months I did for that crime were some of the happiest years of my life."

How he got the name of "Liverpool Jack" was developed as follows:

"You remember, inspector, 'what you said to me a year ago, when I was nabbed with the gun and tools? You said: 'Murphy, you are old. Do you want to spend the remainder of your life in Sing Sing or in the convicts' home kept by the salvation army out on Long Island?' I told you I wasn't a hypocrite, and it was either freedom to go and do as I please or Sing Sing. I'm James Murphy, alias Connors, alias Liverpool Jack, and a few other fanciful names; professional criminal—safe-blower.'

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Crooks Use Comet as an Aid to Theft

YES, HE SEES THE COMET ALRIGHT
SURE

CHICAGO.—This is no "dream of the comet," nor a comet-gazer's dream. It is the thrilling narrative of the "Tale of the Comet," by the prince of comet finders, who went in search of it early one morning. The newly discovered gazer is Charles Gorrel, 56 East Chicago avenue.

Astronomer Gorrel was first discovered by two other gazers. He then discovered that Grant park was the best place to view the illustrious, heavenly, "lit up" Mr. Halley comet. Then, in the order of events, he paid just $100 currency, ring and watch to find the stellar vagrant's location. Ultimately, marvelous to relate, he discovered not Mr. Halley, but millions of unnamed comets, each with a luminous tail!

It wasn't the telescope that produced the new solar system for Mr. Gorrel. It was the gentle rap of a "black-jack" right at the base of Mr. Gorrel's medulla oblongata, near the astronomical gray matter. He was taken from prosaic consciousness to astral unconsciousness.

Mr. Gorrel detailed the "Tale of the Comet" to the police of the central detail and special policemen were detailed to look for the gentlemen who showed Mr. Gorrel the many comets' tails.

This is the story:

"Good morning, friend. Have you seen the 20,000,000-mile-tailed comet, Mr. Halley? The splendor of the night makes his luminosity perceptible to the naked eye?"

Gorrel looked at the two men, one of whom addressed him.

"Why, no," answered the interested Mr. Gorrel.

"Let us peregrinate in an easterly direction and gaze at the luminous stellar phenomenon," suggested the other comet gazer.

They peregrinated, Mr. Gorrel said, to Grant Park and the lake front and gazed into the sky.

"Now, Mr. Gorrel," counseled one of the gentlemen, "raise your glimmering glims to the glimmer of the stars of the fourth magnitude. Glimmer earnestly east of north over the lighthouse."

Mr. Gorrel did. Mr. Halley was not seen. He "glimmed" more.

"I think I see a small—"

Then his voice died out as the "black jack" struck a tender brain spot.

(Dream of Gorrel, to be read with pathos.)

"I saw above me, about me, below me, within me, millions of Mr. Halley-Comets. Each had a tail that reached to the earth. Each tail flapped in my face, each comet winked, blinked at me. They all seemed to cause a pain on the back of my head. I awoke. Good night! Comets gone, also friends. Watch gone, money gone and stickpin."

Thus the "Tale of the Comet."

Woman Still Savage, Says Professor

17 C
PERFUME

BOSTON.—Dr. Max Baff of Clark college, Worcester, and a member of the American Medical association, has come forth with the statement that there is but little to choose between present-day women and uncivilized beings from a psychological standpoint.

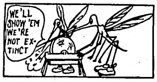
"Man has outgrown his savage customs of personal adornment with the progress of civilization," says Dr. Baff, "whereas woman has remained stationary if she has not actually retrograded.

"Woman delights in feathers, stuffed bodies of dead birds, even to the barnyard fowls that lack aesthetic suggestion of the forests and bring to mind only the butcher shop. She hangs bits of gold and gleaming stones on her ears, wears rings, bracelets and necklaces. Savage love of gaudy colors is another evidence of her lack of advancement. Then, again, she wears her hair long, arranges it in fantastic shapes, made even more grotesque by artificial means. As for painting her face, that is something that everybody knows.

"These are the outer symbols of her savagery, but the physical and psychological differences between men and women are marked. Color blindness is rare among women, just as it is rare among savages. Like savages, too, they are prone to religious hysteria. Women are more susceptible than men as is the simple savage."

Dr. Baff suggests remedies that might transform women from savagery to some semblance of civilization. He advises cutting their hair as men do, and wearing less clothes.

No Mosquitos In Jersey This Year?



WE'LL SHOW 'EM WE'RE NOT EXTINCT

NEW YORK.—There will be no mosquitoes in New Jersey this year, according to State Entomologist William S. Smith. He made the solemn declaration in Jersey City to Mayor Wittpen that he had examined all the swamps, marshes and mudholes in Hudson county and finds that the larvae of the mosquito have all been destroyed.

Ever since the advent of warmer weather the boards of health of Hudson, Bergen and other counties which mosquitoes have found favorable for breeding have been treating swamps and marshes with a preparation of oil which is represented to be sure death to the immature mosquito. The experts have found that after the mosquito gets its growth and escapes from its swampy birthplace it is impossible to keep it from breeding.

On the principle that the way to kill the mosquitoes is to subdue them before they can fly, the swamps, marshes and mudholes were liberally treated with the lethal oil. After giving the stuff ample time to get in its work the state entomologist examined the swampy places and found no sign of mosquito larvae.

Out of the Nature Fake Department

I DON'T ASSOCIATE WITH COMMON HENS NOW
UV ALL THINGS !-!

NEW YORK.—That auto-suggestion should play an important part in the laying of eggs is a new phase of hen psychology for poultry raisers to ponder on. Charles N. Wheelwright of Morris Park, L. I., has a hen named Spotty, a full grown, comely Plymouth Rock, that is now laying eggs no larger than pigeon eggs.

This egg is no bigger than a fair-sized hickory nut. It would take 30 or 40 such eggs to make a nourishing omelet.

However, the mere existence of this egg is not half so interesting as Mr. Wheelwright's theory of auto-suggestion, by which he accounts for the gradual declension in the size of Spotty's eggs.

Spotty, for almost a year, has been moored in a coop in Mr. Wheelwright's hennery, which adjoins the pigeon house. Looking out of the coop window Spotty is able to see the homing and carrier pigeons disporting themselves. She can also see the eggs laid by the pigeons and the squabs that hatch therefrom.

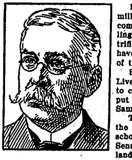
"Seeing these eggs laid by the pigeons," says Mr. Wheelwright, "has had a gradual effect upon Spotty's mind. Her subconscious processes have worked it out for her that if a pigeon can lay a small egg and get away with it—what is the use of a hen laying a larger egg?

"Of course I am not going to stand for this sort of diminishing eggs on Spotty's part. I have removed her from the vicinity of those pigeons and if she doesn't turn out a better sized product of egg she is going into the soup."

Frank J. Dedrich, a farmer of Oxford, N. Y., has developed a breed of hen which lays black eggs. He produced this result, he says, by feeding the hens with fine coal dust.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

SENATOR WHO IS ACCUSED



Francis Emroy Warren, United States senator, millionaire and first governor of Wyoming, has come into the limelight along with Richard Ballinger, secretary of the interior, because a mere trifle of 54,000 acres of public lands in Colorado have been fenced in in violation, it is alleged, of the federal laws.

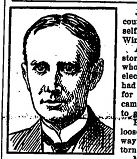
Senator Warren is president of the Warren Live Stock company, and this concern, according to charges made by A. S. Connolly of Cheyenne, put a fence around the 54,000 acres of Uncle Sam's domain as a place to feed cattle.

These acres, it is said, had been awarded to the state of Colorado under the act of 1875 for school purposes. In addition Mr. Connolly says Senator Warren put a fence around 12 miles of land in Wyoming in violation of the law.

Connolly alleges in a bill of particulars filed with the congressional committee now investigating the interior department and the forestry service that Senator Warren fenced the Colorado lands before 1903 and that in 1906 complaints were made to Secretary Hitchcock. An investigation was made, and President Roosevelt, according to the evidence, asked Assistant Attorney General Milton D. Purdy to make a decision on the strength of the report which would exonerate Senator Warren.

Secretary Garfield later started a movement to prosecute. Then, Mr. Connolly charges, Senator Warren went to the then chairman of the Republican state committee of Colorado and upon the promise that Senator Warren would procure for Denver a United States mint and other buildings, got him to work a request through the Colorado legislature to the federal government for the lands held by the Warren Live Stock company for school purposes and then to turn them over to the Warren Live Stock company.

WAYMAN THE GRAFT PROBER



John E. W. Wayman, state's attorney of Cook county, which is practically Chicago, finds himself much in the same position as was Joseph Wingate Folk, once circuit attorney of St. Louis.

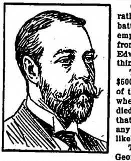
A Chicago morning newspaper printed a big story signed by Representative Charles White, who said he had received $1,000 for voting to elect William Lorimer United States senator and had been paid $900 out of a "jackpot" made up for "the boys." As a part of these transactions came off in Chicago, Mr. Wayman necessarily had to get busy with an investigation.

Back in 1901 a St. Louis evening paper turned loose a story that there was graft in a street railway bill and a city lighting measure. Circuit Attorney Folk got busy.

Mr. Folk is a Democrat. Mr. Wayman is a Republican. Because it happened that most of those first indicted by Folk were Republicans the cry was raised that it was a political plot. Now that those who have come under Mr. Wayman's fire are Democrats, he is accused of the same thing.

Mr. Wayman is conducting his graft probe much the same way that Mr. Folk pushed his. Folk went out to get confessions. He brought John K. Murrell back from Mexico, promised him immunity and got the former speaker of the house of delegates to tell all he knew. Then the smaller fry fell in line. Mr. Wayman had the advantage in having the confession of Representative White to work upon. However he soon had two other members admitting that they were bribed.

NEW KING OF GREAT BRITAIN



George V., the new king of England, would rather collect rare postage stamps or command a battleship than to administer the affairs of an empire. This statement came in all seriousness from London the day following the death of King Edward and is one of the strangest of the strange things said about the new monarch.

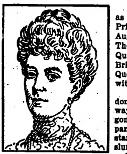
The king has a stamp collection that is worth $500,000, which he has gathered from all parts of the world since he became the prince of Wales when his illustrious grandmother, Queen Victoria died. It is said the king is just a common man; that he hates fuss and feathers and if there is any attempt to bind him up with red tape he is likely to get out his jacknife and go to cutting.

The dangerous life of the sea appealed to George and he still likes it. Consequently there is reason to believe that he will lend his influence toward the building of as many Dreadnaughts and Invincibles as the most radical of big navy enthusiasts may demand.

They say George V. has none of the tact and diplomacy that characterized his father and that he is bluff, rather blunt and says what he means. On the other hand, it is told of him that nothing gave him more pleasure than to visit the poor districts of the British capital and scatter words of kindness as well as money among the sick and disheartened.

The new king is deeply read and cultured and has kept in close touch with the literary world, likewise maintaining close relations with the officers who were his shipmates when he served his time in the navy.

NOW ENGLAND'S FIRST LADY



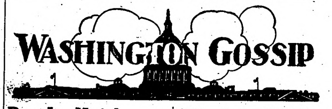
The new queen of England wants to be known as Victoria. She has always been known as Princess May and her full name is Victoria Mary Augusta Louise Olga Pauline Claudien Agnes. The name Mary came down to her from Mary Queen of Scots, but the new "first lady of the British empire" has no desire to be known as Queen Mary and her wishes will be complied with.

No royal personage is better known in London than the wife of the new monarch. She always has been democratic in her manner and has gone about London as she pleased. She has accompanied her royal husband on his visits to the stamp collectors. She has been at his side in the slums of East London when he was giving alms and delivering words of cheer to the sick. She is a splendid horsewoman and is fond of walking.

The queen is two years younger than the king and is his second cousin. They were great chums as children and have always continued as such, although the story is told that Princess May had to be urged to become the wife of the heir apparent.

Her mother, the duchess of Teck, was universally beloved as Princess Mary of Cambridge, and she reared her only daughter in all the best traditions of the country. The mother once refused the crown of an empress, as that would mean her departure from England, and she once said:

"I would rather be a princess of England than to have any other title in the whole world."



WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Boy In Knickers a Wireless Wonder

THE SLABY-ARCO MULTIPLE SYSTEM IS THE SYNTH-IC OR !-!-!
BRIGHT BOY

WASHINGTON.—Grave, gray-bearded members of the United States senate committee on commerce listened recently with respectful attention to the arguments of a 13-year-old boy in knickerbockers whose head barely topped the table which separated him and his dignified auditors.

The youthful orator was William E. D. Stokes, Jr., of New York, and his theme was wireless telegraphy and telephony. He is president of the Junior Wireless Club of America, Ltd., and he is opposed to certain features of the Depew bill, which provides for government regulation of wireless telegraphy.

Master Stokes said the members of his organization were amateur wireless telegraphers, all of tender years. He told the committee that the boys favored a nominal license fee for wireless operators, the license to be revocable for "malpractice."

The boy lobbyist's voice was youthful, but his words were those of a grown man and a scientist and his hearers smiled broadly at hearing him roll fluently from his tongue the polysyllabic technical terms of his craft. However, they paid respectful attention to his arguments and appeared impressed by what he said.

When he had finished his argument against the bill the boy turned prophet. He said that in ten years it would be possible for persons on land to communicate with distant points by wireless.

"If a man has an automobile breakdown 25 miles from home, ten years from now," he said, "all he will have to do will be to take out his wireless kit, call up his butler and tell him he will not come home to dinner."

Master Stokes also informed the members of the committee that foreign nations were far ahead of the United States in the development of wireless telegraphy and blamed the era of wireless stock exploitation this country has experienced. He said there were between 25,000 and 40,000 boys in the United States interested in wireless telegraphy and their experiments would prove of great value to the nation in the future.

Young Stokes is the son of the proprietor of the Ansonia apartment hotel in New York, and will be remembered as the first person to devise a receiving box for the interception of wireless telephone and telegraph messages.

This device was perfected in September, 1908, on the roof of his father's hotel.

Animals In Kitchen Peril to Health

FOILED
I'LL FIX THE PESKY CRITTERS

INSECTS play a large part as mechanical carriers of disease and none is worse than the common house fly, yet it is allowed to infest meat exposed for sale, bread and sweetmeats, berries, the edge of the milk pail and the food on the kitchen table.

The keynote of cleanliness is especially sounded with respect to keeping pet animals in the kitchen. The fur of the cleanest of them must come in contact with many things which we would not care to have touch our food.

This information is imparted in a bulletin issued by the department of agriculture, prepared under the supervision of the office of experiment stations. It is entitled, "Care of Food in the Home," and is for free distribution. Its author, Mrs. Mary Hinman Abel, has advanced many new ideas and called attention to many simple house methods that make for cleanliness and wholesomeness of foods in the home.

One of the most important suggestions is that in regard to ptomaine poisoning. On this subject the author says:

"Food may become dangerous even before it shows outward signs of decomposition and the danger hardly be recognized without laboratory apparatus. It is no uncommon thing to hear that a large number of persons attending a banquet were taken violently ill within a few hours. These cases of wholesale poisoning generally occur in summer after a heated term. It is a safe rule to eat sparingly of foods liable to changes in hot weather and where the serving of a large number at one time brings a strain on the culinary forces, when material is certain to be served which has been prepared a considerable time in advance."

Taft In Quandary; His Cook Has Quit

TO be the White House cook and prepare the food for the president, his family and guests is an honor, but to be the bride of an Irish policeman detailed for duty at the executive mansion has proved more attractive to Martha Peterson, who has resigned.

Now when Martha decided to become the wife of Policeman Mulvey she thought of her cousin in Sweden, who she says is a better cook than herself. So she recommended her cousin to the president as the chef. The president was considering the advisability of having Mrs. Mulvey's cousin to come over to Washington to do the White House cooking when the question arose: Is Swedish cooking an American industry to a great enough extent to demand protection under the contract labor law?

Foolish question No. 667,766! No, not at all, but the chances are it will be a mighty serious question with the honorable the attorney general of the United States and the honorable the solicitor general, ditto, ditto, to say nothing of the president of the same place, who needs the cook.

Just how serious are the intentions of the president toward his former cook's relative in Sweden time alone will divulge, but labor union officials are not so reserved. They, through Secretary Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor, cannot understand how the president can even consider the importation of a cook from Sweden.

Smoke as They Discuss Tobacco's Harm

RIGHT DOCTOR!
SMOKING INJURES A MAN

WITH smoke curling from their variflavored cigars, heart specialists from throughout the country who recently attended the congress of American physicians and surgeons gathered in Washington to discuss whether the prolonged and excessive use of tobacco meant "sudden death." At the close of a lengthy debate they were far from reaching an agreement as to what was the real effect of the use of tobacco on the heart.

Dr. H. L. Elsner of Syracuse, N. Y., introduced the subject by discussing the influence of tobacco on hypertension in the circulatory system. Smoking in moderate amount by grown persons might not be injurious, he said, but he expressed a belief that smoking was injurious to those who had hereditary heart afflictions.

Dr. Judson Daland of Philadelphia told of a family of four whose parents had died of causes other than angina pectoris. Three of the brothers, cigar manufacturers, who were compelled to smoke more than 20 cigars a day, developed angina pectoris, while a sister at the age of 52 never had suffered from the disease.

So far the anti-tobacco men had had the floor. Dr. R. G. Curtin of Philadelphia rose to stem the tide. He told of 60 cases of angina pectoris, in which seven of them were in female subjects.

He pointed to Japan, "where boys begin to smoke at nine and girls at ten, and where angina pectoris is not common," to prove that tobacco did not cause the disease. He said it might aggravate the disease but not cause it. So might the mind, for that matter, he said. He told of an Episcopal bishop who always had an attack of angina pectoris when he drove up hill and of another patient who was had an attack of this disease when he run for a street car.

THE HEART OF YOUTH.

We have been told that as long as we keep our hearts young we need have no fear of the depressing loneliness of advancing years, and many writers more or less experienced in such matters have suggested many ways in which we can accomplish that desired end. No two natures, however, are alike, and it follows that no set of hard and fast rules can be made to apply to each distinct personality. The man or woman who passes through life alive to the blessings which abound on every side rarely ceases to become an active contributor to the lives of others, and as long as a person actually participates in any work, large or small, the influence of his personality is bound to be felt and his counsel regarded. It is only when one has tired of the game, or enters only half-heartedly into affairs outside of his own special interests that he ceases to exercise any influence, and his individuality is no longer recognized. Enthusiasm seems in some way to be an attribute of the youthful character; at any rate, it is far easier to become interested in what is going on in our immediate circle when the pulse beats high and the blood courses warmly than in later years when so many of us are concerned only with our own affairs and evince but small interest in the doings of others.

In the good old days they used to have signboards at the crossroads in the country region to point the pilgrim on his way. It was always a cheery sign. It spoke a welcome to the stranger. It indicated a disposition to be helpful. But these signboards are nearly all gone. Only now and then you see one, and then it seems like the relic of a bygone friendship. It seems to say to the stranger: "We once took an interest in you, but we do so no longer; if you don't know the way, what do we care?" That is the situation today; a forlorn one, indeed; a cheerless one. No little sign thrown out, saying: "We are thinking of you, we care for you, we want you to go right." Now, this ought not to be. There should be little signboards to greet him, and to tell him the way he ought to go. This thought is getting some headway in Massachusetts, where there is an effort to restore the signboards, and to give to the stranger the help of knowing where he is.

There is a new reform out in Iowa, and it is started by 18 young ladies, prominent in social circles, who have at last discovered the abomination that exists in mere gossip, and so they have organized to suppress it, says Ohio State Journal. They call their organization the "Antigossip society." This is a fine effort. It means intellectual and moral uplift. It means that conversation shall deal with real things—with science, philosophy, literature, history, nature and those things that adorn and uplift life. It is not to be thought for an instant that it is the young women alone that need to organize for this high purpose. The male section of mankind needs just such a reformatory movement. We might say they need it more than the women.

Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, who is on his way as special envoy from the United States to the centenary celebration of the independence of the Argentine republic at Buenos Ayres, stopped of at Havana, where the former American governor of the island had a reception which left no doubt as to the place he holds in Cuban hearts. In fact, it may be said he showed them how to govern themselves, and the success they have attained is a tribute to the effectiveness of his lessons.

Two baseball fatalities in one day—one at Freeburg, Ill., and the other at Troy, N. Y.—will be cited by football enthusiasts as evidence that the gridiron is not the only place where sport is sufficiently violent at times to cause death. But if the number of the games and the thousands of players are taken into account, it will appear that the risks of baseball are infinitesimal in comparison with those of football.

WORLD GATHERS AT KING'S BIER

Funeral Ceremonies of Edward VII. Attended by Representatives of All Nations.

THOUSANDS GAZE ON COFFIN

For Three Days Subjects of the Late Monarch View Remains Lying in State—Final Observances at Royal Palace of Windsor.

London, Eng.—With all the pomp and formal observances befitting the obsequies of the ruler of a great nation, King Edward's funeral pageant on May 20 is classed as the most imposing ceremonial in the history of Great Britain's capital.

The streets through which the procession passed were lined with upward of 30,000 picked troops of the British army, and among the mourners were the rulers of every country in Europe, or their representatives. In this assembly ex-President Roosevelt rode as the special envoy of the United States, every honor being accorded America's distinguished representative.

At a conservative estimate 700,000 persons passed through Westminster hall to look upon the coffin of the king lying in state. Barriers were built, by means of which the people were ushered through in four lines at the rate of 18,000 an hour. The body of the late king was not exposed to view. The mourners saw only the coffin, with the official regalia and heaps of flowers.

Queen Mother Chose Hymns.

The hymns sung at the service at Windsor were all of the queen mother's choice. They were "My God, My Father, While I Stray," "Now the Laborer's Task Is O'er," and "I Heard a Voice From Heaven."

Scotland yard had all its detectives on duty, and these were reinforced by a hundred more from continental cities. All visitors were watched, but there was little real fear of anarchistic attempts, because it was known that every one under surveillance would be deported from England if any trouble were caused on this occasion, and it was not likely that the persons of the anarchist type would give up voluntarily their safest refuge in Europe.

The procession to Westminster hall May 17 for the lying in state was almost on as great a scale as the funeral procession. The cortege included King George and all the foreign sovereigns on horseback, and the queen mother and the royal ladies in carriages.

When the funeral procession started every street car in London came to a standstill for a quarter of an hour. All the public houses in London were closed while the procession was passing.

No Distinction Shown.

There was no distinction as to person nor were there any ticket privileges for the lying in state in Westminster hall. All had to take their turn in line.

At St. George's chapel, at Windsor, from whence the body was carried to its final resting place the carved stalls were removed in order to give place to timber seating. Otherwise not a tenth of those entitled to attend would have been able to enter. The chapel was draped with violet hangings.

Violet was the predominant tone of all the funeral drapings and public decorations, it being well known that King Edward greatly disliked the gloom given by black draperies.

The service held in Westminster abbey did not form any part of the royal funeral. It was a memorial service held especially for those members of the house of lords and house of commons, who were unable to go to Windsor.

Electric standards were fixed around the place in Westminster hall where the catafalque stood. The public was admitted until ten o'clock at night. The catafalque occupied the spot on which Gladstone's catafalque stood.

The Court at Windsor.

The court removed to Windsor the day before the funeral. The archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by Canon Wilberforce, conducted a short service at Westminster hall on the arrival of the body on May 17. The members of both houses of parliament attended this service.

Neither M. Loubet, M. Delcasse nor M. Clemenceau formed part of the French mission to attend the funeral of King Edward. Premier Briand intended to go, but also gave up the idea, owing to the fact that Emperor William was there. Under these circumstances the mission was purely formal. It consisted of M. Pichon, minister of foreign affairs; General Dalstein, military governor of Paris; Admiral Marquis and an attache representing President Fallieres.

Roosevelt Among the Monarchs.

Ex-President Roosevelt, who was named as special envoy of the United States to attend the funeral of King Edward, was presented to King George soon after his arrival in London. Mr. Roosevelt occupied a place with the visiting monarchs in the funeral procession and attended the burial at Windsor.

Jackies Drew Carriage.

King George being so closely identified with the navy, the naval contingents took a prominent part in the ceremonies. Bluejackets drew the gun carriage to Windsor, as they did the carriage which bore the body of Victoria, although on that occasion they did so because the horses became restive.

Soldiers from the king's company, grenadier guards, kept sentry watch over the body in the throneroom at Buckingham palace. They were relieved each hour. With simple ceremony some one of the visiting royalties entered the room every now and then, and the widowed queen went there frequently.

Body in Magnificent Tomb.

The body of King Edward lies with that of his immediate ancestors in the magnificent mausoleum at Frogmore, in the Home park of Windsor castle. In this structure, erected by Queen Victoria at a cost of $1,000,000, Prince Albert Edward, father of the late king, was laid to rest in 1861. In the same year Queen Victoria's mother, the duchess of Kent, was buried in an elaborate tomb in the grounds near by. In 1901 Queen Victoria herself was buried in the mausoleum beside her husband.

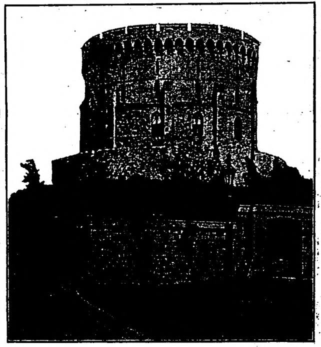
The structure is probably one of the most elaborate of the kind in existence. It was planned in minute detail by Queen Victoria as a memorial to the prince consort. The general public is not admitted to the chamber where lie the royal bodies in two immense sarcophagi, but the spot is a great magnet for tourists, dozens of whom inspect the marble mausoleum daily.

King George Dislikes His Office.

The new monarch is good intentioned and amiable and is not lacking in common sense, native ability, whereto have been added all the advantages of fine training, but his tastes are domestic and he dislikes the publicity and conspicuousness of his new prerogatives. He would be happy to live the life of a country squire, and already it is a common saying that Queen Mary will exercise all the social powers which appertain to the throne and will have a strong influence as well in all affairs of state. This is unfair exaggeration, but the new court will be markedly different from that of Edward. Several conspicuous figures will disappear, and the court of King George will bear a close resemblance to that of Queen Victoria.

Now that King Edward is gone it is possible to give some hint of the paradoxical effect of his death. His influence, as all the world knows, was more powerfully for peace than that of any man of modern times, yet curiously enough his death removes one cause of friction between England and Germany.

ROUND TOWER OF WINDSOR CASTLE.



From St. George's chapel, within the precincts of this palace of the late king his body was borne to the mausoleum.

PRESIDENT DENIES REPORT

TAFT SAYS HE DID NOT DENOUNCE THE INSURGENTS.

Confers With Aldrich, Root and Wickersham Over Latest Phase of Senate Trouble.

Washington.—Administration senators were authorized by President Taft on Wednesday to emphatically deny the reports which have gained wide circulation during the past few days that he had in any manner denounced the Insurgent senators or had used language to which they might take offense.

Reports reached the White House that some of the Insurgents, smarting under what they had heard had been said of them, were determined to defeat the railroad bill and other of the president's measures, regardless of what might happen to them or to the party.

This latest phase of the much-troubled situation in the senate was discussed at the White House Wednesday at a conference between the president, Senators Aldrich and Root and Attorney General Wickersham. The president declared he could not recall having said anything regarding the Insurgents which could in any way justify the reports. The president was told that the remarks attributed to him were alleged to have been made to a number of newspaper men.

Members of the Ballinger-Pinchot committee are discussing the probability of a report during the present session of congress. Several members said the hearings could not be concluded and the mass of testimony reviewed and passed upon before congress adjourned.

150 NARROWLY ESCAPE DEATH

Excursion Steamer Sinks—Passengers Are Saved Through Heroism of Engineer and Pilot.

Kansas City, Mo.—The excursion steamer Uncle Sam collided with a sand barge in the Missouri river, at the foot of Grand avenue, and sank.

One hundred and fifty passengers, 25 of them women, had narrow escapes from death.

Their lives were saved by the heroism of Roy Taylor, the engineer, and W. L. Thompson, pilot of the boat. When the sand barge punched a hole in the stern of the boat and she began to sink, the engineer put on full speed ahead and the pilot headed her for the shore, while the passengers, panic-stricken, ran screaming from one side of the deck to the other.

Within ten feet of the shore the boat sank to the bottom and tipped over until her decks were at an angle of 45 degrees. All the lower deck was under water.

People ran to the river bank from all directions; planks were carried and thrown out to the boat forming a bridge ten feet long, and over this the passengers went ashore.

Had the boat sunk one minute sooner she would have gone down in the deep channel of the river and many lives would have been lost.

70,000 GET WAGE INCREASE

Standard Oil Adds Many Millions to Pay Envelopes of Its Employees.

New York.—A voluntary wage increase that will affect approximately 70,000 men, has been made by the Standard Oil company. The remarkable increase to workmen, who in the entire history of the concern, have never been on strike, ranges from 6 to 10 per cent.

The order is retroactive and became effective May 1. It is estimated that the company will add from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 to its annual pay roll expense.

The new scale affects employees engaged in the company's works and factories, but the office men will not be benefited by this increase. Most of the employees who will get the increase are laborers, and the advance applies to all the subsidiary companies in the United States.

Willing to Pay for Rammer.

When the British square at the battle of Abu Klea, in the Nubian desert, was penetrated by the dervishes, one of them attempted to spear a gunner who was in the act of ramming home a charge. The Briton brained the Sudanese, but the rammer head split on the man's hard skull. Next day the gunner was sent for. Mistaking the reason, and knowing from experience that soldiers are charged for government property which they break, he led off with: "Please, sir, I'm very sorry I broke the rammer, but I never thought the fellow's head could be so hard. I'll pay for the rammer so as to hear no more of the case."

"How often have you been down?" asked the stevedore, shielding the flickering match from the wind.

"Once, I believe, but hurry up, man! Give me a hand!"

"You wait! You have two more times yet to go down, and I have only one match. I'll catch you on the last trip."—Exchange.

Old Men in Responsibility.

The American business system, which gives mere boys responsible positions before they have acquired practical experience, is to an Englishman quite unaccountable. He wonders whether it does not cause reckless trading and wild speculation. In other countries they prefer to keep elderly men in responsible positions because they can be depended upon. Messrs. Statues of War-time Heroes

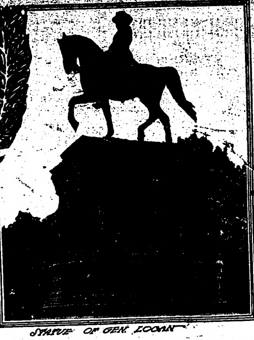
by WALDON FAWCETT

STATUE OF GEN. HANCOCK



STATUE OF GEN. LOGAN

Photographs by WALDON FAWCETT

STATUE OF ADMIRAL FARRAGUT

STATUE OF GEN. THOMAS

STATUE OF GEN. SHERMAN

RECENT arrangements for the completion this year of a $250,000 statue to Gen. U. S. Grant and the unveiling of a statue to Gen. Phil. Sheridan, the dashing cavalry leader of the Civil war, following close upon the dedication of similar bronze figures of Generals Sherman and McClellan, betokens the intention of the American people to provide, through their representatives in congress, a most notable testimonial in sculpture to the leaders of the war for the Union. No other country in the world can boast so pretentious a tribute to the heroes of any conflict in its history.

To honor by counterfeit presentments in marble and bronze the saviors of the republic will cost the nation, ultimately, millions of dollars, but unquestionably it will be worth all it costs as a lesson in patriotism for coming generations. This labor of gratitude has been in progress for some years past, and already a dozen or more of the foremost warriors in the Union army have been thus honored. Of late years, however, the importance has been emphasized by the increasingly elaborate character of the monuments erected. The climax will come a year (or less) hence, with the completion of that splendid memorial to General Grant for which the congress of the United States has appropriated a quarter of a million dollars, and for the foundation of which ground has been set aside in the shadow of the United States capitol.

The scene of this shrine to military fame is, appropriately enough, the national capital—the city of Washington, which is coming year by year to take on more and more the character of a beautiful creation in architecture and sculpture and landscape gardening that is the property of the whole people. The statues to the victors in the struggle between the north and south occupy conspicuous positions in the most advantageously located of the parks and circles with which the seat of government abounds—verdure-clad breathing spaces which seem as though they might have been specially provided as sites for just such heroic or life-size figures. Some of the statues are under the shadow of the capitol, others cluster about the White House, and yet others are placed where they will kindle inspiration in the patriotic pilgrim to the capital.

Much of the impressiveness of the statues to the military heroes of the Federal armies is doubtless due to the fact that almost all of them are equestrian. It is customary in all countries to portray as "men on horseback" only the so-called royal personages, or men who were actual commanders of troops, or enjoyed the title of commander. The first equestrian statue ever erected in the Western Hemisphere, was the one of George III. of England, which stood in Bowling Green at the foot of Broadway, New York city, and which during the war for independence was melted up and cast into bullets by patriotic daughters of Miss Columbia.

The oldest equestrian monument now standing in the New World is a colossal statue of Charles IV. of Spain, in the City of Mexico. The initial equestrian statue in the United States is the renowned one of Gen. Andrew Jackson, which stands in the park directly in front of the White House at Washington. It is estimated that there are 400 equestrian statues in the world, of which number the city on the Potomac will have, with the completion of the Grant memorial, a total of 12, most of them representations of Civil war heroes.

The first statue arranged for in honor of a warrior identified with the Civil war was that in which Gen. Winfield Scott is depicted mounted on a charger at rest. This monument was ordered in 1867, and was erected seven years later. General Scott is in the uniform of lieutenant general. The material for the figures of horse and rider was derived from cannon captured during the Mexican war in which General Scott won his greatest fame. The pedestal for this statue is made up of five huge pieces of granite cut in Cape Ann quarries, and at the time they were obtained, the largest pieces of granite ever cut from quarries in this country.

Next came the erection of a statue to Gen. James B. McPherson. This was erected through the efforts of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, and it was intended that the monument should constitute McPherson's tomb. Beneath the statue is a vault designed to receive the body of the gallant officer killed near Atlanta, but such interment was never made. The statue represents McPherson as he led in battle. In his right hand he holds field glasses and is portrayed as gazing deliberately over a field of battle.

Surpassingly inspiring and magnificent is the statue erected to Gen. George H. Thomas by his comrades of the Army of the Cumberland in 1874. The "Rock of Chickamauga" is represented reining in his horse in order that he may obtain a better view of a field of battle. J. Q. A. Ward is the sculptor of this masterpiece, and every person who has seen it will readily agree with the art critics that there is not in the whole range of the world's sculpture so splendid a representation of a horse as the charger on which the Virginian is seated.

A fine equestrian statue of General Hancock was unveiled in 1896. Alike to the Thomas statue, the pose is one of action, the hero of Gettysburg being portrayed as a commander watchful and alert in the center of activities. The statue of General Logan, the first of the memorials to be unveiled during the present century, is unique in many respects. General Logan is represented as riding along the line of battle his sword drawn and carried low in his right hand. The horse is represented in the attitude of moving at a slow trot. On one face of the pedestal of the monument is a group representing General Logan with other leading officers of the Army of the Tennessee, while opposite is a group representing General Logan taking the oath of office as United States senator, administered by Vice-President Arthur.

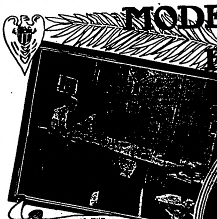
All of these equestrian statues have cost considerable sums. The General Scott statue cost $20,000, and the pedestal $25,000 more. The bronze figure of McPherson cost $23,000, and the pedestal $25,000. The sum of $40,000 was paid for Ward's matchless statue of Thomas, and $25,000 for the pedestal. The statue of General Hancock involved the expenditure of $49,000 all told, and the Logan statue cost $65,000, of which sum congress appropriated $50,000. As has been said, the maximum expenditure will be made in the case of the great memorial to General Grant, upon which at least $250,000 will be expended.

Because no definite program was followed in honoring the heroes of the Civil war, it came about that some of the lesser leaders were commemorated in bronze ere the greatest Union leaders received homage in this form. However, the past few years has witnessed the beginning of compensation in this direction. The first step was the provision of a heroic equestrian statue, with an attendant group of symbolic figures of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman.

Next after the Sherman statue came the statue to McClellan, which shows "Little Mac" seated upon a splendid charger, and portrays the great organizer of the Union army wearing the service cap which became familiar to all the boys in blue who followed him. Now the nation has added to its open-air gallery of fame a statue of Gen. Phil Sheridan.

MODERN SCULPTURE FOR OUR BATTLEFIELDS

BY WALDON FAWCETT



DESIGNING THE NATION'S BATTLEFIELD MEMORIALS

CARVING A BATTLEFIELD MONUMENT

CHISELING WITH A COMPRESSED AIR TOOL

PHOTOS COPYRIGHT BY WALDON FAWCETT

THE MAKING of battlefield monuments and memorials has developed into an important industry in the United States during the past few years. This is due, first of all, to the increase in the number and size of our battlefield national parks. It is now the policy of the national government, ably seconded by most of the state governments, to convert into national parks the tracts of land in the southern and middle states which were the scenes of the great battles of the Civil war. Each year sees new reservations of this kind acquired by purchase of congress or through other means and set aside as permanent testimonials of the nation's gratitude to the men who fought and died there. Keeping pace with the creation of new parks is the policy of extension being pursued with reference to the older established battlefield parks which have not included at the outset—as few of them have—the entire areas embraced in the battle which they commemorate.

A second and even more direct influence in fostering the present activity in the creation of memorials in marble and bronze is the custom which has grown up with the development of the battlefield park plan of suitably marking every historic spot at the scene of a great struggle between the Union and Confederate forces. This explains the dozens and even hundreds of statues, monuments and markers that are now to be found in the average important battlefield park. Some of the monuments are erected by appropriation of congress or by funds set aside by the legislatures of states that desire to thus honor their sons who fought in defense of the flag. An even greater number of these enduring tributes, however, have been erected by organizations made up of the survivors of companies, troops, batteries, regiments or other minor divisions of a contesting army, and who take this means of testifying to their regard for their fallen comrades.

Perhaps the best evidence of the extent to which modern sculpture is being relied upon to commemorate the deeds and the heroes of the greatest of civil wars is afforded by a tour of the Gettysburg National park. Here, lining more than 100 miles of carefully prepared roadway and marking every significant point in the three days' battle, are a total of more than 400 monuments, memorial shafts and tablets and more than 1,000 markers. Many of these testimonials in marble, granite and bronze are elaborate and costly and the aggregate cost amounts to several million dollars. And yet on this battlefield as elsewhere the labor of love is only partially completed. Numerous other monuments are definitely projected and yet others are in contemplation.

The provision of monuments in ever-increasing numbers for the battlefields (of which Gettysburg is only one) would indeed be an appalling task were it necessary to laboriously chisel out of marble by hand all the statues and carved figures. However, modern ingenuity has provided means for effective "short cuts" in battlefield sculpture—expedients that make it possible to unveil a monument within a few months after the money for it has been appropriated. Many of the present-day battlefield memorials are in bronze and in the cast of such a monument it is only necessary to model the figure in plaster. Molds are taken from this and when forwarded to the foundry enable the casting of the figure in bronze—a replica or exact duplicate of the original design which the sculptor fashioned in the clay or plaster.

The correspondingly rapid creation of granite or marble statues presented for a long time more of a problem, but it has been solved and largely by the invention of some wonderful new tools and appliances which make the long-dreamed-of "sculpture by machinery" a reality. The machines, or rather tools, which now perform in minutes what the old-time hand chiseler required hours to accomplish, are all operated by means of compressed air, utilized in much the same way that

At each one of these modern monument making institutions the air is compressed at a central power plant and is led by means of pipes and hose to the various localities where the mechanical chiseling is to be done. The designs for a statue or monument are first prepared by draftsmen and are then outlined on the stones to be cut. With these markings as a guide a workman manipulating one of the portable pneumatic tools can carve out quickly and with great accuracy the intended design. The principle of the superiority of the mechanical carver is that it rains hundreds of blows a minute, whereas the artisan with mallet and chisel would not deliver more than one or two blows. It can be appreciated that the surface to be cut is covered much more rapidly by the machine method, and moreover the air-driven chisel will cut more accurately and with greater uniformity than any save the most expert sculptor unaided

Very Fishy.

She was a fisherman's daughter, she wore her hair in a net, and she preferred love in a piscatorial way.

"My love," he whispered, "you hold first 'place' in my heart! Although I 'flounder' about in expressing myself, my 'sole' wish is that you will save me from becoming a 'crabbed' old bachelor. I shall stick to you closer than a 'limpet,' from you a 'wink'll' be the road to guide me. Together we will 'skate' over life's 'rocks,' and when I look at your hand beside me I shall say to myself: 'Fortune was mine when I put 'herring' there!"

And then the lady dropped her eyes in sweet confusion, and murmured:

"Pass the salt."

A Quick Cat.

Some years ago the proprietor of a hotel in southern New Hampshire told the following story: He said that when he was a boy he had occasion to go into the garret of his house one morning and that the family cat followed him up the stairs. One of the windows was open, and when they entered the garret a frightened mouse jumped out of the window, and the cat, jumping after it, caught it in midair and, whirling round, jumped back again into the same window.

THE SUNBEAM,

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Every county in Northern Minnesota will be represented at the big developement conventon to be held at Crookston next week, June 1, 2, and 3rd, and it will be one of the most notable gatherings ever held in the nothern part of the state.

It seems to be awful quiete, among candidates for county office. We guess none of them like to mention it, for fear some one will ask them, how they stand on county division. Take our advice gentelmen, and don't try to play both ends, for if you do, you are sure to fall through the middle.

The newspapers up this way are giveing "Pusseyfoot" Johnson, captain of the norther Minnesota "pot gang" lots of advertiseing, without sending him any bills. Soak it to him! He has no business to come up here into northern Minnesota and set up a kingdom, and say who shall, or shall not sell intoxicating liquors.

Albert Anderson, publisher of the Olberg Journal, has been appointed post master at Clearbrook, a new town on the Duluth Soo line, in Clearwater county, and the post offices of Olberg, Teckla and Leon will be discontinued. Congratulations Bro. Anderson, and we suppose it will soon be the Clearbrook Journal. We hope to see Mr. Anderson continue the publication of the Journal, as we certainly would miss it from our X table.

A GOOD INVESTMENT,

The history of the Highlanding creamery has been one of continual progress, from the day that it first opened its doors to do business up to date. The first organizers of the Association went at it with a determination to organize and build this creamery, although they were repeatedly met with a wise shake of the head and the remark, "you have not got cows enough," but the history of the success of the creamery has proven that we did have cows enough to make the start and the teritory to raise more. Two years ago this summer the first year the creamery was built it ran rather light and closed down for a couple of months during the first winter, then it again opened the doors for business, and has run steadily ever since, and now it is running nearly up to its full capasity of 6000 lbs of cream per day.

The board of directros of the creamery are all farmers and the creamery is run strictly on the principal of, "use all alike."

There never has, and we hope never will be any attempt made, by the board of directors or any member of the Association to do any injury to any other creamery, but the Highlanding creamery was built to do business, and the hand of welcome is gladly extended, and any farmer that wants to bring his cream to it, may be sure of, honest weight, a fair test, and a "square deal."

The management of the creamery is under Henry Paulson, who is second to no butter maker in northern Minnesota, and he tests every delivery and gives a statement to every patron, so they know just how much their cream weighed, what it tested and how much it came to.

Her Only Course.

Lady Anne Lindsay, the author of the old poem "Auld Robin Gray," was not only a delightful conversationalist, but she was a great story teller.

This gift made her not only a welcome guest abroad, but a valuable member of the home circle, for it is related in "A Group of Scottish Women" that at a dinner party which she was giving to some friends an old manservant caused some amusement by saying in a perfectly audible undertone:

"My lady, you must tell another story. The second course won't be ready for five minutes."

Harold Chose the Easier Way.

Maynard had been naughty, and his father, after showing him his fault, had sent him up to his room to ask God to forgive him for being a bad boy. Three-year-old Harold was present, but seemed to take no notice of the conversation. It was his turn, however, before many days to receive punishment, and his father took him across his knee. How He Paid His Fine.

Pat Kelly, the owner of the only jaunting car in the village, went on a spree and was sentenced to a fine of 20 shillings or seven days in jail. Kelly chose the latter.

Now, the prison was ten miles away, and the only possible means of getting a prisoner there was by driving. As Kelly himself had the only car in the place, there was nothing to do but to hire it. For some time the constable and his prisoner haggled over the terms.

Kelly stuck out firmly for 30 shillings, to be paid in advance and at last the constable had to consent to the extortion. Accordingly they drove off and without any misadventures arrived at the prison. When they had alighted Kelly suddenly informed his companion that he had changed his mind, as the prison wasn't a decent looking place, and would pay the fine.

He thereupon drew out the 30 shillings he had received, counted out the 20 shillings and paid them over to the inspector. Then, jumping on his car, he drove away, leaving the constable to walk back.

Strange Hiding Place.

False teeth are occasionally used for secretive purposes. First Use of Iron.

As a result of his interesting investigations, Dr. Ridgeway concludes that the smelting of iron originated in central Europe, and especially in the region known as Noricum, equivalent to modern Austria and Bavaria.

In Egypt it can be traced back to the ninth century B. C., and in Libya to about 450 B. C. First mention of its use in China goes back to 400 B. C., while in Uganda it is said to have been in use only some five or six centuries.

The above date for the first use of iron in Egypt refers to the metal obtained by smelting. The use of native iron in the form of meteorites dates back to remote antiquity. The weapons made from these were obtained, like flint implements, by chipping. And it is interesting to remember that recent investigations have shown that the iron of many meteorites is a sort of natural steel.

Old English Fine.

In the past if one Englishman called another a liar there was something to pay. The seventeenth century mayor, sheriff and city grandees generally were keen on this point of etiquette. The direct accusation cost 11s. 6d. ($2.70); the subtle hint 6s. 8d. ($1.60). And there was a reduction on repetitions.

Swearing, too, was promptly suppressed. In 1650 a law was passed laying down the penalty for a first offense. The fines were graduated. That for a lord was 30 shillings ($7.20), for an esquire 10 shillings ($2.40), while all "inferior persons" could have a "few words" for 3s. 4d. (80 cents).

FOURNIER ON TRIAL

WORK OF SELECTING JURY BEGINS IN THE QUIRING, MINN., MURDER CASE.

CHARGED WITH KILLING A. DAHL

With Change of Venue, Accused Man Is Certain He Will Be Acquitted—Prejudice Convicted Him, He Says.

THE JURY.

The following men, chosen in the order named, to try Paul Fournier for murder, are farmers, with two exceptions:

Preston Chapman, farmer, living 35 miles north of Aitkin.

W. P. Gorsuch, farmer, Town of Waukenoba, 14 miles north of Aitkin.

Calvin Hyslop, former, living east end of Aitkin county.

James E. Ryan, farmer.

H. Brooks, farmer.

D. Peddecourt, farmer.

C. Kathan, ex-Methodist minister.

John T. Packer.

Andrew Magnuson, farmer.

C. M. Smith, timber cruiser.

W. A. Eastwood, farmer.

Zach Harris, farmer.

Aitkin—The trial for his life of Paul Fournier, of Beltrami county, on the charge of having killed Aagot Dahl at Quiring, Beltrami county, April 7, 1904, was commenced in the district court, with Judge C. W. Stanton, of Bemidji, sitting on the bench, the case having been transferred from Beltrami county to Aitkin county by Judge McClenahan, who granted the application of Fournier's attorney, C. W. Scrutchin, of Bemidji, for a change of venue. The attorney alleged prejudice and inability to get a fair trial in Beltrami county, where the defendant had once been convicted of the charge of having killed N. O. Dahl.

Defense Objects to Swedes.

Two of the members of the petit jury were excused, three were accepted as jurors and 10 were rejected. T. W. Scrutchin, chief counsel for Fournier, exercised four preemptories in excusing "undesirables" and Attorney McKusick used one preemptory for the state. The balance of those examined were proven to be incompetent for one reason or another, a number being actually rejected for not possessing enough knowledge of court matters to enable them to intelligently try a case. The defense showed plainly that it desired no person of Swedish birth on the jury, it being evident that they feared prejudice from Scandinavians because of the fact that the late N. O. Dahl and his daughter were Norwegians.

The little Frenchman who is again o ntrial for the most serious crime with which a man can be charged is calm and collected and his outward appearance at least indicates not the least doubt on his part that he will be freed and given his liberty.

Implies His Own Innocence.

In an interview Fournier said:

"I am confident that it Aitkin, a neutral county, before an unprejudiced, fair-minded jury, that I will be acquitted. I have never wavered in my faith that the truth will eventually come out as to how N. O. Dahl and his daughter, Aagot, really met their tragic deaths in the lonely woods near Quiring; and that the real perpetrators of the dastardly crimes will yet be punished for their heinous work is certain. I would never have been convicted the first time I was tried on the charge of having killed N. O. Dahl had the case been heard in a community where public sentiment was not so wrought up as to demand that someone—most anyone—would be punished for the murders. All I ask is a fair trial before an impartial jury, in an unprejudiced community, and I am not fearful of the result. All these conditions are met here at this trial, and I am well pleased."

Chester McKusick, of Bemidji, county attorney of Beltrami county, is in charge of the case against Fournier for the state and he is being assisted in getting the jury by Louis Hallum, of Aitkin, county attorney of Aitkin county. C. W. Scrutchin, Bemidji's colored attorney, is defending Fournier and Attorney Crowell, of Brainerd, is assisting Scrutchin.

While Prosecutor McKusick will say little concerning the case it is known that he has been working diligently to present a strong chain of evidence against Fournier and that he has some new matters that will be given at this trial. He has been assisted by Thomas Bailey, Sr., who was sheriff of Beltrami county at the time the Dahls were killed and who also was serving as sheriff at the first trial of Fournier.

Attorney Scrutchin is all smiles and unhesitatingly declares he will free Fournier.

County Optionists Speak at Windom.

Windom.—Sunday was a big day for the county optionists of this locality. Superintendent P. J. Youngdahl, Donald MacKenzie, of Mankota, and Rev. W. H. Miller, of Minneapolis, were the principal speakers. Each of these men spoke in the various churches in the forenoon and in the evening a mass meeting was held in the opera house, at which Superintendent Youngdahl was the principal speaker. Mr. Youngdahl urges every voter to work for a county opt'on candidate, regardless of party.

SCHOOL TEACHER MURDERED.

Willmar Man, After Committing Deed, Ends His Own Life.

Willmar. — Miss Goldie Cale, 23 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Cale, of this city, was shot and killed by John McGuire, a farmer of Hegbert, who then ended his own life by hanging.

The girl had been teaching school near Hegbert, a village 45 miles west of Benson, and was boarding at the home of McGuire, who had repeatedly attempted to keep company with her although he had been repulsed several times. The family were eating supper at the time of the tragedy and without warning McGuire left the table, and in a few moments entered the room with a double barrel shotgun in his hands. The girl seemed to know who he was after and jumped from the table running to the kitchen and thence to her bedroom, where she locked the door, McGuire in pursuit. While the farmer was battering down the door, Miss Cale pounded out a window and jumped to the ground making for a neighbor's home, a mile distant. McGuire followed and when within 600 feet of the girl fired a shot, the charge entering the lower part of her neck. She fell to the ground and although dead, McGuire fired a second shot, this charge setting fire to her dress. McGuire's mother who had seen the shooting from a window, rushed to the girl and extinguished the flames.

Hangs Self on Bridge.

McGuire then calmly walked back to the house, took his clothes and after taking a horse drove to the Pomme de Terre river, four miles from his home, where he took a rope, which he was carrying, and after tieing one end to the bridge which spans the river, jumped into the water with the other end around his neck.

His body was found later by the Benson authorities who had been informed of the crime.

The girl's body was brought to her home in this city. No cause is known for the deed except that the jilting of McGuire by the girl is thought to have preyed on his mind.

S. S. CONVENTION

GREATEST GATHERING OF ITS KIND MEETS IN WASHINGTON.

IS A WORLD-WIDE MEETING

Rev. F. B. Meyer of London Presides and List of Speakers Includes President Taft, and Other Notables.

Washington, D. C.—The sixth world's Sunday school convention was formally opened here, and expectations that it would be the biggest gathering of its kind ever held were not disappointed. Delegates were present from every part of the civilized world and from every missionary center, and represent a constituency of more than 25,000,000 people. In addition there were many hundreds of visitors from the United States, Canada and Mexico.

A feature of the convention was its cosmopolitan character. More than 40 countries were represented, including every land under the sun where the torch of civilization has been carried by missionaries. The swarthy African, the almond-eyed Asiatic, and their white brothers—all Christians—sit side by side and discuss the best methods of bringing children into the church. Illustrative of this feature, Mr. W. Stecher, a Boston artist, has painted a picture emblematic of the Sunday school children of the whole world, in which every race under the sun is represented. The picture is entitled "The Crusaders of the Twentieth Century," and was presented to the Sunday school leader. Arrangements had also been made to have the picture reproduced on a large scale in a living tableau at one of the convention sessions.

Among the principal speakers on the program were President Taft, Ambassador Bryce, John Wanamaker, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, and Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. The entire list of those who were to address the convention contained over 250 names, and the speakers represent 45 lands.

Four auditoriums were used to hold the regular sessions of the convention, which will number 28.

The convention was formally opened Thuesday, and at the afternoon session Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer, president of the World's Sunday School association, delivered the convention sermon, which was followed by the report of the executive committee.

In the evening the "welcome service" was held in convention hall, and it is at this meeting that President Taft spoke for the nation, and he was followed by John Wanamaker, who will represent the Christian business men of America. Additional words of welcome were spoken by a representative of the District of Columbia, and responses were made by representatives from Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia.

Sunday was known in every Sunday school in the world as world's Sunday school day, and a special program had been prepared which was used in nearly every Sunday school in the land as the order of service.

Parade of Men's Bible Classes.

Aside from the regular sessions, a number of notable features were arranged in connection with the convention, including a monster parade of men's Bible classes, which was held on Pennsylvania avenue Friday afternoon. Another is a Sunday school missionary exposition, under the direction of R. E. Diffendorfer of the Young People's Missionary movement. The purpose of the exposition was to give a Sunday school vision to the missionary world, and a missionary vision to the Sunday school world. It showed, first by nations, second by organization, third by departments of work, and fourth by departmental subjects, the organization, equipment, work and results of the Sunday school as an institution throughout the world, indicating the comparative strength of the Sunday school in the home church and the need and possibilities of the Sunday school in mission fields. For instance, one saw in the exhibit periodicals and books for the equipment of officers and teachers, maps, charts and pictures for wall decoration; class instruction, teacher training plans, emthods and equipment; manual work, including map drawing and modeling, written exercises, sketches and other original work; and in addition the architecture of Sunday school buildings.

Kiang Su Natives Restless.

Peking, China.—Reports from Nanking, the capital of the province of Kiang Su, tell of serious evidences of unrest among the Chinese. The natives are cutting off their queues, an action which constitutes an anti-dynastic demonstration. The anti-foreign feeling is said to be increasing.

STABBER SENT TO PRISON.

Zwolinski Sentenced To Six Years For Fatal Cutting of Tony Tromme.

Minneapolis, May 19.—Edward Zwolinski, who was arrested on a charge of killing Tony Tromme, a fellow countryman, at 2703 Washington avenue north, on the evening of Good Friday, was sentenced to six years in the penitentiary at Stillwater by Judge John Day Smith on a charge of manslaughter in the first degree.

Wedding Fee Counterfeit.

A well-dressed stranger entered the office of Justice William B. Williams, Montclair, N. J., and after shaking hands astonished the justice by saying: "I'm here to redeem that counterfeit $10 bill I passed on you. Two years ago I called on you with my girl and two witnesses and you married us. I handed you a $10 bill. I had a counterfeit in my pocketbook that I'd carried for several years. I never missed it until yesterday. Then I remembered that I'd accidentally handed you the bill." The caller produced a good $10 bill, but the justice refused to take it. "Don't let that worry you, my dear fellow," he laughed. "I never knew it was a counterfeit. No kind of money sticks to me over night. I'm married, myself."

GUN DRILL AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY

MIDSHIPMEN MARCHING INTO BANCROFT HALL

DINNER FORMATION

SHAM BATTLE AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY

DURING the first week of June of each year, the quaint little city of Annapolis, Maryland, enjoys a degree of prominence in the eyes of the people of the entire country unrivaled by that regularly accorded to any other community of the size. The explanation is not far to seek. The historic town at the junction of the Severn river and Chesapeake bay is the seat of the United States Naval academy, and this "first week of summer" is the climax of the year at Uncle Sam's great training school.

Primarily, of course, "June week" at the naval academy is significant of those varied festivities, social and athletic, which always characterize the commencement season at a great seat of learning. From that standpoint the crowning week of the year at the naval academy is not so different from the corresponding interval at Yale, Harvard, Cornell or any other of the big colleges, save that the military and nautical charactes of the institution, the discipline, the abundance of gold braid and other characteristics tend to make the wind-up of the school year at Annapolis a rather more showy function than it is anywhere else, with the possible exception of the United States Military academy at West Point.

However, the commencement exercises are but an incident of the "June week" program at Annapolis. Indeed there have been years when the graduating class of future admirals received their diplomas in February, and yet "June week" lost nothing of its importance in consequence of the elimination of the graduation feature. Overshadowing the commencement is the fact that this is the season of the year set apart for the annual inspection by the official board of visitors, and indeed the seven days of strenuous activity is often referred to as "Visitors' week" rather than as "June week,"—and it is more correct in several respects, one being found in the circumstance that "June week" often begins in May.

In the interpretation of the friends and relatives of the 1,000 young men in training for officers' commissions at Annapolis, "Visitors' week" is synonymous with a season set apart for their edification and amusement, and this personal application of the term is readily understandable when one sees the town full to overflowing with proud parents, sisters, relatives and sweethearts of the midshipmen—the fair sex predominating by a tremendous majority. Such is the influx that the limited hotel and boarding house accommodations are fully engaged months in advance, and many visitors are obliged to travel by trolley to Washington or Baltimore each night for sleeping quarters. Attracted by the navy's greatest spectacle, this is the one season of the year above all others chosen by everybody interested in the "middies" collectively or individually to pay a visit to their proteges and the casual onlooker might readily suppose that the merry round of hops and parades and ceremonies had been designed especially for the edification of these well-wishers.

As a matter of fact, however, the succession of drills, exercises, sham battles, displays of seamanship and other practical demonstrations that crowd this strenuous week are for the benefit of the official board of visitors—less than a dozen men who in their plain civilian attire are somewhat overshadowed by the officers that escort them—brave in raiment of blue broadcloth or white duck, liberally bespattered with gold insignia. The board of visitors is appointed each year by the president of the United States for the specific purpose of conducting a thorough inspection of the naval academy and investigation of its methods of training and making recommendations as to needed changes in the curriculum, etc. Consequently, the student body at the great naval school is put through all its paces in order to afford the investigators object lessons at first hand as to the methods and equipment of the academy and the results attained in the training of young men as officers of Uncle's Sam's sea service.

Commencement exercises are usually held on Friday of "June week" in the magnificent $400,000 memorial chapel which is the architectural keynote of the ten million dollar home of the naval school. As a rule the diplomas are presented to the graduates by the president of the United States, the secretary of the navy, or the admiral of the navy. The drills and parades and other arduous spectacles in which the "middies" participate during this busy week have their compensations in the social features of the joyous season. The first class gives a german to which invitations are eagerly sought by the girl visitors, and the festivities of the week close with a farewell ball that is the crowning pleasure of a memorable season, and incidentally allows all the officers-to-be to exchange a final goodby with the girls who will be left behind when on the following morning the young tars sail away on the battleships that are to serve as floating schoolrooms during a practise cruise that will continue throughout the summer.

In the drills and sham battles of this spectacular week the young men at Annapolis appear successively in drill as engineers, infantrymen and artillerymen and they likewise demonstrate their ability to handle boats under oars, sail and steam. Torpedo, mine and gun drills are included in the varied program, while sabor combats, fencing bouts and small arm target practise demonstrate the qualifications of the young men to execute as well as give an order. This year, for the first time, the midshipmen will make their summer cruise on battleships instead of on cruisers and monitors, such as have previously been utilized for such voyages.

SHIPS WITH A RECORD

The word Dreadnought has passed into the current coin of the language in a manner that the name of no other warship ever did, the Dunlee Courier says.

The statesman and the man in the street alike talk glibly of Dreadnoughts in referring to the latest type of battleship.

When the Terrible or the King Edward represented the last word in naval construction their names did not become household words in the same way.

Of course, there was then no naval scare—no general demand for a fleet to cope with Germany.

It is interesting to recall the fact that the present Dreadnought is the seventh ship bearing that name which has served in the British navy. Her immediate predecessor is at present in the hands of the breakers. When she was completed 31 years ago she was justly regarded as the perfection of naval science. She was never called upon to defend her country in battle, but she was once in grave peril of destruction.

On that terrible day in June, 1893, when the Victoria was rammed by the Camperdown in the course of the maneuvers off Tripoli and Admiral Tryon, 22 officers and 336 men were lost, the Dreadnought, with a crew of 450 men, narrowly escaped a similar fate. It was only by the skill of Captain Moore, her commander, that a collision with the battleship Nile was avoided.

After being in commission for a quarter of a century, the Dreadnought, along with some hundred and fifty other ships, was struck off the active list by that "courageous stroke of the pen" so much applauded at the time. Along with several others she was sent to the Kyles of Bute to await a purchaser. Las year she was put up for auction and sold to be broken up. And now this gallant war vessel, at one time the pride of the British fleet, lies in the River Bubble at Preston, her framework being riven asunder and thrown on the scrap heap.

The fifth Dreadnought was one of the old wooden walls that encircled our shores a century ago. She fought with Nelson, and helped him to win the glorious victory at Trafalgar. After her was named the Seamen's hospital at Greenwich.

The name of Nelson is also associated with that of the fourth Dreadnought, for it was on board this vessel that young Horatio received his training in seamanship. But the fourth Dreadnought belongs by right not to Nelson, but to another old sea dog whom we have every reason to admire. Admiral Boscawen was nicknamed "Old Dreadnought," from the first ship he commanded and from his fearless courage. In 1744, when in command of the Dreadnought, which was built in 1742, he captured the French ship Medee, with 800 prisoners.

Boscawen's Dreadnought fell on evil days and was doing harbor duty at the time of the American war, when Great Britain was drinking the cup of humiliation to the dregs.

The third Dreadnought was built in the days of William, prince of Orange. She went through the wars of Queen Anne's reign and ended her life in George II.'s time. Her predecessor was built by Charles II. and had a long career. She took part in seven fleet actions. After 36 years' service she foundered off the South Foreland when out looking for Jean Bart the French corsair.

When the Spanish armada was destroyed a Dreadnought had a hand in the fighting, and fully justified her name. The first Dreadnought was then under command of Capt. George Beeston. Before the armada however, she had been associated with the name of a greater naval hero than Beeston. Drake took her with him when he set out to "singe the king of Spain's beard," and she did her share in burning the Spanish fleet at Cadiz. Under the command of Captain Fenner she was with Drake again at Corunna after the armada had been shattered. She saw Frobisher slain in the attack on Brest in 1954, fought again at Cadiz under Essex and Raleigh and sailed with Raleigh upon the islands voyage.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful —or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Creston Clark, whose untimely death at Asheville robbed America of a serious and capable actor, was somewhat impatient of criticism. To a Philadelphia critic he once said:

"You chaps are unwilling to accept a man for what he is. You want to change him to your own taste. But each of you has a different taste. To whose inclination, then, is he to bend?

"No, no! Take the artist for what he is. That is the right critical attitude. Don't be like the farm urchin I once saw—an urchin who, as he stoned a frog to death, repeated severely:

Congressman Ransdale of Louisiana, recently told a story of Alec Trimble, the valet and factotum of a physician in New Orleans, who took a fancy to one of the summer shirts of his master, and finally went and bought one exactly like it. He showed it to his mistress, who said that he had done wrong, as the two shirts might get mixed in the washing; and Alec answered:

"It'd make no difference, missus, 'cause dey's both alike in size an' price."

Afraid of Ghosts

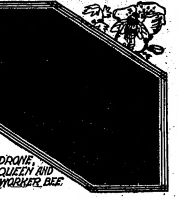
Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of "40 years of cures." Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

THE BUSY BEE AND HIS PRODUCT

By RUSSELL HASTINGS MILLWARD

THE AGAVE OR CENTURY PLANT IN FULL BLOOM



DRONE, QUEEN AND WORKER BEE

IT IS not known to which country the bee is really indigenous; but it is a well-established fact that in ancient times primitive man kept his beehives and gathered the honey, which he used for food and on sacred occasions brought before his gods as an offering. The fame of the honey gathered by the bees on the slopes of Hymettus was sung by Virgil and even today this product of world-wide renown is served to the tourist by the zealous Greek. In both Egypt and Mexico honey has been found in earthen and metallic vessels, hermetically sealed, and in an excellent state of preservation, among the prehistoric ruins.

The finding of honey among the Aztec ruins establishes the fact beyond all question that bees were known in Mexico long before the days of Cortez, although scientists have attempted to disprove repeatedly the theory that bees of any species were native to America.

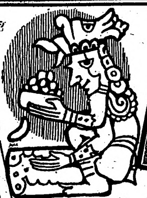
This valuable article of commerce may be described as the sweet sirup or nectar derived from the bees and other insects, which gather it from trees, plants or flowers. It is both vegetable and animal in origin and contains about 20 per cent. of water, 75 per cent of reducing sugars, such as dextrose and levulose, twenty-five one-hundredths per cent. of ash, and the balance of other components. Honey is variable in color and quality, the product of one district excelling that of another, and is commercially classified as follows: First, combed, or that which is contained in the cells of comb; second, extracted, or that which has been separated from the uncrushed comb by centrifugal force or gravity; third, strained, or that which has been removed from the crushed comb by straining or other means. In color the best grade runs from clear, almost colorless to pale yellow and the flavor depends upon the nature of the tree, plant or flower from which it is gathered. With age, honey turns considerably darker in color, but both honey and comb will keep indefinitely without suffering decomposition.

The honey bee is usually found in swarms of from 5,000 to 75,000, and is divided into three distinct classes: The queen, or female; the drone, or male, and the worker, or neuter. Each hive contains but one queen, which propagates the species, frequently laying eggs at the rate of 2,000 a day. Upon the death of the queen a young neuter is selected from the colony, its cell enlarged and the food changed. The neuter then becomes a queen bee and is mated with the drones, who are afterward destroyed by the workers.

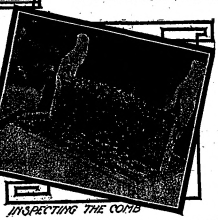
Although the average life of the queen covers a period of three years of usefulness, it is considered advisable to annually restock each colony with a new queen. The systematic rearing of queen bees and the improvement of the breed are considered the most important branches of apiculture. It is also important in breeding queens that the so-called "hybrids," or mismated queens should not be employed, on account of their inability to produce young bees of desirable and consistent character. Selections have been made from the various types of bees and an attempt made to combine all the good qualities of each species, but as yet it is quite impossible to find the bee that is stingless and at the same time the largest producer of honey and wax and the most prolific in breeding. It appears that each species possesses certain distinctions of race and is created to work out its own destiny, holding at all times the instincts and characteristics peculiar to its kind.

The drone bees live through periods of but from three to eight weeks and the workers from six weeks to six months.

These workers collect all the honey in their mouths, whence it passes into the crop or honey bag and is then carried to the hive, where it is ejected into the comb. They also construct the cells of the comb from a wax secretion in the honey and feed all the other bees. The food of the young bees is called beebread and consists of small pellets prepared from the pollen of flowers. Honey is fed to the adult drone bees.



AN ANCIENT MAYA DRAWING OF FIRE-GOD HOLDING POT OF HONEY



INSPECTING THE COMB

MARKET SCENE AT TAMPICO, MEXICO

It is interesting to note that the amount of honey involved in the secretion of a pound of wax is a much-debated question among students of bees, the various estimates ranging all the way from two to twenty pounds.

It is conservatively estimated that over 300,000 tons of honey are produced in the world each year, of which the American republics yield about two-thirds. This quantity, put up in standard combs of 14 ounces each, would, if the combs were placed side by side endwise, make a line 50,000 miles long, or twice the circumference of the earth at the equator.

According to Latreille, the European species of bees predominate in America; but it is evident that the stingless variety of bee is a native of South and Central America and Mexico, where honey has been gathered by the natives for many centuries, and that many of the other varieties found were introduced from China, Japan and Palestine, as well as from European countries.

When the pilgrims landed at Plymouth in 1620 honey was not to be found in that part of the country and bees were consequently imported from England in order to meet the requirements of the time, but the first systematic keeping of bees in the United States was probably established at Newbury, Mass.

In a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture it is stated that the importance of the industry was of municipal moment to the extent of holding out to one John Eales, who was then living in what is now Hingham, Mass., an inducement to come to Newbury for the purpose of teaching the settlers how to make hives and to care for bees.

Since that time steady advances have been made in the establishment of systematic bee culture in the United States. Bees have been imported from all parts of the world and the industry has reached such an extent that the annual average yield of honey now amounts to about $20,000,000 and beeswax about $2,000,000.

The United States imports annually about 2,500,000 pounds of honey and about 750,000 pounds of beeswax, about 95 per cent. of which comes from Cuba, Mexico, Haiti, Salvador, Dominican Republic and Venezuela; and all of this regardless of the fact that according to the census about 700,000 bee keepers, or one in every 120 of the entire population, are engaged in the industry throughout the United States.

The passage of various pure-food laws and the establishment of a rigid inspection by many of the importing countries have made the marketing of adulterated honey almost an impossibility. No substitute for honey, or artificial means of preparation, have as yet been found and for many years the pure product has been adulterated with commercial glucose, cane sugar, or invert sugar sometimes to as great an extent as 85 per cent. It is the opinion of many bee keepers that the feeding of bees with saccharine substances for the purpose of increasing the production of honey should be considered as palpable adulteration, and that the artificial coloring of the product by electrical means should be so stated when it is placed on the market.

The sage honey from California is pronounced by experts as an example of the purest, best flavored and most consistent grade produced in the United States.

What is known as the Holy Land bee was first brought to the United States from Palestine by a Mr. Howard, in 1884, since which time the species can be found in many parts of America and is regarded by apiculturists as one of the best honey producers. About the time of the exportation of bees from Palestine, famous in ancient times for its honey, the Turkish government became deeply interested in the industry and imposed an exorbitant tax upon the apiaries.

Honey is used in the far eastern countries in the manufacture of hydromel, a popular and most intoxicating beverage, having an agreeable flavor closely resembling cider. Alcohol has also been distilled from honey, but not to any great extent.

Many of the large manufacturers of candy in the United States complain that they have great difficulty in purchasing sufficient honey to meet their requirements owing to the recent and enormous demand of German manufacturers, who secure about 60 per cent. of all the product that is exported from the American republics. It is estimated that over half of the world's production is employed in the manufacture of candy and medicinal preparations and new uses are being found for honey and beeswax almost daily.

In the manufacture of biscuits and fancy cakes in the United States, Germany and England honey is extensively employed, both on account of its usefulness as a base in sweetening and its remarkable immunity from organic change. This answers the question which has been a matter of great speculation by those unacquainted with the inside secrets of the baking industry, as to how the numerous varieties of sweet crackers and cakes "kept on hand" through long periods of time remained apparently fresh, in the little village stores scattered throughout the country districts. The art of making fancy crackers that would "keep indefinitely" has for many years been considered one of the mysteries of the baking industry, attributed by the natives of Latin America to "Yankee cleverness."

Not many industries offer as many attractions as apiculture. It may be taken up by agriculturists as a specialty or as a side line. A small capital only is required to start the enterprise and returns are measured and certain if ordinary care is taken in the selection of the location of the apiaries and consistent management of the bees maintained. Furthermore, a good market is always afforded for the product, which is neither perishable nor subject to a marked depreciation in value.

Practically all of the wild honey is shipped in barrels and is either extracted or strained, the handling of beeswax being usually treated as a separate industry and one which has been followed extensively by the natives of Latin America for many years. When the wax has been refined and bleached, it is used in many of the arts and trades and has become an article of great commercial value the world over.

In the Argentine Republic honey is in such great demand that it is necessary to import over 100,000 pounds annually, most of which comes from Chile, although about 10,000 pounds of strained honey are annually exported to Germany and France, where it is employed in the manufacture of fancy crackers.

An effort is now being made by the government to introduce modern methods of bee keeping and encourage the farmers to engage in the industry as a side line.

The agricultural department of the Brazilian government is now making a special effort to develop the industry of apiculture and increase the output of honey and beeswax. In order to meet the ever-increasing demand, modern facilities are being rapidly afforded which will permit the transportation of the product to convenient shipping points and encourage both the home and foreign trade.

Many varieties of bees are found in Brazil, and for some time the natives have gathered the honey, which, on account of its fine quality, has been used almost exclusively for medicinal purposes. The Tapurriba tree, in blossom time, is the source of a most abundant supply of wild honey; but the product has not been exported to any great extent, as a ready sale has always been found in the local markets.

The stingless bee which is common to all of the Latin-American countries is found in great numbers throughout Brazil and numerous other varieties have been imported from Europe, notably the Italian, which was introduced in 1904, when the government began to take an active interest in apiculture.

Although the production of honey is enormous, but 600,000 pounds are exported annually, most of which goes to Germany.

In Chile bees were first introduced from Italy by Mr. Patricio Larrain Gandarillas, about 45 years ago, since which time rapid progress has been made in the advancement of apiculture.

There are now nearly 100,000 apiaries in actual operation throughout the republic, the majority of which are located in the provinces of Aconcagua and Coquimbo, where the mildness of the climate and richness of the flora are peculiarly adapted to the culture of the Italian bee.

Over 1,000,000 pounds of purified wax and 5,000,000 pounds of honey are exported annually from Chile, of which Germany purchases about 60 per cent., Great Britain 15 per cent., France 15 per cent. and Belgium and the Argentine Republic 10 per cent., the product being pronounced fine in quality and bringing top prices at all times in the markets.

Wild honey is found in abundance throughout Mexico and especially in the forests of the Algarroba tree, whose flowers through a long blooming season are always a favored source of supply to the bee. The industry of gathering the honey, in the old days, was followed chiefly for the purpose of obtaining the beeswax, which formed a valuable material in the manufacture of candles consumed in the ceremonies of the church.

Hives were found among the rocks and suspended from trees, and the natives, in gathering the honey, smoked out the bees with little regard to what became of them eventually.

Mexico exports annually about $90,000 in strained honey, most of which is shipped to the United States, Germany and England, and imports about $50,000 in comb honey, most of which comes from the United States, England and Germany and a small amount even from China.

Over 25,000 pounds of wild honey are annually exported from the port of Tampico and the industry has become one of great importance in that district.

An interesting honey-collecting ant is also found in Mexico, which lives in underground chambers and gathers honey from the numerous wild flowers and plants. A certain number of these ants remain at home and are used as living storehouses. They are fed honey by the workers until they swell to about the size of a pea and during the seasons when honey is not obtainable they regurgitate their supplies, drop by drop, as food for the colony.

Wild honey is found in great quantities in the woods near San Juan del Norte, Nicaragua, but is not exported to foreign markets owing to a strong local demand throughout the inland towns and villages, where it is always readily purchased and consumed by the native population.

Lake Likes Young Players With "Pepper"

Boston National League Club's Manager Says, Good Battery Men Are Necessary

(Copyright, 1910, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

In order to win a major league pennant a club must have a good, strong pitching corps and at least two first-class catchers. The same applies to any other pennant race. Further, the pitchers must be of different styles. I would not try to win with all right-handers, or with seven curve ball pitchers.

The other players of the team must be fast, speedy, aggressive young players. I am a great believer in youthful players, although knowing well that no pennant ever has been won by any such club. It is a false idea, and the only reason no club ever won with young players is due to the fact that only a few ever have tried. I want aggressive hustling men, who can hit a bit above the average and above all who are not afraid to take a chance.

I was laughed at last season for my theories about speed, and when I selected a team chiefly on the ability of the men to get fast to first base. There were several converts to the idea before the season ended, and if the team had possessed the other requisites of a winning club we would have landed the American league pennant.

Temperance in everything is an absolute necessity. I do not mean that players must necessarily be total abstainers, although that would be best. I want men who are temperate in eating and in drinking, and would rather have them temperate in eating than in drinking if forced to choose between two evils. When I was scouting in minor leagues for players—young players—I always invited them to eat with me and watched their eating before closing negotiations.

I like to see "pepper" and dash in a team, and a fighting, aggressive spirit all the way through. I have been a great believer in signs and inside team work on a club, and have trained the men hard on signals, so that they know them all, and do not forget. But I cannot win, nor can any one else, with men who rely too much on signals. Some teams get into the habit of waiting for signals instead of thinking for themselves. There are times when a situation arises that requires quick thinking and when the signal system is useless. I want men who have the initiative and the nerve and quickness to assume responsibility in these crises in a game and to think and act for themselves in emergencies. If they do not, they are not winning ball players, and no matter how skillful they may be with their hands or feet they cannot become great in the profession.

FRED LAKE

The player to win must keep thinking every instant, and regardless of the orders of the manager must have nerve enough to change tactics in a second the moment it becomes apparent that the other side has discovered the plan of attack.

I try at all times to outguess the opposing team. I try to put myself in the place of the opposing leader and think what I would do under the circumstances, then adapt my plan to beat his. The game is one that calls for generalship, and the pennants are won by the generals almost as much as by the fighting men. If the general has a few assistants, or lieutenants to help lead, he is far ahead.

Girl Asks Senators for Day's Income

I AM SURE THEY CAN SPARE SOME

WASHINGTON.—The millionaires of the senate have been pleadingly requested by a young country girl of Virginia to donate their aggregated income for 24 hours in order that she may be enabled to acquire such an education as will qualify her for the profession of teaching school. She feels that this would not in the least impoverish them, while it would enrich her beyond hope's desire.

The ambitious girl who has made this unusual appeal resides at Volney, Va. She rescribes herself as being fifteen years old and earnestly seeking to better her condition and provide some means by which she can become self-supporting. Her communication is entirely frank and fearless and the writer is apparently convinced that a favorable reply will come along at no distant date.

The little Virginia lass simply addressed her letter: "The Senate Messrs.," and then branches right out with her request, merely prefacing it with the announcement that she understands the senate is chiefly composed of millionaires, who would never miss the trifling assistance she requires. And then comes the direct statement that their income for 24 hours would never be needed, but would be amply sufficient for the additional education necessary to make her a teacher.

The hope was expressed that early attention will be given her letter and that there will be no objection to complying with her wishes.

But, alas, for the little daughter of the old commonwealth! No millionaire senator will ever see her neatly written, grammatically arranged and utterly frank letter. It was opened by a busy and unsentimental secretary, tossed into the "files of the senate."

Shelled Eggs Before Supreme Court

YOU'RE PINCHED

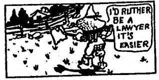
WITH summer at hand, the Supreme court of the United States was asked a few days ago to adjudicate a case involving 50 cans of eggs. Nearly five months ago the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois decided that the eggs were not just the thing for human consumption and directed its marshal "totally to destroy them." The Supreme court was asked to pass on jurisdictional questions, but the eggs themselves were not brought into court, as the marshal may have performed his duty.

These eggs came into existence probably some time in the early part of 1908—long enough ago to have permitted their strutting around the barnyard by this time with chicks of their own at their sides.

They made their way to the Hipolite Egg company of St. Louis, Mo. There the shells were stripped from them and Plymouth Rocks and Leghorns were as one in five-gallon cans. They were preserved in boric acid. When they were shipped to Thomas & Clarke, bakers, at Peoria, Ill., in the fall of 1909, the government obtained an order to seize them. The court held that the boric acid was a deleterious ingredient.

The egg company asked the Supreme court to dispose of the case at once. One of the reasons for this request is that this is the first case in the Supreme court which involves the question of the jurisdiction of a federal court under the national pure-food law and the extent to which the law applies to an article of food "after it has been shipped into a state."

Champ Clark's Boyhood Dream Is True



I'D RUTHER BE A LAWYER IT'S EASIER

WHEN Champ Clark was making the speech which "riled" Cannon, so that the speaker retorted with more or less ferocity, Clark gave his hearers a glimpse of his own boyhood.

"When I was a lad, hoeing corn in Kentucky, I made up my mind to be a lawyer and to come to this congress," he said. "I had never even seen a courthouse. I had no idea what congress was like. But I made good on both propositions. I like the place. If the salary were cut to $5,000 a year I would still want to be here. If it were cut to $3,000 a year I would still want to bere. If it were cut to nothing I would still want to be here, provided I had a sufficient bank account."

And it is said that the bank account of the man who, as a boy, hoed Kentucky corn, is just about big enough to enable him to indulge in the luxury of sitting in an unsalaried congress.

According to one of the Washington publications Senator and "Mrs. Theodore Burton" were among those invited to a recent social function at the capitol.

In the course of duty a reporter asked Senator Burton solicitously regarding the costume that Mrs. Burton was wearing at the function, intending that its description should be added to the others in the general list.

Senator Burton is fifty-nine years old, and during a varied political career has figured frequently in Washington dispatches as a congressman, as a senator and in other prominent roles.

"What did Mrs. Burton wear at the function?" asked the society reporter.

"Nothing."

"Eh-what?" stuttered the reporter. "I guess you do not gather me, senator. I mean, can you give me a description of the gown that Mrs. Senator Burton wore at the reception."

"Nothing," again replied the senator from Ohio, and then before the reporter could again gasp his surprise, Mr. Burton continued his remarks.

"Because there is no Mrs. Senator Burton, and according to the present feelings of Mr. Senator Burton of Ohio there is not liable to be any Mrs. Senator Burton.

"Mr. Senator Burton is a bachelor and intends to remain one."

Congressman Spits; Misses a Thriller

JUST MY LUCK—I NEVER SEE NOTHIN'

REPRESENTATIVE EZEKIEL SAMUEL CANDLER of Mississippi is one of the most retiring and unobtrusive members of the lower house of the national legislature. Representative Candler is more generally known as "Tombigbee" Candler because once more than a year ago, he begged the house not to forget that majestic stream, the Tombigbee river of Mississippi in its river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. Candler, according to the congressional directory, was for nine years moderator of the Tishomingo Baptist association of Mississippi. Therefore, since his appearance in the halls of congress in 1901 Mr. Candler has [illegible] of his faith. Mr. Candler, however, is an exponent of the under-canvas drama. He likes the circus.

Recently the death-defying, soul-stirring, hair-raising demon of the air "Desperado" appeared with a circus in Washington.

"I must see that fellow," said Mr. Candler. "I want to have my soul stirred and my hair raised. I must behold that deed of daring. I will go if it costs me my job in the next meeting of the Tishomingo Baptist association."

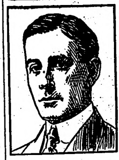
After the show Representative Hughes of New Jersey met Mr. Candler in the lobby.

"How did you like the show?" he asked. "What did you think of 'Desperado?'"

"'Desperado' is all right," said Tombigbee. "He is the best that ever happened. I went there only to see him. I saw him climb to the top of the tent and then I turned around to spit and I heard a cheer and somebody near me said: 'Gracious heavens, he done [illegible]

PROMINENT PEOPLE

VIGOROUS YOUNG PROSECUTOR



State's Attorney Edmund Burke, who prosecutes the evil doers in Sangamon county, where the capital of Illinois is located, has seen to it that John E. W. Wayman, who holds the same important position in Cook county, most of which is Chicago, does not get all the limelight that goes with the legislative bribery scandal inquiry.

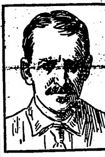
The young state's attorney at Springfield lost no time in getting busy when he heard that there had been boodling among the state's lawmakers. "If any of that money passed here in Sangamon county I want to know about it," he said, "and I'll do something in the way of indicting people myself."

Mr. Wayman didn't like to have the young Democrat at the state capital "butting in" and made some such comment, which immediately brought forth a caustic rejoinder, in which the Springfield prosecutor used the word "plot." This stirred things up to a lively pitch and the bribery investigation took on a personal tinge so far as Messrs. Burke and Wayman were concerned.

The attorney general of the state, Mr. Stead, then took a hand and tried to assist Mr. Wayman by having the inquiry started by Burke at Springfield stopped. Judge Robert B. Shirley, however, said Mr. Burke had a right to go ahead with his probing so long as he did not interfere with the investigation in Cook county. Should there be such interference, said the judge, he would then stop the Springfield end of the quiz until such time as Mr. Wayman would not be interfered with.

Mean time the people of Illinois were wondering. One thing they thought of was that Wayman was elected on a Republican ticket and Mr. Burke was a successful Democratic candidate. Whether there is any significance in this difference in politics is only a matter of guesswork. It is a safer bet that it is the zealousness of both prosecutors and their desire to get to the bottom—or should we say "the man higher up"—that prompted them to take a course which seemed to indicate that they were fighting each other instead of fighting bribers and perjurers.

CURTISS ON AN AERIAL WAR



The next time two nations are at war—it is to be hoped there will be no next time—airships will swarm like deadly insects over the old-fashioned navies, dropping their terrible poison in the shape of picric acid bombs before the unwieldy men-of-war are able to retaliate.

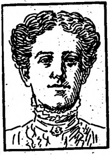
This is the idea of Glenn H. Curtiss, aviator, who says the huge battleship Florida, recently launched, and other Dreadnaughts will be useless in a battle with an aerial fleet.

"More than 1,000 aeroplanes can be launched for the price of a single battleship," he adds. "I was much interested in the launching of the Florida. I heartily subscribe to the preparations we are making to defend our country from all aggression. But I do not believe that we are going about it in the right way in view of modern conditions. Battleships have been impressive engines of war, but their day is practically done. It is as sure as death and taxes that the airship will supersede the great floating structure of steel with its immense guns.

"Imagine, for instance, that a hostile fleet is anchored 20 miles off New York. Suppose it consists of some of the most powerful of modern vessels like the Florida. Before it could begin to shell the city our fleet of aeroplanes would start from the New Jersey flats. Suppose we have only 200 of them. Each is able to carry 200 pounds of bombs.

"Before another year has passed away many nations will devote the millions they are now spending on Dreadnaughts to building fleets of aeroplanes. It is inevitable."

HEADS A WASHINGTON CLUB

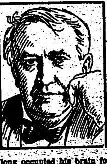


Mrs. Alexander White Gregg, wife of Representative Gregg of Texas, who was elected president of the Congressional club in Washington recently, is one of the most attractive and accomplished women in the congressional set. Representative Gregg is now serving his fourth term in congress. While in no sense a clubwoman, Mrs. Gregg has always taken a great interest in the Congressional club, a unique organization the membership of which is composed exclusively of the wives of senators and representatives.

Mrs. Gregg, who was previous to her marriage Miss Mary Brooks of Palestine, Texas, is a member of an old Virginia family which settled in the Lone Star state during her infancy. She is especially popular among the southern contingent in Washington. Representative and Mrs. Gregg have a debutante daughter, Miss May Gregg, and three sons. During the social season they occupy a house at No. 1737 Corcoran street and entertain frequently.

Mrs. Gregg's selection as president was greeted with much enthusiasm by the other club members. The election was called to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. James Breck Perkins, widow of Representative Perkins of Rochester, N. Y.

EDISON SPRINGS A NEW ONE



Thomas A. Edison, wizard of the electrical world, has brought forth a new idea that will not prove popular with the great army of persons who make their living by clerking in the stores. Mr. Edison is nothing if not original and his new scheme has its interesting points.

An automatic store, which might be called a clerkless store, is the "wizard's" scheme. Mr. Edison says it will decrease the cost of living and be a boon to mankind. He has given thought to the great number of clerks that would be thrown out of employment if his idea should be carried into effect, but he says it would permit them to devote their time to something that would benefit them and their country more than their present occupation does.

He is reducing to paper the plans that have long occupied his brain for an automatic store. When these plans are complete he hopes to see salesmen replaced by automatic vending devices in most stores. The customer need but walk up to a slot machine, drop in the proper coin, and his bundle, neatly wrapped, will be delivered in his hand. Almost the only employees such a store would need would be the men to attend to the machines and those in the central station to overlook their operation.

The customer, for example, will drop his coin, turn the pointer to indicate the particular kind of goods he wishes, and touch the button. The machine will do the [illegible]

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Is Your Mind a Triangle or Circle?

I AM SURE MINE IS
I TINK MINE IS A TRI-ANGLE

NEW YORK.—Is your mind a triangle, a double triangle, a square, a circle, or a key to the infinite?

If you don't know the answer, only Mrs. Adele Marie Rique can tell you, for the tall and stately person who answers to that very Gallic cognomen—pronounced in two syllables, like an American drink—is the counselor and speculator of the latest thing in cults or occults—the Temple of Universal Freedom.

If you are a triangle you think only of three things—food, clothing and shelter. If a double triangle you have aspirations for higher things, but they cross your more primitive instincts, instead of being harmonious with them, as in the case of human squares and circles.

The high priestess of the newest "ism" to attract public attention thinks a law of attraction and repulsion is merely one of smelling.

"So many women," she observed while expounding her novel theory, "are puzzled because, while they like certain men when they are around, they forget all about them when they are away. Others, on the other hand, will say, 'When I'm with him he exasperates me, but when I am away I care for him.' These are cases where mental and personal attraction are not properly balanced. The real test of attraction," she added solemnly, "is smell."

"But clean people don't smell," objected the interviewer.

"Every human being has not only a personal smell but also should select an individual perfume, an individual color and an individual flower.

"Certain people should require certain colors," continued the odorologist, earnestly, "and you cannot bring about certain moods in yourself or drive others away by changing your gown to one of another shade."

Burglar Has Claws, Fur and Four Legs

GET OUT, YOU PIRATE!
I BELIEVE I HEAR THE COPS

NEW YORK.—When Ellis Hart, night watchman, heard an awful racket upstairs in the lead pipe storehouse at 451 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, just before daylight recently, he was scared badly. There was clashing of metal, thumping, scratching and holloaing, and, with great presence of mind, Hart realized that it would be silly to go up to the third floor all alone and try to make so many and such bold ruffians go away.

"Burglars!' he whispered to Lieutenant Miller. "Plenty of them. Send around the reserves and a wagon or two."

"What do they look like?" asked Lieutenant Miller, guardedly.

"Come around and see for yourself," insisted Hart.

Lieutenant Miller went into the reserve room and woke up everybody he could find. Leaving one policeman to guard the station house fixtures, everyone else sprinted up the street. There were 35 in the race. Lieutenant Miller sent some inside of the pipe storehouse and some over the roofs to shut off escape, and some around on Manhattan street to catch anything that might try to break out by the rear.

There was that terrible noise still going on on the third floor and the cordon of police closed in. One brave policeman listened at the very door. A howling and scuffling greeted his ears.

"Jump in, boys!" cried Lieutenant Miller. There was a concerted rush into the room, where evidently some spirited drama was being enacted.

There were criminal and victim. The criminal, caught in the act, was a large black cat of ferocious appearance. The victim was a hysterical canary bird, which had screamed for help until it had a sore throat. The two were separated by the brass wires of a bird cage.

Trials of the Gotham Crossing "Cop"

IS THIS BROADWAY I WANT TO KNOW?

NEW YORK.—"If it wasn't for the rougher sex," says Big Bill, the traffic cop at the corner, "me life'd be a dream, no less. Sure, I mean wimmen. The felly that named thim the gentler sex, I guess, lived on a desert island. There couldn't ha' been none of 'em near."

He was doing his dervish dance in the middle of the street. On one side reared the big freight autos, loaded down with bales and barrels. The fast newspaper delivery machines shot by now and then with a scream that demanded a right of way.

Hard-headed horses fought with their drivers as to whether they should or should not turn at the corner, Big Bill, meanwhile, apparently missing death a dozen times over. Taxicabs hooted, but mildly, for it is known of all chauffeurs that traffic policemen hate the taxi-chaufing breed.

Big private autos charged at him top speed and stopped miraculously in half their length at the wave of his white-gloved hand. From four directions at once heavy-footed teams dragging enormous loads of freight thumped ponderously his way.

A mere incident of his job was the clanging of bells by frantic motormen, anxious to keep the double car line clear.

At the Broadway curb a dominating woman stood and gesticulated at him savagely. "Come on acrost," said Big Bill, through the roar. "I'll see you troo."

She shook her head angrily and crooked her forefinger at him with the effect of an archangel catching a seraph in the sugar barrel. Bill held up the traffic four ways with a wave of his hand. For a moment there was an oasis of sweet peace on Broadway.

On the four corners drivers and chauffeurs and motormen cursed viciously, as they set the screeching brakes. Bill got the lady's elbow. "Why didn't you come before?" she demanded, savagely. "I want to know—is this Broadway?"

Dobbin "Falls Off the Water Wagon"

BEST HIC TIME—I—EVER HAD—WHEE!

CHICAGO.—It is very seldom that old Dobbin "falls off the wagon," but this is exactly what happened to a horse belonging to William Britten, on North Clark street. Britten, an expressman, was delivering a cask of wine to the North Side Turner hall, 823 North Clark street, when it slipped from the truck and, striking against the curb, broke open on the sidewalk. Dobbin smelled of the enchanting liquid as it trickled into the gutter and his soul thirsted for great things. Leisurely he drank while Britten was inside the building "explaining," and having suddenly become endowed with agility in his old age, started on a journey down the street.

He [illegible] the passing vehicles [illegible] blocked all traffic as he "took in" the street from curb to curb. One ear remained erect, while the other drooped, and no circus horse ever was guilty of the fancy steps which Dobbin executed on Clark street.

Pedestrians stopped in amazement, and those who had seen the wine and knew the cause of Dobbin's hilarity gathered in a crowd to encourage and applaud. A policeman took Dobbin in tow and straightened him out as best he could until Britten was summoned. Dobbin could not be annoyed by any more work and Britten was compelled to lead his steed slowly and painfully home.

The aforesaid Dobbin was sorry the next morning.

A Neglected Occupation.

While the girls are casting about to learn all that is learnable, will they please remark that one of the things worth learning is the girl's own job! It seems at times in danger of being neglected, so urgent is the assault of the petticoat brigade on all the other portals of the citadel of knowledge.— [illegible]

GETTING MAD.

It very often happens that a person will get mad in arguing a matter or when some one differs with him. One commits a great mistake when he acts thus. He weakens himself and strengthens his adversary. Anger diminishes the force of an argument. As soon as one gets mad in arguing a point, he should stop talking or change his temper. Anger stands in the way of truth. It contracts one's view. It spoils knowledge. Real wisdom, according to the Scriptures, is "first pure, and then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated," says Ohio State Journal. There is no room for anger in wisdom, and certainly, when a man is engaged in differing with his neighbor, it is best to be wise. Men sometimes can't bear to be disputed. As soon as one differs, they summon up their ire, shake their fists, and rush down on a man like a clatter of tongs. It does no good. It confirms the adversary in his view and the rancor reacts upon those who indulge in it. Observe when you have had an argument with a man, and got mad, how afterward you regret it; how really it seemed a little devil had intruded itself upon your talk and left its tracks in your heart! And then, what a lack of pleasure there is in getting mad! The only argument that is pleasant and effective is that which is pure, peaceable and gentle.

Ripon, Wisconsin, is rich in historic associations, beginning with the journey through the state in 1673 of Father Marquette and Louis Joliet on their way to the discovery of the Mississippi. The famous Fourier phlanistery experiment of Warren Chase and others took place at Ripon in the '40s. Later the city was associated with the Sherman Booth episode and the organization of the Republican party. Ripon will celebrate its history with a historical pageant on the 14th of June, and no doubt the occasion will attract throngs of visitors.

The statement by Commissioner of Immigration Williams that a large number of immigrants bound for Canada have been excluded at Ellis Island, New York, because they were unable to meet the Canadian requirements of the United States, will reassure nervous patriots who have been imagining that scores of undesirables sneak across the Canadian line into the United States, and thus circumvent our immigration laws.

Sir Ernest Shackleton says that if he had all the money needed to equip an expedition properly, he could guarantee that he would reach the south pole. The veil of awe has been torn away from the poles. Now it is declared that proper equipment is all that is necessary to take anyone anywhere in the polar regions. This seems to be true; but it has taken explorers a long time to find out what that equipment is.

The supposition is that the German balloon which collapsed or exploded during a storm over the village of Reichensachsen, Germany, and fell to the earth, killing the four occupants of the car, was struck by lightning. This may have been the cause of the disaster, as happenings of that kind must be expected when gasbags contend with storms in the clouds.

Some eastern railroads have ceased to employ young woman stenographers because they are found to have such a habit of getting married. 18 DROWNED IN SHIP CRASH

COLLISION ON LAKE HURON DUE TO DENSE FOG.

Freighter Frank H. Goodyear Sinks When Hit by the James B. Wood—Five Escape.

Port Huron, Mich.—Probably eighteen persons lost their lives in a collision between the large steel steamer Frank H. Goodyear of the Mitchell Transit company and the steamer James B. Wood, another steel vessel belonging to the Gilchrist Transportation company, in Lake Huron about thirty-five miles off Point Aux Barques. The Goodyear sank in 40 fathoms of water. But five persons were saved.

The collision occurred about six o'clock Tuesday morning in a heavy fog which overhung the lake.

A partial list of missing follows: Mrs. Lillian Bassett, wife of cook, Algonac, Mich.; John Bassett, three years old, Algonac; Archie Fuller, second mate, Algonac; John Gibson, chief engineer; Gus Zaetsch, first mate, Algonac.

When the steamers came together the crew of the Goodyear, which is reported to have been struck amidships, had time only to seize life preservers. Only a few could jump overboard before the boat began to fill with water. The cook had just sounded the second call for breakfast on the Goodyear when the crash came and many were in the messroom. All rushed on deck and then the boat began to sink. Several jumped into the water and managed to get out of reach of the boat, which was filling fast.

Suddenly the Goodyear parted in the center and with a sound which could be heard above the whistling of the Wood, sank out of sight, carrying with it all except five on board.

The bow of the Wood was stove in, but she rested on her bulkhead, and, although some water flowed into the hold, was kept afloat with the pumps. Captain Gibson of the Wood ordered the lifeboats lowered and gave the crew instructions to make every possible effort to save any of the sailors of the sinking steamer.

Seek Life of Alfonso.

Madrid.—A national campaign of terrorism instigated by the anarchists has been begun in Spain and the government is alarmed over the situation. Stern repressive measures were ordered. The explosion of a bomb here Monday night, followed by the suicide of the thrower, coming after the three outrages of the last week in Barcelona, is regarded as the beginning of the radicals' campaign. After search and inquiry the police believe the last bomb exploded was intended for King Alfonso.

CHURCH FIGHT IS BREWING

Dr. Robert's Opponents Seek to Oust Him From Presbyterian Office—Holds Two Berths.

Atlantic City, N. J.—The first hint of the movement to oust Rev. Dr. William H. Roberts of Philadelphia from one of his two offices of stated clerk and treasurer of the Presbyterian general assembly, came in the report of the bills and overtures committee, which was presented to the assembly Saturday.

It was stated in this report that 132 presbyteries had voted for a readjustment, while 136 had voted against any attempt to force Doctor Roberts to resign either of his positions. Twenty-seven presbyteries had not voted, the report said.

Though no deductions were made from this vote, it is taken to mean that it depends on Doctor Roberts himself as to whether he resigns the office of treasurer. His opponents claim that the holding of the two offices gives Doctor Roberts too much power in the assembly and in church affairs.

An appeal to Gov. James M. Gillett of California to prevent the holding of the Jeffries-Johnson fight on Independence day was introduced by Rev. F. L. Forbes of Seattle, Wash.

The committee headed by Rev. E. D. 70,000 GET WAGE INCREASE

New York.—A voluntary wage increase that will affect approximately 70,000 men, has been made by the Standard Oil company. The remarkable increase to workmen, who in the entire history of the concern, have never been on strike, ranges from 6 to 10 per cent.

The order is retroactive and became effective May 1. It is estimated that the company will add from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 to its annual pay roll expense.

The new scale affects employees engaged in the company's works and factories, but the office men will not be benefited by this increase. Most of the employees who will get the increase are laborers, and the advance applies to all the subsidiary companies in the United States.

Naval Bill Passes Senate.

Washington.—By the decisive vote of 35 to 26 the senate Monday approved the two-battleship program which has already gone through the house. Both of the new ships will be of the Dreadnaught class, and the most powerful fighting machines in the world. In addition, the senate added a provision to the bill for one submarine boat and six torpedo boat destroyers, none of which were provided for in the bill as it passed the house. As the bill goes to conference, it provides for two battleships, to cost not exceeding $6,000,000 exclusive of armament; two fleet colliers to cost not more than $1,000,000 each; five submarine torpedo boats at a total cost of not more than $2,500,000, and six torpedo boat destroyers, to cost not more than $750,000 each.

UNCLE SAM DEFIED

AMERICAN SCHOONER IS BOARDED BY FORCE FROM NICARAGUAN GUNBOAT.

RIGHT OF SEARCH FORFEITED

Action Was in Defiance of Ruling From Washington—Commanders of United States War Vessels Expected to Act Promptly.

Bluefields, Nicaragua.—Defying a ruling by the United States government that the Nicaraguan government gunboat Venus had forfeited her right of search a force of men from that vessel Wednesday boarded and searched the American schooner Esfuerzo, which flew the Stars and Stripes.

Following the search the Venus and the other Nicaraguan gunboat San Jacinto were seen approaching the Bluefields bluff. The American gunboats Paducah and Dubuque were lying off Bluefields and it was expected here that their commanders would take prompt action.

Government forces attacked the Bluefields custom house, and administered a sharp defeat to the forces of General Estrada. The provisional army, or the section of it that was guarding the custom house, was driven back steadily on the city defenses.

The sound of cannonading at Rama, 35 miles away, indicates that fighting is still going on there between the insurgents and the Madriz army. Couriers arriving here report that 150 already have been killed and 300 wounded.

The American marines guarding the United States consulate here are preparing for battle if the government forces enter the city. Machine guns are trained upon the streets by which the soldiers of Madriz might reach the United States consulate.

The attack upon the custom house on Bluefields bluff was begun by General Mara as soon as the government forces were joined by the 500 men landed at Pearl lagoon by the fillibuster boat, the Venus.

UNEARTH BIG GRAIN SWINDLE

Chicago Firm Loses $700,000 by Manipulation of Conspirators, Who Juggled Bills of Lading.

Chicago.—Juggling of warehouse receipts and railroad bills of lading, used in connection with the business of Durant & Elmore, grain operators, with offices in Chicago and Albany, N. Y., have caused the loss of $700,000, according to reports from the eastern city Monday. Conspirators within the firm and outside accomplices are blamed for the alleged misappropriation, which involves, it is said, only the officials of the eastern branch. Edwin W. Elmore, vice-president of the firm and head of the Chicago office departed for Albany last Friday in response to a telegram and still is there.

Money was obtained from banks in Albany and New York, it is said, on juggled receipts and bills, and the institutions reported as swindled are declared to be conducting an investigation seeking to place responsibility and to discover the exact amount of the discrepancy. Gibson Oliver, treasurer of the grain concern and manager of its Albany office, is reported to have made a statement of responsibility in connection with the alleged misappropriation and to have named Henry C. Palmer, a former employe of the Delaware & Hudson railway.

LA FOLLETTE HITS RATE BILL

Wisconsin Senator Advocates Complete Reorganization of Interstate Commerce Commission.

Washington.—For five hours Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, standing on the floor of the senate, poured oratorical grape and canister into the administration rate bill as brought before congress by Senator Elkins. He pleaded for the adoption of the amendments offered by the Insurgents as a means of wiping out the sins of past congresses. He said that all railroad laws up to date were in the interest of the railroads, and advocated a complete reorganization of the Interstate Commerce commission.

"The interstate commerce commission is engaged in a mere child's play," said Mr. La Follette, adding that it was so hedged about that it could not effectively deal with the problem.

While the rate regulation provision of the president's original bill was in the public interest, Mr. La Follette said, the provision had been modified by Senators Aldrich and Elkins wholly in the interest of the railroads.

PARDONED BY TAFT; TESTIFIES

CONVICTED OFFICIAL AIDS IN SUGAR TRUST PROSECUTION.

Government Springs Surprise in Placing Oliver Spitzer, Freed by President, on Stand.

New York.—When Prosecutor Simpson called to the witness stand Monday Oliver Spitzer, superintendent of the Williamsburg docks, who some months ago was convicted of underweighing and sentenced to two years in the Atlanta penitentiary, the government played its trump card in the prosecution of Charles R. Heike, secretary of the American Sugar Refining company, charged with being implicated in the sugar trust underweighing conspiracy.

Spitzer demonstrated to the court the working of the fraudulent devices by which the government was cheated out of millions of dollars by false weights, it is alleged.

When Spitzer took the stand John B. Stanchfield, for the defense, claimed that under the federal statute Spitzer, as a convicted man, could not testify.

The sensation of the trial was then created by the declaration in court that Spitzer had been pardoned by President Taft on May 19 last.

Heike is on trial in the United States circuit court with five former employes of the American Sugar Refining company on the charge of conspiracy to defraud the government by underweighing cargoes of sugar imports. Witnesses have testified to the discovery of fraudulent devices on the sugar docks at Williamsburg, whereby, it was alleged, employes of the so-called sugar trust manipulated the scales so as to bring about underweights.

Spitzer said that Theodore A. Havemeyer, brother of the late H. O. Havemeyer, appointed him superintendent of the Williamsburg dock. When he left Atlanta prison Spitzer said he had no hope of a pardon, and added:

"I left my effects in Atlanta. I came here to unburden myself of the great wrongs I had done all these years. I wanted to confess all my sins before this court and tell all I know.

"I wanted to stand among my fellowmen once more and tell all I should have told before. I wanted to be shriven of all that cankered me those sleepless night in Atlanta prison, where I suffered so much. I couldn't stand it any longer.

"I told Captain Flynn of the secret service in Atlanta that I couldn't stand the torture; that I must tell the truth and I wouldn't have been behind those bars if I had taken the advice of my lawyers, Mr. Mackerell and Mr. Cochran.

"They told me to confess, if I had anything to confess after my conviction last February. They told me to confess before it was too late."

KING ASKS MOURNING TO END

British Ruler Does Not Wish Tradesmen to Suffer—Roosevelt Received by Alexandra.

London.—The Court Gazette Tuesday announced that King George, Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra desire that general mourning shall end Friday, so that the tradesmen will not suffer.

King Edward bequeathed his entire racing and breeding establishments to King George, who will continue them on the same scale.

The mother queen, Alexandra, received Mr. Roosevelt at Buckingham palace.

The two had a long chat, during which her majesty took occasion personally to tell the former president how much she appreciated the sympathy exhibited for her in America at the time of her bereavement.

Subsequently the queen mother received Lord Strathcona, high commissioner of Canada.

In spite of England's mourning for King Edward, the municipal reception to Theodore Roosevelt to be held on May 31 will be one of the most notable ceremonies of years.

Packers Fight Against Trial.

Chicago.—A legal battle to stop government prosecution of the packers in Chicago was waged before Judge Landis in the federal court Wednesday. Counsel for individual packers and the National Packing company argued in support of a demurrer by which they hoped to show the indictments to be faulty. George T. Buckingham made the opening argument, followed by Ralph Crews, chief counsel for the National Packing company. Afterward James H. Wilkerson, special assistant district attorney, and District Attorney Sims presented the government's side.

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." — Mrs. Emma Imse, 833 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

Her Laugh Broke.

She was a little fairy of seven, with eyes like diamonds and hair like spun gold, and she was romping with a half dozen playmates. Touching a fine-looking youngster on the shoulder, she challenged him with, "You can't catch me." Off they started, she twisting and dodging with the dexterity of a half-back on a football team, and he following her every movement in close pursuit. The excitement of the chase made her scream with laughter. The little fugitive finally brought up against a fence, breathless and panting, and her pursuer, throwing his arms about her, shouted: "There, I've caught you!" "Oh, yes," gasped the little fairy, "but 'it was 'cause my laugh broke and I couldn't run any more."

"Show Me Another."

Soon after twins had arrived at the home of a prominent dry goods merchant recently the proud father led his son Richard, aged four, into the room to see the little strangers. The father first pulled down the covers and showed one of the babies to his son. He then walked to the other side of the bed and exhibited the other twin. Richard gazed at the two for a moment with a noncommittal look on his face, and then demanded: "Show me another, papa."

A Dirge.

She laid the still white form beside those which had gone before; no sob, no sigh forced its way from her heart, throbbing as though it would burst. Suddenly a cry broke the stillness of the place—one single heart-breaking shriek; then silence; another cry; more silence; then all silent but for a guttural murmur, which seemed to well up from her very soul. She left the place. She would lay another egg tomorrow.—Princeton Tiger.

HARD ON CHILDREN.

When Teacher Has Coffee Habit.

"Best is best, and best will ever live." When a person feels this way about Postum they are glad to give testimony for the benefit of others.

A school teacher down in Miss. says: "I had been a coffee drinker since my childhood, and the last few years it had injured me seriously.

"One cup of coffee taken at breakfast would cause me to become so nervous that I could scarcely go through with the day's duties, and this nervousness was often accompanied by deep depression of spirits and heart palpitation.

"I am a teacher by profession, and when under the influence of coffee had to struggle against crossness when in the school room.

"When talking this over with my physician, he suggested that I try Postum, so I purchased a package and made it carefully according to directions; found it excellent of flavor, and nourishing.

"In a short time I noticed very gratifying effects. My nervousness disappeared, I was not irritated by my pupils, life seemed full of sunshine, and my heart troubled me no longer.

"I attribute my change in health and spirits to Postum alone."

Farm School Letter

Pintsch Oil For Gophers.

In Colorado prairie dogs have been destroyed with bisulphide of carbon gas in a manner similar to the experiment tried in Minnesota at University Farm on pocket gophers. Recently the Colorado Station has tried, with wonderful success, Pintsch oil—a by-product of the Pintsch gas used for lighting trains. It has been used in the same manner as bisulphide of carbon is used, with equally fatal results on the prairie dog. It is assumed in Minnesota that if Pintsch oil fumigation is destructive of prairie dog life in Colorado it ought to be equally so in Minnesota with pocket gophers, and the Minnesota Experiment Station probably will experiment with it. This oil is only half as expensive as bisulphide of carbon, according to the Colorado report, and can be procured at railroad centers where there is a Pintsch gas factory. Only half as much of it is required to kill a prairie dog in his burrow as of bisulphide.

Scours In Pigs.

The Minnesota Experiment Station at St. Anthony Park has found the cause of scours in little pigs to come largely from over and irregular feeding, together with sudden changes in food. The little pig is greedy and its stomach and intestines are comparatively small. The digestive juices decompose the food and turn it into a milky, soupy condition from which the digested material must be assimilated, or it must be pushed through the intestines. When an excess of food is given the overplus must be passed along with the indigestible matter in the faeces. The faeces are thin, soft and watery, and the animal is scouring. Scouring pigs are not economical pork producers.

Lighter feeding is the remedy rather than drugs. Sudden changes in the ration should be avoided, but the amount of food should be gradually increased from day to day in proportion with the pig's development.

Bacon Hogs.—The Experiment Station at Grand Rapids is raising bacon hogs—Improved Yorkshire, and practices having their sows farrow in March and April. The pigs are turned into a clover pasture when from six to eight weeks old, and are fed a little shorts and milk. In September barley and peas are added to their ration, and for two months they are fed all they will eat. They reach prime condition about the first of November and weigh from 130 to 150 pounds. In the local market the price the past three years has averaged eight and a half cents per pound. The cost of production has been estimated by Supt. McGuire to be four and one-half cents a pound. Good housing, early farrowing clover pasture, skim milk, barley, shorts and peas, easily obtained with little expense, make a good profit in the pig industry.

Eight Pigs Per Sow have been raised at the Northeast Experiment Station at Grand Rapids the past three years. The Yorkshire breed is noted for its large litters and strong constitution. The brood sows are wintered on second crop of clover, boiled roots, skim milk and half a pound each of grain daily. They are comfortably housed with access to a yard in the day time. Exercise is an important element in their care. The sows are bred in December, farrow in March or early April, and raise but one litter a year. The Station keeps the good mothers as long as they are productive—from four to six years. Only brood sows are carried through the winter.

An Acre of Land in Northeastern Minnesota, when cleaned of stumps, will usually go far toward paying for the cleaning with the first year's crop, according to experiments at the Grand Rapids station. The Station recommends co-operative buying of dynamite in the timbered sections of Minnesota so that it may be procured in large enough quantities to be had at the wholesale price. Duluth and the iron range towns affords one of the best local markets in the West for farm products. The land is wonderfully productive when cleared of its natural incumbrances. Dynamite and knowledge of its use do the cleaning.

In Raising Pigs in northeastern Minnesota, as practiced at the experiment station at Grand Rapids, it is important to remember that some of the most profitable food is clover pasture and skim milk. Expensive grains are fed only to finish the product grown on inexpensive pasture and dairy by-products. Good clover pasture always should be ready for the six weeks old pig.

Over a period of nine years' experimentation at the Ohio station, shallow cultivation of corn shows a lead in grain harvested of four bushels per acre over deep cultivation during that period, regardless of weather conditions. Experiments at the Minnesota station at St. Anthony Park are in line with Ohio and several other states.

Frequent and Shallow Cultivation of corn at the Minnesota Experiment Station shows best results at husking time.

FARMERS' SHORT COURSE.

The faculty at the college and school of agriculture at St. Anthony Park, is already preparing for the Farmers' Short Course next winter, when a much larger attendance is anticipated than ever in the past. Last winter's course brought nearly two hundred and fifty farmers to the Experiment station. Facilities were over-crowded. The dining room, originally intended for the accommodation of four hundred people, last winter had to accommodate about twelve hundred. Without the short course difficulty was experienced in taking care of the school and college.

Prof. Mayne is having the basement of the dining hall reconstructed so that less trouble will be experienced next winter. He will also reconstruct the systems of instruction so that classes will be promptly and systematically handled.

Summer School At University Farm.

A summer school at the Minnesota Agricultural College at St. Anthony Park will begin on June 20th and continue until July 29, to give agricultural instruction to school teachers, principals and superintendents of schools. Those wishing college credits will be regularly registered as university students and pay a fee of $10.00. Those desiring the work outlined without taking the college credits will be charged $4.00. Minnesota teachers taking ellimentary agriculture only will be charged $1.00. Board and room for the six weeks will cost but $21.00, in advance.

Farmers' Clubs.

The report of the Farmers' Clubs of Meeker County, reaching the Extension Division of the Minnesota Department of Agriculture, shows the shipment of a car of stock every week and the receipt by the farmers co-operating of the entire proceeds of the shipment, except a small commission honestly earned by, and paid to, the manager for going with the stock and doing the business. The Club also maintains a seed exchange at Litchfield where the farmers can procure home grown seed. The social features are also a means of promoting the greatest harmony among the people of the neighborhood.

Dassel has a club that has recently tested one hundred and fifty head of cattle for tuberculosis. It maintains a system of cow-testing for milk production. Every cow entered has a correct ration worked out for her every month according to Prof. Haecker's standard. More than three hundred cows are in this association. Co-operation is also practiced in buying supplies and selling produce. The social and business features are attracting new members. Crop rotation, soil fertility, better care of stock are among the subjects of frequent discussion, and attract new members.

The Live Farmers' Clubs in Meeker county, where there are twenty or more co-operative creameries and elevators, have become associated in a central league. This suggests the thought to the division of agricultural extension that all the farmers' clubs in each county, all co-operative creameries and co-operative elevators, should get together in a central federation, and at least once a year meet and discuss the matters that have arisen in the different local clubs for which no satisfactory solution has been found. Wherever matters of mutual interest to a county have arisen in any one club worthy of promotion the several clubs can unite and decide upon a course of action, discuss everything pertaining to the common good and develop other questions worthy of promotion.

Harrowing corn is not recommended, but if farmers persist in this practice, it should be done when the corn is dry. It is then less tender and not so liable to be broken down. Harrowing should not be done when the land is wet and weather cold. Care must be exercised not to thin out the stand when harrowing. If the ground is lumpy, full of old corn stalks or rubbish harrowing is even more undesirable than on good land.

Instruction in the Origin of soils, their physical make-up, movements of soil water and tillage; the seed—its parts, germination, selection and storage will be given at the teachers' summer school at the Minnesota Experiment Station, St. Anthony Park, beginning June 20th.

Domestic Art and Domestic Science will be two of the subjects taught young ladies attending the summer school and college of agriculture, St. Anthony Park, from June 20th to July 29th. Those desiring may confine their work to those subjects, or may, in addition, elect one or more regular subjects.

Killing Weeds is but one object of cultivating corn. While important to kill weeds the preservation of moisture in the soil is equally so, and is done by shallow and frequent cultivation.

FOURNIER ACQUITTED

BUT 23 MINUTES DELIBERATION CLEARS THE ALLEGED SLAYER OF AAGOT DAHL.

GETS LIBERTY IN THIRD TRIAL

Prisoner, Awaiting Verdict, Visibly Nevous for First Time in Six Years.—Leaves the Courtroom Amid Congratulations.

Aitkin. — Paul Fournier, who was accused of having killed Aagot Dahl near Quaring, Beltrami county, March 7, 1904, is a free man. The jury in the district court here returned a verdict of not guilty after having been out but 23 minutes.

There was so little delay in receiving the verdict and while waiting for the jury to come in Fournier was visibly nervous for the first time in the six years he has been under arrest for the murder of N. O. Dahl and daughter.

When the jury was seated Fournier became deathly pale as he scrutinized the countenances of the men who had decided his fate and when the clerk of court read the words "not guilty" a smile spread over his countenance and he was much relieved.

Fournier heartily thanked all the members of the jury and Judge Stanton and bubbled over with appreciation as he left the court room, being without the custody of an official for the first time in six years.

As Fournier left the court room he was heartily congratulated by a great many who had witnessed the trial.

Two years in the penitentiary and one in the county jail has not robbed Fournier of his personal magnetism and the little Frenchman seems little affected by his close confinement of late years.

The verdict of the jury is received here with approbation generally, as it is the general opinion that the evidence given by the state's witnesses was largely made questionable as to truth, through efforts at impeachment made by attorneys for Fournier, Scrutchin and Crowell, and the jury also carefully considered the fact that most of the testimony was clearly circumstantial.

The closing of the trial was dramatic and the spectators were wrought up by addresses of Mr. McKusick for the state and Messrs. Crowell and Scrutchin for Fournier. Attorney Scrutchin made the effort of his life in his address.

In his address to the jury Prosecutor Chester McKusick gave the state's theory how N. O. Dahl and daughter Aagot met death in the old man's lonely cabin near Quiring, Beltrami county, March 7, 1904. He said that late in the afternoon Paul Fournier and Wesley, the latter now in the penitentiary, went to Aagot Dahl's cabin saying they wanted to buy seed potatoes and lured father and daughter to the old man's cabin, where the potatoes were kept. There they shot them, the prosecutor declared. McKusick occupied over an hour in his argument to the jury.

W. H. Crowell of Brainerd opened the argument in behalf of the defense, reviewing the evidence in the case and showing in a forceful manner the discrepency in the testimony given by the state's witnesses denouncing as outrageous the too evident bitter hatred of the prisoner which had been so openly exhibited by the majority of those testifying in behalf of the prosecution. He appealed to the jurors to bear well in mind the gentlemanly demeanor of the man who had thrice been tried on the most serious charge in the criminal calendar, murder in in the first degree, with his life at stake.

Charles W. Scrutchin, chief counsel for Fournier, followed Attorney Crowell in a two hours' talk. He carefully analyzed the evidence given at this trial, and was bitter in his scathing denuciation of the state's principal witnesses, whom he denounced as perjurers.

LINE DRAWN ON MALT.

Fergus Falls.—Following the opinion by City Attorney N. F. Field a few days ago to the effect that malt sales can be prohibited under the provisions of the city charter, Mayor D. M. Brown today issued a proclamation directing that after May 31 no malt shall be sold in this city. This is likely to close several establishments here, nearly all of the former saloonkeepers having opened places in which malt is the principal drink dispensed. The mayor says:

"The somewhat prevailing idea that beverages containing not more than 2 per cent of alcohol may be sold without a license is not the law. It must have been clearly the intent of a majority of the voters to dispense with the saloons for at least one year. If so, it is not proper to tolerate them even in a disguised form."

BANKERS AT ALBERT LEA.

Members of First District Gathering for Annual Meeting.

Albert Lea.—A large number of bankers from the Twin Cities as well as the southeastern part of the state were here to attend the annual meeting of the First district group of bankers. The local bankers entertained the visitors and the ladies accompanying them at the Auditorium theater, and later the room was cleared and dancing was indulged in by all who desired.

FRANK DAY OPERATED ON.

The Democratic Chairman Seeks Relief From His Sufferng.

St. Paul.—Hon. Frank A. Day, chairman of the Democratic state central committee and prominent leader of the Democratic party in Minnesota, was operated upon at the Cobb hospital in St. Paul.

The operation is designed to correct an abdominal disorder from which Mr. Day has been suffering for two years. How serious the trouble was probably Mr. Day did not realize himself.

It was little less than a year ago that Mr. Day sent his chief, the late Governor Johnson, to Rochester for an operation for a trouble similar in character. That operation was fatal.

Realizing that he would be compelled to seek relief himself, through an operation, Mr. Day went ahead quietly making his preparations. Only a few very intimate friends knew beforehand of his condition and intentions.

Saturday Mr. Day closed up his business affairs and walked to the Cobb hospital, which is near the home in the Midway district, where he underwent the operation.

After it was over, Dr. Sheridan G. Cobb who, with the assistance of Dr. J. E. Moore of Minneapolis, performed the operation, pronounced it successful.

Mr. Day is resting quietly and easily, with every apparent chance for a quick recovery unless complications, always to be feared in operations of this character, should set in.

The operation was for what is known in surgery as a seriously developing hernia. Mr. Day was on the operating table thirty-five minutes.

Speaking of its afterwards, Dr. Cobb said: "The operation cannot be described as major operation, although operations of this character are always more or less serious. Mr. Day came out from under the influence of the anesthetic nicely and is bright and cheerful."

BIG SPEAKERS FOR ST. PAUL.

Best in Country Picked for National Conservation Convention.

Washington, May 25.—Plans are going forward in fine shape for the national conservation convention to be held in St. Paul in September. The fact that former President Roosevelt is to attend and speak has aroused unusual interest in the event. Most of the plans for the convention, so far as the national association is concerned, will remain uncompleted until after the return of Gifford Pinchot, president of the organization who is now en route from Europe.

Secretary Shipp of the association has prepared a partial list of the speakers, which includes, in addition to Colonel Roosevelt and Mr. Pinchot, James R. Garfield, former secretary of the interior; Frank C. Gowdy of Denver, chairman of the conservation commission of that state; Newton C. Blanchard, former governor of Louisiana; Dr. Charles R. Van Hise, president of the University of Wisconsin; George C. Pardee, former governor of California; Paris Gibson, former United States senator from Montana; Senator Newlands of Nevada, Representative Scott of Kansas and George F. Swain of Harvard university.

Because of the many requests throughout the country for speakers on conservation, Secretary Shipp said that this list will have to be doubled before the summer is well advanced.

DRAINAGE IN VALLEY OF RED.

General System On a Big Scale Is Being Gradually Worked Out.

Crookston.—Some conception of the amount of drainage work being done in this section can be realized by the verified statement that O. L. Hamery, of this city, drainage engineer, has the supervision of 500 miles of ditches, practically all in Marshall, Kittson and Roseau counties, though there are a few miles in Beltrami county and a few in Polk.

For practically all of this work the contracts have been let, and the ditches will be completed the coming fall.

Mr. Hamery is but one of many drainage engineers in Crookston and surrounding territory, and thus it is seen that the work in the aggregate is immense. The system in this section of the state within a few years will be in shape for tile drainage, which will become general. In the past it has not been practical, because the general drainage system was not far enough advanced to furnish outlets for tile drainage. However, a few farmers have experimented with tile drainage, and it has proved thoroughly satisfactory.

Much of the land that will be reclaimed is exceptionally rich and has been termed as swamp land in the past. It has a rich layer of decayed vegetation on top and will produce wonderful crops when the water problem has been disposed of.

Wisconsin Monument Dedicated.

Vicksburg, Mississippi. — The Wisconsin monument in the National Park here was dedicated with much ceremony. Governor Davidson and a large party of prominent citizens from Wisconsin were present.

Wrecker Assails Flyer.

Thief River Falls.—An attempt was made to wreck the Winnipeg flyer on the Soo at the small station of Halma near this city. A party of young persons on their way to a wedding, on passing over the crossing, discovered a large rock wedged between the rails near the crossing. The fresh tracks of a man were discovered in the soft soil leading away from the scene of the attempted wreck, and the railway detectives are endeavoring to discover the culprit.

WHEAT TAKES DROP

CHICAGO OPERATOR CLOSING OUT HOLDINGS IN THE MAY OPTION—WILL RETIRE.

1,000,000 BUSHELS ON LAKES

Lichstern-Waterman Deal Reported Settled—Minneapolis Quotations Decline Upon News of Important Developments.

Chicago, Illinois. — At a loss estimatter as close to half a million dollars, the Patten interests got out of the wheat market, disposing of the last of a line of wheat estimated at 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 bushels.

It is believed the average loss on the greater part of this holding was 8 cents a bushel. The wheat was July and September, mainly the latter. Much of it was accumulated four months ago when crop damage stories were the vital influences on the market. For once the Patten sources of information seem to have failed to come up to the standard of accuracy.

For the last fortnight the Patten crowd stuck to their colors, furnishing muscle to sustain the market when demoralization seemed inpending. Finally they got tired giving support to a market which seemed hopeless at prevailing levels for the distant options.

Patten was up against strong capitalistic adversaries, not the least of which was the Armour interests.

As the Pattens are to retire from active business July 1, this is believed to be the last big Patten deal. Its failure throws a cloak over the glamour of brilliant successes which have made the name of Patten familiar the world over.

With something like 1,000,000 bushels in transit on the lake from Duluth bound for Chicago to be added to the millions already here for delivery on May contracts; with sturdy longs and shorts of great wealth and much nerve battling against each other, and with transactions running into seven figures every hour, the wheat market situation has assumed that fascinatingly interesting stage which precedes the final climax. The reckoning comes at 1:15 p. m. Tuesday.

No Spectacle Expected.

Nothing like the spectacular scenes of the old days, when the big traders were largely a law unto themselves, is expected, but the proceedings are likely to be intensely interesting, nevertheless. With the eyes of official Washington more or less intently on affairs as they are conducted on the Chicago board, both dealers and the board itself are disposed to be circumspect. Private settlements, with few fireworks accompanying, may constitute the vital features of the going out of May.

Cargoes loaded hereafter at Duluth cannot reach here in time to be delivered on the last day of the month. Just what amount of contract wheat is en route to arrive within the schedule of time has not been determined definitely. Some shrewd traders affect to believe the volume is much larger than the newspaper accounts have indicated. It is generally estimated that the total deliveries in Chicago on May contracts will be something like 3,000,000 bushels, which will make an aggregate contract stock here at the end of the month of over 4,000,000 bushels.

Most of this gain, according to the notion in Board of Trade circles, will be the property of Theodore H. Waterman, the Albany, N. Y. miller, the leading long of the season for the May option. He declares he will be able to pay for all the wheat he has bought. What his holdings are he knows best. The figures suggested by those who have followed the developments of the deal are 5,000,000 bushels.

Settlement Reported.

The "deal" in May wheat in which Mr. Waterman, the Albany, N. Y. miller, is said to have been the controlling "long" and Mr. Lichstern the most active "short," is reported to have been settled privately. It cannot be stated positively that Waterman and Lichstern were acting alone. In fact, Lichstern has frequently been reported as acting for a big elevator house.

Little Johnnie, who cannot pronounce S, has been frightened into keeping out of the attic by tales told by his nurse of a dreadful ghost that lives in the dim recesses under the eaves. The other day he was overheard to say confidentially to a small friend:

"We've got an old gho't up in our attic!"

To which his friend, much interested, responded: "Do he butt?"

Easy for Him.

WESTERN CANADA
What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

125 Million Bushels of Wheat in 1909

Western Canada field crops for 1909 will easily yield to the farmer $170,000,000.00 in cash. Free Homesteads of 160 acres, and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Railway and Land Companies have land for sale at reasonable prices. Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop. Splendid climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates, wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

For pamphlet "Last Best West," particulars as to suitable location and low settlers' rate, apply to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Gov't Agent.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1909, at the post office at Sunbeam' Minn. under th Act of Congress of March 3. 1879

. The Olbarg Journal stopped long enough in its career to rin the Grand Rapids Review up the back, for kicking about the publication of land notices in the Journal, which Bro. Anderson did in proper style.

We note that all other counties are to hold their caucuses to elect delegates to the county conventions as set by the county Republican committee, but no man knows when, where, or how they are to be elected in Red Lake County.

A majority of the papers in this senatorial district speak favorably of Senator Hanson's candidacy for renomination as Senator and it is conceded that his chances for winning the three cornered fight are very bright.—Norman County Index.

. Well he needs a majority and all they can do is to speak favorably of him at so much per speak, but we defy any of them to mention one thing that he did while warming a chair during two sessions of the legislature, as the Senator from this district, that would entitle him to reelection. But we can tell many things that he should have done but did not and we are going to tell it later on, don't forget it.

It now begins to look as if the little political differences of the past will be forgotten, and that Albert Kaiser would come into the State Convention with the solid backing of the Ninth Congressional District This is as it should be and the people will feel better satisfied to support the ticket after the convention, if their own Northern Minnesota man is endorsed by his neighbors. Let us all pull together for one representative from Northern Minnesota on the state ticket!

. Go away from home to hear the news! The Bemidji Sentinal sprung the name of Andrew Hanson of Lillo as a probable candidate for a representative from this district in the next legislature. Mr. Hanson moved into this, Red Lake county, from Polk county this spring, but he may have come up here to supply a long felt want, of a candidate for the legislature. In that same article the statement is made that all differences regarding the location of the court house have been patched up, and Red Lake county will present a solid front. "Gee Whis," what a size up of the situation in this county! As a matter of fact this county expects to be struck by the tail of Halley's comet next November and more than half of it wiped from the map of the state of Minnnesota. Any man, or any candidate for office, that gets into this mixup will think that he has been struck by an Oklahome cyclone.

Our Friends.

If we choose our friends for what they are, not for what they have, and if we deserve so great a blessing, then they will be always with us, preserved in absence and even after death, in the amber of memory.—Cicero.

Couldn't Talk.

I never knew an early rising, hard-working, prudent man, careful of his earnings and strictly honest, who complained of bad luck.—Addison.

An Unfamiliar Alias.

There may be nothing in a name, but the American traveler of whom the Living Church tells found at least confusion therein. He had landed at Liverpool and hastened out of the city to a rural village, where he found a charmingly old fashioned inn which delighted his soul. It was late when he arrived, and when he asked what he could have for supper the buxom landlady suggested minced collops. He agreed with enthusiasm, the dish sounded so romantic, so Robin Hoodsy, so almost mediaeval. And what do you suppose they brought him? Just plain hash!

ALASKA WANTS MORE SETTLERS

Miners, Farmers and Laborers Needed In the Northwest.

COPPER CAMPS OPEN IN JULY

Amazing Alaska has just reappeared in the limelight, showing another new phase. While folks here at home are howling that the riches of the northern territory should be kept for the people, Alaska is crying that the people do not want the riches badly enough to go there after them and that as a result the territory is beginning its summer exceedingly short handed. There are literally not even enough people to do the work in hand, let alone to develop the new opportunities.

The first complaint came from Fairbanks a few weeks ago. Press dispatches said that a large percentage of the miners in the camp had deserted to join the stampede to the new Iditarod and Innoko gold diggings and more were going as soon as the ice went out of the rivers. A labor famine was threatened, and it still seems likely that the estimated $9,000,000 of gold from the spring clean-up will be heavily cut next year for lack of men to take it out. Other established camps report the same difficulty in getting labor, and the agencies of the Pacific coast are being appealed to.

Ore Shipments Soon.

From the railroads also there is a big demand for men. The Copper River and Northwestern especially is trying to increase its force, as it is rushing construction so as to reach the mouth of the Chitina river by July 1. This is the gateway to the copper country, and a few weeks thereafter the rails will be in the heart of this undeveloped and little prospected region.

By October the road is expected to reach the Bonanza mine, and a large force will be at work on the property all summer so that ore shipments can begin as soon as the rails reach the bins. In the meantime several of the thirty or forty properties along the line of the railroad are going to begin large development. All this takes skilled men, and apparently they are not to be had. Thus a new problem takes the place of the old. Heretofore development has been impossible because of the tremendous cost of getting supplies into a wilderness without roads of any sort. Experts agree that this is one of the most promising copper regions in the world, and it is unique in that from being almost inaccessible it will suddenly this summer have complete rail connections with tidewater and the steamer routes.

Farmers Badly Needed.

What Alaska asks for, therefore, even more than miners and laborers, are prospectors who will cover her new ground and give reasons for further development.

This year, too, Alaska is crying for farmers. All along the line of the railroad up the Chitina valley there is farming land which the agricultural department has reported favorably on, and in view of the large number of miners to be fed there promises to be a good local market for everything that can be raised. It is a pioneering country, of course, and new settlers will have to face pioneer conditions, but the success of farming and the bonanza rewards to be won in it when there are local markets has been well proved in the great Tanana valley of the interior and other sections.

The Alaska-Yukon Magazine, published at Seattle, the gateway to Alaska, is authority for the statement that within the next five years Alaska's population and the value of Alaska's products will be doubled. The completion of the Copper River and Northwestern railroad this year and the shipping of ore from the Kotsina-Chitina copper belt, together with the development of the Bering river coal fields, will create an industrial activity in this part of Alaska that will require greater population.

WHERE COFFEE COMES FROM.

Wonderful Estates That Occupy a Whole Province and Give Employment to Thousands.

Few of the millions of coffee drinkers in this country have anything but a hazy idea as to the real source of coffee. In a general, vague way the words "Mocha" and "Java" are mixed into the coffee information at hand, principally because these are found upon the battered tin canisters in the nearest grocery store.

Actually not 10 per cent of the coffee consumed in this country ever saw Arabia, where Mocha coffee comes from, or Java. By far the greatest number of persons never tasted either. The bulk of coffee comes from the state of Sao Paulo, in Brazil, and the imports from that source alone supply nearly nine-tenths of the 1,900,000,000 pounds that we drink each year. Sao Paulo is little, but one vast coffee garden throughout its 174,583 square miles of territory, and, while there are many other industries, coffee growing is the chief and the true source of the wealth of the people.

Nearly all the billion and a half pounds of coffee grown in Brazil is shipped from the seacoast city of Santos, where are great docks at which lie the vessels of the world. Other countries grow coffee, to be sure, but not one in such vast quantities as does Brazil. So greatly has the Brazilian coffee grown in favor that the plant is now being taken abroad and cultivated. Now the department of agriculture is beginning to pay attention to the manner in which substitutes for good Brazilian coffee are being foisted on the American people under the false names of Mocha and Java.

Perfumes in Ancient Days.

Old as the history of the world itself is that of the queen of flowers. The ancient Greeks and Romans reveled in roses. They were used lavishly at their feasts. In the time of the republic the people had their cups of Falernian wine swimming with blooms, and the Spartan soldiers after the battle of Cirrha refused to drink any wine that was not perfumed with roses, while at the regatta of Baiae the whole surface of the Lucrine lake was strewn with flowers.

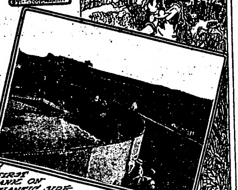
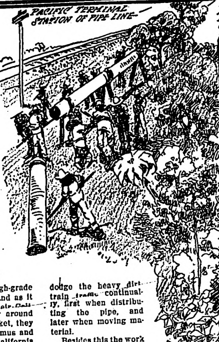
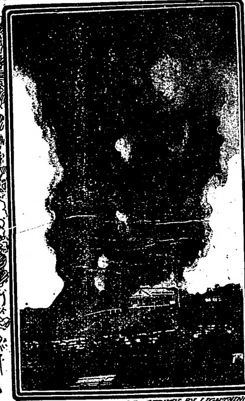
PIPING OIL FROM THE PACIFIC TO THE ATLANTIC



FIRST TANK ON ATLANTIC SIDE IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION



PACIFIC TERMINAL STATION OF PIPE LINE



TANK AT MOUNT HOPE STRUCK BY LIGHTNING 11,000 BARRELS OF OIL BURNING

ON December 15, 1906, the waters of the Pacific ocean, for the first time in all history, mingled with the waters of the Atlantic across the Isthmus of Panama. It was not, however, through the great canal that this occurred, but through the oil pipe line of the Union Oil company of California, which was being tested with sea water, under a pressure of 800 pounds, before being put in service.

The installation of the only pipe line connecting the two oceans has excited considerable interest everywhere, not only because it was the only large pipe line in the tropics at the time, but because it opened the eastern market for the first time to California oil.

The Union Oil company of California was founded in 1890 by Pennsylvania oil men who had been established in the business in California since 1882. Its headquarters were at Los Angeles until 1908 and its directors are Los Angeles business men of the highest character for probity and conservative business energy. The president, Mr. Lyman Stewart, is well known as a philanthropist as well as a far-sighted business man and to him is due the entire credit for holding the company together and bringing it safely through the rocks and shoals of the early days of the oil business in California and the great panic of 1893.

The company has been doing a large business on the east coast in high-grade standardized asphaltum for many years and as it was necessary to ship the products of their California refineries across the continent or around the Horn in order to get them to the market, they decided to lay a pipe line across the isthmus and send the crude oil down the coast from California in their steamers and then up the Atlantic coast to New York or Philadelphia, where it could be refined.

The laying of the line and construction of the pump stations was intrusted to Mr. R. W. Fenn, A. S. C. E., who had not only been with the company for many years, but had also lived in a number of the South American republics and was accustomed to the health conditions and to handling native and Jamaican labor. Six months' time was given the company under their concession from the United States government, dating from January 10, 1906. Mr. Fenn was given about 50 minutes to get ready for the trip and reached New York in time to take the boat sailing February 2, 1906, for Colon, without men or plans, but with plenty of money.

On April 16 the pipe laying was commenced and the line was completed on October 16—six months to a day—but the time had been extended by the government in order to allow for preliminary arrangements. Mr. S. T. McElfresh of Pittsburg, Pa., was in immediate charge of the pipe-laying gangs. The progress of the work was watched with great interest by all who saw it. So much complaint had been made by everybody about the worthlessness of Jamaican laborers that the laying of this pipe line was an object lesson on the subject. The gangs contained, each, about 70 men and were divided into sections. First came the "brushers," cutting all the grass and brush, followed by the "stringers," who laid the pipe in line, end to end. The next division removed the thread protectors and painted the threads with a preparation of oil and graphite. The pipe-laying gang proper consisted of the men who handled the lifting jacks, jack boards and chain tongs, five men on each of four pairs of extra heavy long-handled lay tongs. Another section lifted the next joint with pick-ups and the pipe steerer lined it up so that the thread would enter properly, while the joint was twirled by the friction of a length of rope passed around it several times and drawn back and forth until the pipe would enter no further in the collar without the aid of the tongs.

The foreman then sat astride the collar and beat time with his hammer, while the tongsmen "broke out"—two tongs up and two down, with the precision of a military drill. After the joint was in place the painters did their work and put on the second coat of paint; the first having been applied when the pipe left the shops, to prevent rust forming while in transit.

An important feature of the gang organization was the employment of a confidential man, who spent all his time going from one gang to another and watching to see that the orders covering the treatment of the blacks were properly carried out by the foremen.

As the Jamaicans are simply great, overgrown children, they are easily discouraged by hazing or injustice and quite as easily encouraged by jollying. One may swear at them all he wants provided he has their confidence and, on the other hand, a big, well-trained gang can be scattered in two days by a foreman who has a mean streak in him and lets it crop out.

It is also necessary to make each man repeat every order before sending him to do anything, in order to be sure he understands, as their intellect is not well developed and they are so anxious to please that they will always answer, "Yes, sah," and start off without knowing what they are going to do.

It is hard to realize all of the difficulties which presented themselves during the work. The Panama railroad was in the act of double tracking its line and canal construction was going on everywhere. Steam shovels were at work in various places on both sides of the railway and tracks were being shifted and plans being constantly changed all along the line. There was no wagon road across the isthmus and it was necessary to dodge the heavy dirt train traffic continually, first when distributing the pipe, and later when moving material.

Besides this the work commenced with the beginning of the rainy season and was completed before it ended. In one place the men worked through the pouring rain for three weeks up to their waists in water in a swamp, part of the time on a floating platform or raft of boards, and laid the line in one place on a floating raft of logs a mile long, as there was no bottom.

The following additional description of the line is quoted from the Canal Record, the official organ of the canal commission, with a few slight corrections of errors in connection with mechanical features:

By the first of January, 1909, practically all of the stationary boilers in the service of the Isthmian Canal commission will be using crude oil as fuel. It is estimated that the actual saving to the commission by substituting oil for coal will be at least 65 per cent. Coal is now delivered on the isthmus by the Panama Railroad company for $6.35 a ton. On a commercial basis a barrel of the oil delivered to the commission will generate as much steam as a quarter ton of coal and as the oil costs 90 cents a barrel, the saving, from a fuel point alone will be 56 per cent. In addition to this the fixed expenses, such as wages of firemen, etc., are considerably less.

Oil is delivered on the isthmus by the Union Oil company of California, under a concession granted January 10, 1906, for the construction and operation of a pipe line from the Pacific to the Atlantic side of the isthmus over land owned by the United States and the Panama Railroad company. This company had previously obtained, under date of October 30, 1905, a similar concession from the government of Panama for the construction and maintenance of a pipe line across the isthmus for the purpose of conveying crude oil and for the erection of pumping stations and storage tanks in the cities of Panama and Colon. The license granted by the secretary of war is revocable at the will of the government of the United States and is conditioned upon the payment of $500 United States currency a month, beginning August 1, 1906, into the Canal Zone treasury, the fund thus created to be set aside for the support of the public schools of the Canal Zone. It is further stipulated in the grant that, if desired, the Isthmian Canal commission or the Panama Railroad company may purchase crude oil from the Union Oil company of California at 90 cents United States currency a barrel. In addition to the monthly payment of $500 to the treasury of the Canal Zone, the Union Oil company also pays $250 to the government of Panama and is subject to the usual Canal Zone taxes.

The oil delivered on the isthmus comes from Santa Barbara county, Cal.

Its consistency is about the same as water and it can be transported in a pipe line as readily. It is piped from the field to Port Harford, where it is pumped into the Union Oil company's tank steamers, which are serving points in Oregon, Washington, Hawaii, Chile and Guatemala, as well as Panama. There are seven storage tanks in the Canal Zone, four at La Boca, at the Pacific entrance and three at Mt Hope, near Colon. Each tank has a capacity of 37,500 barrels. An eighth tank of like capacity, formerly located at Mt Hope, was destroyed by lightning on May 13, 1908.

The pipe line through which the oil is pumped to the Atlantic side of the isthmus follows the line of the Panama railroad and is about 48 miles long. It is made of open-hearth steel pipe, eight inches in diameter, with gate valves at one-mile intervals and without expansion joints. The pipe holds 15,000 barrels of oil. From sea level to the summit near Culebra the total lift is about 225 feet. At the summit the line runs along the edge of the Rio Grande reservoir and at this point is encased in concrete, so that if the pipe should break the water would not be affected. It is tested to 800 pounds to the square inch, but a pressure of over 800 pounds is seldom used.

A Dow compound pump, driven by steam from boilers in which crude oil is used, furnishes the pressure to pump the oil across the isthmus and about 30 hours are consumed in the journey. The oil is so inelastic that it can be ascertained by the pulsation in the plant at La Boca at what moment the valve of the tank at Mt. Hope has been closed. As the pipe is laid on the surface of the ground it follows rather a serpentine course and the many curves help to overcome the expansion due to changes in temperature.

The company was given 180 days in which to lay its pipe. This was at a time when the work involved not only engineering features, but also those of providing subsistence and quarters for the men engaged. The laying of the pipe was begun in several places simultaneously and a large force of men was kept constantly at work, so that the company was ready to deliver oil October 16, 1906, although the line was not used throughout its entire length until November 14, 1907.

On account of changes in the line of the Panama Railroad company and in that of the canal itself the pipes have been shifted at many places and, according to the contract, all this work is done at the expense of the Union Oil company.

WOMAN'S ERA IN AUSTRIA.

In ten thousands of Austrian families girls and young women that formerly prepared for a career with the needle, thereby often digging for themselves an early grave, are now getting ready to embrace the better paid professions, formerly monopolized by man. Since training schools are open to women, the Vienna correspondent of the Boston Post writes, masses of them decided to engage in electricity, architecture, engineering and similar pursuits.

A number of Vienna girls have declared that they will go in for bridge building, others want to build machinery and if the enthusiasm keeps up tailoresses and shirtwaist and lingerie factories will soon be hard up for hands.

It is remarked on all sides that the opening of the training schools to girls came none too soon, for the sedentary habits to which Austrian women were condemned resulted in a less prepossessing grace. Now that Austrian girls, like American girls, can make the best of their opportunities it is expected that our womanhood will be stronger and more beautiful than ever.

WHY HE OBSERVED.

It was in the last car of the through Pullman train.

"Mamma," said little Archibald, "that man has on a wig."

"Sh!" cautioned his mother in a whisper. "Didn't I tell you not to be so observing?"

"Why not, mamma? Isn't this an observation car?"

When You Think

Of the pain which many women experience with every month it makes the gentleness and kindness always associated with womanhood seem to be almost a miracle. While in general no woman rebels against what she regards as a natural necessity there is no woman who would not gladly be free from this recurring period of pain.

BABY'S SCALP CRUSTED

"Our little daughter, when three months old, began to break out on the head and we had the best doctors to treat her, but they did not do her any good. They said she had eczema. Her scalp was a solid scale all over. The burning and itching was so severe that she could not rest, day or night. We had about given up all hopes when we read of the Cuticura Remedies. We at once got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and followed directions carefully. After the first dose of the Cuticura Resolvent, we used the Cuticura Soap freely and applied the Cuticura Ointment. Then she began to improve rapidly and in two weeks the scale came off her head and new hair began to grow. In a very short time she was well. She is now sixteen years of age and a picture of health. We used the Cuticura Remedies about five weeks, regularly, and then we could not tell she had been affected by the disease. We used no other treatments after we found out what the Cuticura Remedies would do for her. J. Fish and Ella M. Fish, Mt. Vernon, Ky., Oct. 12, 1909."

Description of a Mountain.

"Jimmy," said the teacher, "what is a cape?"

"A cape is land extending into the water."

"Correct, William. Define a gulf."

"A gulf is water extending into the land."

"Good. Christopher," to a small eager looking boy, "what is a mountain?"

Christopher shot up from his seat so suddenly as to startle the teacher, and promptly responded: "A mountain is land extending into the air."

Diplomacy.

Here is a story about a diplomatic negro waiter; also about two well-known Kansas men, who can go by the names of Smith and Jones, just to tell the yarn.

Smith and Jones look much alike and are frequently taken for each other. One day Smith was in a certain big hotel not a thousand miles from Kansas City and went into the dining room for dinner. The negro waiter busily brushed off the crumbs and said: "Why, how is you, Mr. Jones, how is you? I's glad to see you. I hasn't seen you since I waited on your table when you all used to have a little game upstaihs."

"I'm afraid you are mistaken," said Smith, very quickly. "My name isn't Jones. You have the wrong man."

"Nuff said; nuff said," smiled the negro, with much bowing and scraping. "Ah knows all right when to keep mah mouf shet; Ah knows all right, Mr. Jones."—Kansas City Journal.

WOMEN'S ILLS.

Many women who suffer with backache, bearing-down pain, headaches and nervousness do not know that these ailments are usually due to trouble with the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills remove the cause.

Mrs. Joseph Cross, Church St., Morrilton, Ark., says: "For weeks I was bent double by pain in my back and the kidney secretions were profuse. My feet and ankles were badly swollen and I had headaches and dizzy spells. Six doctors treated me without relief and I finally began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me."

Spreading the News.

Postmaster Fuller of Rockland, Me., was the sparkling wit at the postmasters' dinner. He announced with mock solemnity that he had just received word from his congressman that his name had been sent in somewhere in Washington for reappointment in recognition of his efficient service and the votes he could swing.

"I have dashed the momentous news of my triumph to distant Rockland to my wife, and if I am acquainted with the lady, as I believe that I am, the glad tidings have ere now penetrated to the most remote sections of that district," was a sally that brought down the house.

Trifling Telephone Tangles

By CLARA H. HOLMES

Kittie Smith and John Colson were lovers, but perversity in matters matrimonial have become a proverb, and their case was no exception to the rule.

Kittie lived with a married sister, and as frequently happened, she assumed more authority than the most exacting parent would have done. She most decidedly refused consent to their marriage. "That child," she exclaimed indignantly, and promptly forbade John the house.

But, love finds a way, and their trysting place was in the thick shrubbery at the lower end of the garden. John was trying to persuade her to a clandestine marriage, but she lacked courage to assent. Her sister's shrill call from the back porch decided the question.

"Kittie, Kittie Smith! Come here this instant and put little Billy to bed."

"As if you were her servant!" whispered John indignantly. "That settles it, you are going to marry me tomorrow night."

"Oh, John, she'll never let me," breathlessly.

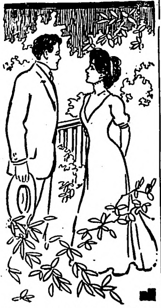
"She won't? Then we'll not ask her. You put those kids to bed as soon as the chickens go to roost, so you can get to the telephone office by ten o'clock. I'll put in the call with the operator and she'll give you the line so I can tell you where to meet me. Ten o'clock, sharp! I'll be waiting and so will the parson."

"Sister's coming," whispered Kittie, tremblingly.

"Let her come; she'll not find me," replied John airily, and leaping the fence, was gone.

Kittie met her sister with demure unconsciousness. "Were you calling?" she asked.

Kittie presented herself promptly on time at the telephone office and giving her name, asked: "Is there a call for me?"



"You Are Going to Marry Me Tomorrow Night."

"Yes, Miss Olson," was the reply, at the same time indicating her box.

Kittie smiled consciously. "Colson! Well, now, or an hour from now will make no great difference," she thought.

"Hello, John," she called softly as soon as she had closed the door.

"Hello, Het," came the instant reply. "It's all right, come to the corner of Belmont and Main. I have an auto waiting, so hurry up."

"All right," she replied, and hung up the receiver. "Wasn't it funny that he called me Pet? I've heard him say a hundred times that he detested it—but I don't! I think it's just sweet. I suppose it's just the 'phone, but his voice didn't sound a bit natural," she murmured as she wrapped her veil about her head, completely concealing her features.

John, at the appointed place, lifted her to the seat without speaking. As he backed, preparatory to turning, another auto came swiftly down the street, and on the corner swerved toward them.

"Oh, no, you don't, Dave Olsen!" exclaimed John, speeding away.

"Hi, there! Stop, you idiot, or I'll have you arrested," yelled the driver of the other car.

"Come on, then," shouted John derisively. To Kittie he said: "Hold fast, I'm going to let her go."

But go as he would his pursuer kept pace with him, so he began twisting and turning, round one corner swaying ominously, skidding on another sharp turn until Kittie shrieked in affright.

Escape seemed impossible, so he doubled back through dark and narrow streets, the lamps on the pursuing machine gleaming like menacing eyes almost within touch. On a lighted corner a policeman ordered him to halt, and as he failed to obey, fired a shot at him. Kittie screamed and half rose, as if to leap from the car.

"Sit down!" called John angrily.

At sound of a second shot she began to sob aloud.

"Oh, shucks," muttered John in vexation. A moment later he remarked, repentantly: "Why, Het, we don't get married every day, in the year, but we are going to be married tonight if we have to smash the automobile record. I do believe that fellow's lost himself, or else the cop's got him." He began to slow down.

Kittie inarticulately murmured something about smashing the automobile instead of the record, to which John paid no attention.

As he lifted her down at the parsonage he whispered to her: "I never thought you'd show the white feather." With a laugh, he half pushed her up the steps to where the parson was waiting for them.

Kittie, essaying to untie her veil with trembling fingers, glanced toward John, who stood, hat in hand, speaking to the clergyman. She made a rush and took refuge behind his reverence.

"I don't want to marry this man, I don't even know him, and—and—he's a maniac," she cried hysterically.

John turned to look at her. "Well, I would be crazy to marry you. Thunder, they'd have me up for baby stealing. Who are you, anyway?"

"I'm Kittie Smith," sobbingly, "but I don't know who you are."

"Well, I'm John Smith. My tribe is numerous, but it doesn't include grown-up babies," sarcastically.

The parson stood rubbing his hands together helplessly. "Well, I do declare! My dear, were you expecting to be married?" he asked of Kittie.

"Yes, sir, I was, to John Colson. I don't know this rough man at all," beginning to weep again.

John fidgeted restlessly. "Miss Smith, can't you shut down the flood gate long enough for explanations? As I understand it, you planned to elope with John Colson. And I, John Smith, had a similar arrangement with Hetty Olsen. Now, where were you to meet John Colson?"

"He left a call for me at the public telephone office, and when I talked with him—"

"But you didn't talk to him. That bungling operator gave you to me, and must have given him my party, Hetty Olsen. Fine mix-up! I thought that fellow following us was Het's wrathful sire, but it must have been your John. Now, we'll find them in one of three places, at the police station, for speeding; at the hospital, because he got in the way of the policeman's bullet; or back at the telephone office waiting for us."

At mention of the first two places Kittie gave another little shriek.

"Oh, stop pulling the whistle. I'll have Het give you a few lessons. You wouldn't catch her doing the weeping act or squealing over anything. She's clear grit, Het is," he concluded with evident pride.

The same officer who hailed John Smith either took better aim or had a lucky accident in the case of John Colson. When his second command to halt seemed likely to be disregarded, as was his first, his bullet just grazed John's elbow, benumbing his arm so that his hand dropped from the steering wheel. Hetty pushed him aside, taking his place before the car had time to swerve.

"Is it broken?" she asked sympathetically.

"I don't know, but that doesn't matter; what does really matter is, they have got away from us," ruefully.

"They'll be hunting us when John finds out that he has the wrong girl," said Hetty laughing confidently.

As they came to a stop the policeman came up swinging his club impressively. "And what do you mean, racin' like that?" he demanded.

John laughed infectiously. "I'll tell you, I was trying to catch a thief. That fellow ahead was running off with my best girl. Wouldn't you chase him?"

"Faith I think I would, then! Well?" beginning to smile.

"It's this way. The old folks object, and—you know how 'tis. Through mistake he got my girl and I have his."

"Well, g'wan wid ye, but don't ye dare let me catch ye racin' again."

"I think we better return to the telephone office," said Hetty, turning the car, but as they approached the building they saw that the office was closed for the night.

"What now?" asked John in a troubled tone.

"I'm sure I don't know," replied Hetty with a laugh. "It wouldn't matter so much to us, only I'm certain father would never let me mix his toddy again. It's once—perhaps, twice—Never! with him."

"And Kittie! Oh, she'll never let me mention elope again," said John. "Hello, what's this?" as a car came rushing toward them.

"That you, John Colson?" came the greeting.

"It certainly is," replied he.

There ensued a rapid fire of questions and answers, an equally rapid exchange of partners, a little weeping on Kittie's part over her John's arm, a speedy ride to the waiting clergyman, and in a very short time two happy couples came out again into the night, each man wearing an air of proud proprietorship.

The parson remained standing in the open doorway enjoying the happy termination of the affair, also smiling a little at thought of the two generous gold pieces clasped in his hand. "We've given you lots of annoyance, parson, take these as a recompense," the two Johns had said.

POULTRY

POULTRY NOTES.

Leave no food around to sour.

Fresh water and grit always.

Lice and mites have cheated you out of many a broiler.

Fence four feet high for Plymouth Rocks, five feet for Leghorns.

How many eggs are you getting from your flock of hens these days?

The chickens need exercise, sunshine and pure air as much as they do feed.

A few settings of pure blooded eggs will help to improve your flock another season.

Upon the way the young stock is handled will depend very largely the value of the mature animals.

Some kind of green feed is necessary through the winter. Cabbages or any other vegetable will answer.

Incubator catalogues are made with the idea of stimulating a fondness for home grown fried chickens and fresh eggs.

Nothing is better for feeding the little turkeys during the first few weeks than wheat bread, three times a day at first, and as they become older twice a day.

Next winter's egg supply will depend on the care we give our pullets from now on. The unlimited range is best with limited feed. Wheat makes the best food for growing pullets.

The price of poultry and eggs has increased to the consumer in the past ten years more rapidly than any other agricultural product except bacon. Eggs have increased 47 per cent. and poultry 37 per cent.

DESTROYING LICE ON FOWLS

Active Measures Should Be Taken to Keep Poultry Free From Injurious Little Pest.

(By H. C. PIERCE AND R. L. WEBSTER, IOWA.)

The loss of income due to the presence of lice on fowls, while probably not as large as that due to the common chicken mite, is yet enormous. Fowls which are infested with lice cannot produce as many eggs nor as many pounds of flesh as can those that are free from these vermin. Lice are especially harmful to young chicks.

Because the lice live, eat and breed upon the body of the fowls, means of eradication must be such as to reach them beneath the feathers. This is accomplished in two ways, by the application of powders which suffocate the lice, and by liquid preparations which stifle the lice with their fumes, or kill by coming in direct contact with the parasites.

If fowls have easy access to a dusty earth wallow where they can work the fine dry particles of dust into their feathers they will keep themselves fairly free from lice, but eradication will not be entirely complete in the majority of cases. A good dust wallow may be made of equal parts of sifted dry loam and coal ashes. Wood ashes should not be used as they may bleach or burn the shanks and feathers.

For the eradication of lice quickly and completely, as upon show birds and sitting hens, it is usually necessary to work a fine dusty powder into the feathers. The method of application is to hold the fowl with one hand by the legs, head downward, and work the powder into the fluffy feathers around the vent, on the body, under the wings and on the neck, with the free hand.

An excellent powder at low cost may be made as follows: To a mixture of three parts gasoline and one part of crude carbolic acid stir in all of the plaster of paris it will moisten. When enough plaster has been added the powder will be dry, brownish pink in color, and have a pronounced odor of carbolic acid and gasoline.

A second application of the powder should be made at the end of one week to catch any lice that escaped the first dusting or had hatched from eggs in the meantime.

Sitting hens should be thoroughly dusted when eggs are placed under them and again at the end of the first and second weeks. This insures them being free from lice when the chicks are hatched.

To kill the lice upon chicks dust the mother hen or paint the walls of the coop with some liquid lice killer or disinfectant.

Especial care should be taken to dust the male of the flock thoroughly, as the quickest way to spread lice through a flock is by means of a lousy male bird.

Liquid lice killers are used primarily to paint the roosts and dropping boards. Their fumes rising through the feathers of the birds cause the lice to drop off. The practise is to paint the roosts about four o'clock in the afternoon before the fowls go to roost. This also prevents mites from attacking the fowls. Most of the liquid lice killers are coal tar products and are sold as coal tar disinfectants. Some of them do cause the lice to drop from the fowls, but whether or not they always kill the lice is not certain.

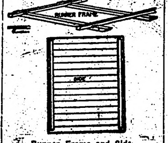
It has been found that when a fowl was placed upon a roost coated with cresol soap formula, the lice would drop in large numbers and could be caught upon a paper spread underneath the roost. In the majority of cases, however, the parasites were not killed. Where this method is used the droppings should be removed and dropping boards cleaned early the following morning to prevent the lice from reaching the fowls again.

KNOCK DOWN COLONY HOUSE

Buildings Are Useful to Shelter Brooders in Early Part of Season—Convenient Size.

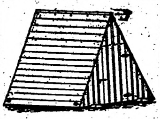
A considerable saving of lumber can be made by using knock-down poultry coops and colony houses. Herewith is an illustration of a knock-down colony house. This may be made of any convenient size.

In construction two runners with notches near their ends are laid down and two cross pieces, also notched, are screwed or bolted to them, says Orange Judd Farmer. The runners are provided so the house may be hauled from place to place. The cross pieces are to support the side walls. At the ends are bolts which run through the side wall, to which they are fastened by nuts and washers. The ridgepole is fastened to the sides by bolts also. The same with the ends, which are made triangular, as shown.



Runner Frame and Side.

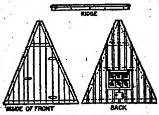
As these houses are intended only for summer use, they may be built of comparatively light material, with clapboarding for the sides and ship lap or matched stuff for the ends.



Colony House Complete.

It is desirable that not more than 50 chicks be kept in one colony house and that each flock have a grass plot of at least 1,000 square feet unless they can have free range.

These houses are also useful to shelter brooders in the early part of the season. If the houses have a floor space 6 by 6 they will each accommodate 50 chicks without crowding, and when the chicks are old enough to do without the brooder they can be allowed to range from the house itself, thus becoming accustomed to their quarters from the very first. A convenient size for the house illustrated is 6 by 6 on the floor and seven feet to the peak. These allow a man to stand up inside and to attend to the brooder and chicks without inconvenience. They can be built of odds and ends of material, but if new material must be bought and if the house is painted as it should be, it would cost about eight dollars. If unbolted and stored under cover, as they should be, such houses should last for many years, so the first cost would be insignificant compared with the life of the houses themselves.



Ends and Ridge of House.

Cure for Gapes.

Gapes in chickens is due to the pressure of a small round worm in the windpipe, usually attached to the mucous membrane from which they obtain nourishment. If care is taken to detect and remove the first case of gapes as soon as it is discovered there is little danger of its spread. Thoroughly clean and disinfect the poultry quarters.

To remove the worms from the trachea use a feather, stripping the vane till only a small tip remains at the end. By inserting it, wet with kerosene or turpentine, into the chick's trachea when it breathes, if carefully given a few turns, it will loosen the worms and then they can be removed.

After a little experience this can be done easily. Destroy all the worms. After the treatment the chicks should be isolated until all danger is passed.

Poultry Houses.

The poultry house is an important factor in maintaining constitutional vigor. It should be of the fresh-air type, tight on all sides except the front, which may be largely open. The best method of ventilating the hen-house is by the cloth window, which may be open most of the time. Ordinary cheesecloth will answer the purpose. One-third of the front of the house should be cloth or glass, about equally divided.

Dry Feeding Chicks.

Try feeding your chicks this year by the dry method. The chick feeds sold at the poultry supply houses are generally all right and as cheap as you can buy the different ingredients separately.

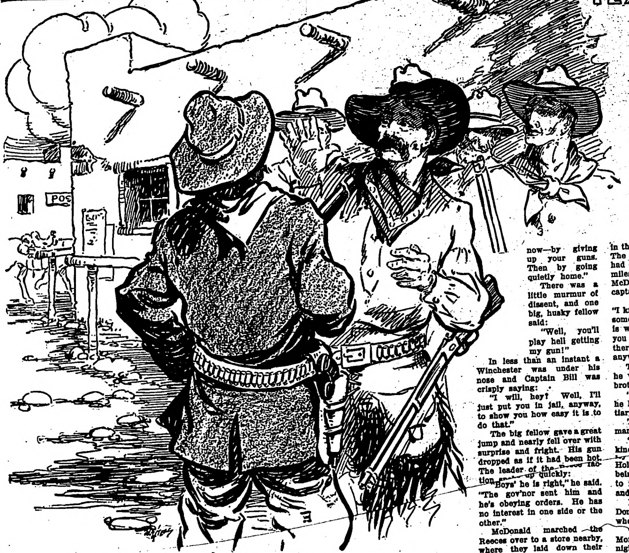
CAPTAIN BILL IN MEXICO

by ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

A CHAPTER FROM THE MEMOIRS OF CAPTAIN BILL McDONALD OF TEXAS ☆ ☆ ☆



CAPTAIN BILL stayed for a considerable time in the Mexican capital, for his traveling companion, the bank director, fell very ill, and the Ranger captain turned nurse to pull him through. He became a well-known figure in the city, being often pointed out as the man who had taken a squad of police in charge; who was going to bring the Rangers down to whip the Guatemalans, and whose skill with the six-shooter was nothing short of miraculous. This last belief was in some manner sustained one day when he visited a shooting gallery in company with an American dentist, who had taken pleasure in showing him the sights of the quaint old town.

"Captain, suppose you shoot out those targets as rapidly as you can, and see how many you'll miss," he said, when they were inside.

Without hesitation McDonald drew his revolver and opened a fusillade, hitting a target at each shot. Two Mexicans who were practising in the gallery made a wild break for the open air and safety. Soldiers and police came running in excitement and confusion to discover the cause. It was all over by this time and the officers, seeing only Captain Bill and the dentist, stood gaping, waiting an explanation.

"It is nothing," said the dentist in Spanish; "my friend the captain was only practising a little to keep his hand in."

As the century drew near its end a wave of disorder and crime that amounted to an inundation swept over the eastern and south-eastern portion of Texas. Murders, lynchings, mobs and rumors of mobs were reported daily.

The Reece-Townsend feud in Colorado county gave the state no end of trouble. The Reece and Townsend families killed one another in the regulation way, when good opportunities offered. They had a fashion of gathering in the streets of Columbus, the county seat, for their demonstrations and sometimes on a field day like this they killed members of other families, by mistake. But errors of this sort were not allowed to interfere with the central idea of the feud; they apologized, and went on killing one another, just the same.

It was when a boy who belonged to neither faction was shot and killed at one of these reunions that Capt. Bill McDonald and his Rangers were ordered to Columbus to put down what seemod about to become a general war.

Captain Bill failed to receive the order in time to get his men the same day, but did not wait. He wired two to follow him on the first train, and set out for Columbus alone. Arriving on the streets of Columbus, he saw detachments of armed men gathered here and there—the streets being otherwise deserted. He set out at once for the home of District Judge Kennon, to whom he had been ordered to report. After the exchange of greetings, McDonald said:

"We haven't much time, judge, from appearances. I saw a lot of armed men as I came along and it looks like we're going to have war."

"You are right," Judge Kennon said; "we are expecting it any minute. Where are your men and how many have you?"

"None, judge. I came alone, but I expect two in the morning."

"In the morning! Why, man, by that time the fight will be over! And what can you do with two men here? Nothing less than 25 or 30 will help this case."

"Judge," said Captain Bill, in his deliberate way, "I believe I can stop this thing if you will come down to the courthouse with me. Anyhow, it's my duty to try; and we'd better be getting over there now, judge, for this ain't going to wait long. If we can't stop it, we can see a mighty good fight, anyhow."

They set out together. The courthouse in Columbus stands in the middle of a big square, with a street on each of its four sides. On one corner of the square was gathered the Reece faction and near another corner the Townsend crowd had assembled. Both were fully armed. They were making no active demonstratons as yet, but were evidently organizing for business. It was a still, sunny day, and both crowds were in easy calling distance of the courthouse.

"Now, judge," said Captain Bill, when they had arrived at the courthouse, "who is your sheriff and where is he?"

"His name is Burford, J. C. Burford, and he's over there with the Townsend crowd. He belongs to that faction."

Captain Bill stepped to the window and called, in the strong, official manner of a witness summons: "J. C. Burford," repeated three times.

There was a movement in the Townsend crowd and a man crossed over and ascended the courthouse stair. McDonald introduced himself, as the sheriff entered, and added:

"Now, Burford, why don't you stop this row? Looks as if we're going to have a killing match here, right away."

"Captain, I can't. I'm powerless to do anything with these men. If I undertake to disarm them it will start a fight that nobody can stop."

"Well, Burford, if you'll do as I tell you, I'll stop it in 30 minutes or I'll resign my job as Ranger."

"Then call your crowd over here. I want to talk to them."

Sheriff Burford stepped to the window and signed to the Townsend faction. They trooped over and ascended the courthouse stair, carrying their guns.

"Mr. Burford," said McDonald, "which are your regular deputies here?"

The sheriff indicated his three deputy officers. Captain Bill motioned them to stand apart from the others.

"Now, sheriff," he said, "disarm the rest of these men."

The officer looked a little bewildered.

"I don't know about—" he began.

"Didn't you agree to do what I ordered?" Then, to Kennon—"Didn't he, judge?"

The judge nodded. The sheriff still hesitated.

"Never mind," said McDonald, "I'll do it myself. Here, boys," he went on in his mild, friendly drawl, "come in here and stack your guns in this wardrobe. It's a good safe place for them. They won't be likely to go off and hurt anybody in there."

What was it about the manner of the man that made men obey? Those aroused, bloodthirsty Texans, full of an old, deep hatred and the spirit of revenge, marched in and put away their guns at his direction, with scarcely a word of dissent.

He went out of the courthouse and crossed the street to where the Reece crowd was gathered. He carried his Winchester and the faction watched him curiously as he approached.

"I guess you boys are going to war, ain't you?" he said, cheerfully, as he came nearer.

Nobody replied and Captain Bill came up close.

"Boys," he said, "your guns are all right up till now, but the governor has sent me down here to stop this trouble and I want you-all to help me."

"How can we help you?" asked one of the Reece faction.

[illegible] now—by giving up your guns. Then by going quietly home."

There was a little murmur of dissent, and one big, husky fellow said:

"Well, you'll play hell getting my gun!"

In less than an instant a Winchester was under his nose and Captain Bill was crisply saying:

"I will, hey? Well, I'll just put you in jail, anyway, to show you how easy it is to do that."

The big fellow gave a great jump and nearly fell over with surprise and fright. His gun dropped as if it had been hot. The leader of the Reece faction spoke up quickly:

"Boys' he is right," he said. "The gov'nor sent him and he's obeying orders. He has no interest in one side or the other."

McDonald marched the Reeces over to a store nearby, where they laid down their guns and the clerk was ordered to take charge of them. The big man under arrest promised all manner of things if Captain Bill would let him go. He was set free, with a warning. Peace now seemed to be restored and in the general gratitude of the community refreshments and invitations were tendered to Captain Bill from both sides. He decided; however, to remain on duty during the rest of the day and night. His two men arrived next morning, but everything was still quiet and there appeared no sign of a renewal of hostilities. The Reece-Townsend trouble, for the time, at least, was over.

Captain McDonald was still at Columbus when he received a telegram ordering him to report at once to Assistant Attorney General Morris and the local officials at Athens, Henderson county, Texas, for the purpose of investigating the lynching of three respectable citizens—a father and two sons, named Humphrey—in a timbered tract between Trinity river and Cedar Creek, known as the Trans-cedar bottoms.

The Humphreys were honest, sturdy men—fearless and open in their dealings. They were a menace to a gang who made moonshine whisky, stole whatever they could lay hands on and would swear a man's life away for a lean hog. It was necessary for the welfare of the neighborhood that the Humphreys be disposed of, and they were taken by a mob one night and hanged—three of them to one tree—they having been placed upon horses and the horses driven from under them. Then, when the ropes had proven too long and the feet of one of the three Humphreys had touched the ground, the mob had bent back the legs of the victims at the knee and tied the feet upward to the hands, so that the Humphreys might swing clear.

Bill McDonald knew something of the Trans-cedar country and the character of its settlement, for he had passed his youth and his early manhood at Henderson and at Mineola, both within 75 miles of that very district. He set out by first train and arriving at Athens he learned the details of the ghastly crime which already, through the telegraphed reports, had stirred the entire state. He learned that the lynching had taken place about 25 miles from Athens, near a little postoffice named Aley, and he hurried to that place without delay, taking with him one Guy Green, an Athens lawyer, familiar with the neighborhood. With Green, the Rangers went straight to the scene of the murder and made such examination of the tracks and various clues as remained. Two days had passed since the crime and many of the signs had been obliterated. Still there was enough for a man with the faculties of Captain Bill. He identified no less than four trails—one, as he decided, made by five horses, another by three, a third by two, and a fourth the track of a single horse. The trails wound in and out, crossed and recrossed, and were evidently made with the idea of balking pursuit. Captain McDonald did not consider them especially difficult, and having satisfied himself that they could be followed, he went on to Aley, for it was near nightfall.

At Aley he joined Assistant Attorney General Ned Morris, District Attorney Jerry Cook and others who had come out from Athens to aid the investigation.

He discussed the case with the officials and learned that one Joe Wilkerson was suspected as having been connected with the murder, it being well known that Wilkerson had pursued the Humphreys and bemeaned them, finally accusing them of stealing hogs, and swearing to some meat which the Humphreys had earned by digging wells. In the evidence [illegible] that the Wilkerson hogs [illegible] sold, and that he had thus attempted to evade the consequences of this illegal act by saddling the Humphreys with a still heavier crime. The Humphreys had been cleared, but Wilkerson had never ceased to vilify them. Later one of the Humphrey boys, George, had been set upon by some of the Wilkerson crowd and in defending himself had killed, with a knife, one of his assailants. The courts—there were honest courts in Athens—had cleared him, but in the Trans-cedar tribunal he had been doomed. These facts constituted about all the foundation of known motive upon which McDonald would have to build his evidence. It was while he was discussing these things with the attorney on the night of his arrival that a man rode up to the gate just outside and called his name.

Captain Bill rose, but the others protested, declaring that it might be a plot to shoot him in the dark. However, he went, six-shooter in hand, and sticking it in the face of the caller, demanded his business. The man protested that he meant no harm, but had come from one Buck Holley, who lived two miles down the road, and said he knew Captain McDonald and wanted to see him. The Ranger captain reflected a minute.

"I don't know any Buck Holley," he said. "I knew a scoundrel by the name of Bill Holley some years ago up in the Panhandle and if that is who it is I don't want to see him. I judge you fellows have got a gang down the road there to shoot me from ambush. Who are you, anyway?"

The man said his name was Monasco; that he was staying at Holley's and that he had a brother named Bill Monasco, in Amarillo.

"I know Bill Monasco," McDonald said, "and he has a brother that was sent to the penitentiary. Is that you?"

The visitor acknowledged that he was the man—that he had been recently released.

"Well," said McDonald, "that's about the kind of a crowd I would expect to find Bill Holley running with; and you can tell this Buck Holley, as you call him, that I suspect him of being connected with this mob and that I used to make him stand hitched in the Panhandle, and that I'm going to do the same here."

Monasco said "Good night," and Captain McDonald never saw him again. Somewhat later, when he met Bill Holley, he said:

"Look here, Bill, I'm afraid your partner, Monasco, didn't tell you the message I sent the night I came. I said I didn't know Buck Holley, but that I knew a sorry, bulldozing scoundrel by the name of Bill Holley, and that I supposed he was down the road there to take a shot at me from ambush. You weren't in this lynching mob, I reckon, but they're your friends, and you'd help 'em if you could. Now, Bill, you've been courting a funeral a good while, and if you try any of your nonsense here, you'll win out."

The Ranger captain was out early the morning after his arrival in Aley, and on the trail. The tracks of the five horses were followed to the houses of Joe Wilkerson and his son Brooks and to the homes of John and Arthur Greenhaw. In Joe Wilkerson's lot he found a part of a well-rope, the remainder of which had been cut away. It matched precisely with the rope used to hang the Humphreys—the freshly cut ends being the same on both. The Wilkersons and one of the Greenhaws were taken into custody forthwith and other arrests followed as the criminals were tracked home.

The testimony brought out the facts that the Humphreys had known of an illicit still run by two men—one Polk Weeks and a man named Johns. Also that they had known of John Greenhaw stealing cattle and hogs, and that John Greenhaw had once drawn a gun on the elder Humphrey, who had promptly taken it away from him, instead of killing him with it and rendering the community a service. These things, added to the other provocations already named, had made the Humphreys sufficiently unpopular in a neighborhood like the Trans-cedar bottoms to warrant their being hung to a limb, trussed up to swing clear of the ground.

Guilty knowledge of the crime actually killed a man named Eli Sparks, whose conscience tortured him day and night to the point of giving testimony, yet whose fears upon the witness stand caused him to withhold the truth. He was a large, red-faced man, evidently greatly excited when questioned and concealing more than he told. Soon after his first examination he met Captain McDonald and offered to testify again, saying that he had been too frightened to tell the truth the first time, but thought he could do better now. The Ranger captain scrutinized him keenly and made the prophecy that Eli Sparks would not live 30 days, unless he got rid of the load on his conscience. He died in just half that time; not, however, until he had fully confessed.

The efforts of the men believed to be concerned as principals in the crime, to establish their innocence were sometimes wary, sometimes crudely absurd and always fruitless. The mesh of fact that was weaving and linking itself about them became daily more tightly woven, more impossible to tear away. Knowing themselves closely watched, they dared not attempt flight. To do so would be to confess guilt and capture would be well-nigh certain. Like Ahab, having compassed the death of a neighbor, they "lay in sackcloth and went softly." Finally it came to pass that three of these "children of Belial," turned state's evidence—that is, they confessed fully, sacrificing their comrades, under the law, to save themselves. Eleven men, including these three, were brought to trial.

In the final trial John and Arthur Greenhaw and Polk Weeks, who were not only murderers but cowardly traitors, were given their freedom in exchange for their evidence that sent their eight associates to the penitentiary for life.

Polk Weeks, in giving his evidence, appeared much disturbed, but confessed how he had climbed the tree and tied the ropes, and tied them too long, making it necessary for the legs of the Humphreys to be bent upward, to clear the ground. John Greenhaw corroborated this, but grinned as he told it, remembering how amusing it had been. He did not live to enjoy his freedom, for he was shot dead soon after his liberation, by Willie Humphrey, son of one of the younger Humphreys, and no punishment followed the righteous [illegible]

BENDER ON WARPATH IN HITLESS RUNLESS GAME

INDIAN TWIRLER SCALPS THE CLEVELAND PLAYERS—OTHER NO HIT, NO RUN MEN.

WITH a warwhoop that could be heard all over the American league stamping grounds and echoed through the camps of the National league warriors, "Big Chief" Bender of the Philadelphia Athletics unsheathed his tomahawk and scalping knife a few days ago and before he was through with his awful massacre the Cleveland Naps were tortured and slain.

All but one of the Naps died three times under the tomahawk. Bender tied them all securely to the stake except Turner, who managed to slip the buckskin thongs and get to first base. Then when he tried to escape Renegades Thomas and Collins of Connie Mack's band captured him and added him to the list of dead.

It was a hitless, runless game pitched by Bender, who is some kind of an Indian. Whether a Sioux, Comanche, Apache, Cherokee or of some other tribe, the Cleveland players agree that Bender fits into the classification that "only a dead Indian is a good Indian."

"BIG CHIEF" BENDER.

It was awful, say the war correspondents, to see such mighty scouts as Lajoie, Flick, Turner et al., step up to the plate with war club in hand and try to hit the ball as it sped with the swiftness of an arrow into the catcher's mitt.

Bender has pitched some wonderful games before, but this is his first no-hit-no-run achievement. Not long ago Addie Joss, a long, lanky paleface on the Cleveland team, shut the Chicago Sox out without a hit or run and there is joy in the camp of Comiskey's braves over the slaughter of the band led by "Deacon" McGuire. It was the second hitless, runless game in the American league this season and is taken as an Indian sign—not the tobacco store kind—that there is going to be some pitching in the junior organization of big league circles this year.

The first no-hit-no-run game was pitched May 29, 1875, by Mann of Princeton against Yale. The pitchers who have accomplished the feat of permitting no hits by their opponents and the teams with which they played are:

Mann, Princeton; Bordon, Boston; Devlin, Chicago; Richmond, Worcester, 3; Galvin, St. Louis, 4; Bradley, St. Louis; Welch, Troy; Lynch, Washington; Keefe, Albany; Ward, Providence; Corcoran, Boston, 3; Mullane, Louisville; Radbourne, Providence; Daly, Cleveland; Clarkson, Chicago; Ferguson, Philadelphia; Atkinson, Philadelphia; Terry, Brooklyn; Kilroy, Baltimore; Van Haltren, New York; Porter, Kansas City; Seward, Philadelphia; Weyhing, Philadelphia; King, Chicago; Titcomb, Rochester; Lovett, Brooklyn; Rusie, New York; Stivetts, Boston; Sanders, Louisville; Jones, Cincinnati; Hawke, Baltimore; Young, Cleveland, 2; Breitenstein, Cincinnati; Hughes, Baltimore, 2; Donahue, Philadelphia; Thornton, Chicago; Phillippi, Louisville; Willis, Boston, 2; Hahn, Cincinnati; Matthewson, New York, 2; Dowling, Cleveland; Callahan, Chicago; Fraser, Philadelphia; Henley, Philadelphia; Dineen, Boston; Smith, Chicago; Lush, Philadelphia, 2; McLean, Rochester; Eason, Brooklyn; Swan, Kansas City; Moriarty, Newark; Pfeffer, Boston; Maddox, Pittsburg; West, Toledo; Stovall, Louisville; Brandon, Kansas City; Curtis, Milwaukee; Wood, Kansas City; Wiltse, New York, 10 innings; Upp, Columbus; Marquard, Indianapolis; Rucker, Brooklyn; Rhoades, Cleveland; Joss, Cleveland, 2; Hall, St. Paul, and Bender, Philadelphia.

Hall of St. Paul is allowed a no-hit game because it was in the tenth inning that one of the Louisville batsmen got a single and the Colonels won one to nothing.

Catcher Pat Moran has been sold to the Phillies by the Chicago Cubs. Chicago got him from Boston in the O'Neill-Pfeffer trade.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Snake Routs Woman From Her "Home"

NEW YORK.—Say, if you were a lady wearing a chantecler hat with a horned owl upon it and when you woke up and found a common or garden snake in your lap the horned owl failed to make good by snatching the reptile and flying away with it, what would you do? Wouldn't you give that chantecler the hook? Mary Maloney did, anyway.

Mary Maloney, Battery park's leading settee holder, had just such an experience one day. Mary arrived in Battery Park after closing her apartments on Blackwell's island for the summer. Blackwell's is all very well during the major part of the year, but the really elite make it a point of beating it away with the first hot days, and when it comes to beating it away Mary is in the van.

Immediately on reaching Battery park Mary opened her bungalow, which same is the first bench to the left as you come out of the aquarium. From the slats of her bungalow Mary has a superb view of the harbor, including the Statue of Liberty. The free baths are in the immediate vicinity. Splendid fishing is to be found in the aquarium, and tea is served at five o'clock every afternoon at the harbor squad close by.

Mary certainly has one of the finest spots in Battery park. Other summerers there have cast envious eyes on that bench of hers, but Mary is muscular and so proficient in the gentle art of boxing that to aproach her bench with a view of sitting down upon a small portion of it is about as safe as lounging near an old-fashioned windmill on a breezy day.

Accordingly Mary was inhabiting her bench around noon, indulging in a siesta. Dreamily she opened her eyes and as she awoke refreshed by the cool breeze from off the bay she felt something in contact with her arm. Instantly she sat up and took notice. There was a snake wrapped like a bracelet about her fair wrist.

Well, everybody said afterward that his first thought was how maybe the siren on the fireboat New Yorker had broken its valve. Then it was seen that no fireboat could let out a screech so shrill, and all the settee holders, rising up in alarm, flocked to see what was the matter with Mary.

"Cop" Thought It Was Raining "Kids"

HEVINGS! IT'S RAININ' BABIES

NEW YORK.—That he is as proficient in catching babies who fall from high windows as burglars, who operate on his beat, was proved recently by Policeman John J. Buckley of the Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, station.

Buckley made the neatest recovery of little "Willie" Brown, who was enticed over the edge of a third story fire escape, by the melodies of a street piano, that has ever been known. This follows another great catch made by Buckley two months ago, when a burglar tried to spoil his fielding average.

Mrs. Agnes Brown, "Willie's" mother, was engaged in another part of her flat at 444 Metropolitan avenue, and did not see her son crawl out on to the fire escape. When she came into the room a minute later, however, she saw him totter and, before she could reach him, fall over the rail.

Her shrieks aroused Policeman Buckley, who was standing in the street below idly twirling his club and watching the children dance to the lively music of a piano. His eye took in the situation in a second. He saw a white bundle descending rapidly. The cessation of the music made the scene almost theatrical. Buckley caught "Willie" in his arms as in a cradle, much to "Willie's" surprise. The baby received a scratch from one of Buckley's brass buttons, but he was otherwise uninjured. He hugged the policeman and laughed just as though it was all in the game.

Mrs. Brown ran down from the third floor and rushed out of the doorway prepared for a tragic spectacle. When she observed her baby on the policeman's shoulder she nearly fainted from joy.

Buckley was heartily complimented by Captain Dooley of the Bedford avenue station, who was informed of the policeman's catch by several eye witnesses, some of whom are still wondering whether they should call "Willie" "out" or call him "safe."

Girls to Keep the Boys From Smoking

I DON'T SPEAK TO CIGARETTE SMOKERS ANY MORE

KANSAS CITY, MO.—"Cigarette smoking is just cooking the brains of the majority of our high school boys," said Prof. E. D. Phillips, principal of the Manual Training high school. "I believe 75 per cent. of the boys of high school age in the city smoke—either pipes or cigarettes. And it shows in their school work.

"The only remedy for this condition among the high school boys lies with the girls. Every normal young man wants to please the girls. If the girls who now permit young men to smoke in their presence would tell the offenders in a pleasant way that it was offensive to them, nine boys out of ten would throw away the cigarette.

"Girls have a powerful influence for good over the boys if they choose to use their influence in that direction. The high school girls of Kansas City could do much to stop smoking among high school boys.

"We can always tell the ones who smoke. They become stupid, irresponsible and almost abnormal after they have persisted in the habit until they become thoroughly saturated with nicotine. Few of the chronic smokers graduate.

"Most of these boys contract the cigarette habit because they think it fashionable. It is a sort of wrinkle just the same as creasing the trousers till they will cut a lemon."

"Kiss Not" Buttons, Style for Girls

YOU'RE FOOLISH TO WEAR THAT THING
KISS NOT

CHICAGO.—Kissing is going out of style.

Don't lose your head or your temper if the next time you bid your sweetheart a fond farewell and carefully and gently attempt to implant a loving smack on her ruby lips, instead of yielding with apparent reluctance she proudly displays a glaring button with the words "Kiss Not" emblazoned thereon.

It merely means that she has become a member of the World's Health organization and has signed the following pledge:

"In order to encourage good health and lessen the spread of consumption, I desire to join the World's Health organization, and hereby pledge myself to discourage the custom of kissing on the lips whenever it is in my power."

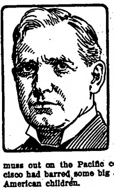
"Why not stop kissing?" is the question asked in a circular issued by this latest of health fad organizations. "It is a time-honored custom and one person cannot stop it. It is only in unity that sufficient strength can be gained to convince the civilized world that kissing is pernicious and unhealthful."

The rumor that a campaign was to be instituted in the public schools of Chicago to enroll pupils and teachers in the new organization was met with a denial by Superintendent Ella Flagg Young.

"I think more harm is done by calling children's attention to disease than can be offset by the new ideas advanced about kissing," she said. "As to the merits of the scheme to stop the practise of kissing, I cannot say. I am not a doctor. Anyway, I have heard nothing whatever about the plan to introduce the pledges in the schools."

WHO'S WHO—AND WHY

GOVERNOR OF CALIFORNIA



Sport lovers throughout the country are for James Norris Gillett, governor of California, especially those who look with favor upon the art of self-defense. The governor has said that he sees no reason to prevent the fight for the world's championship between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson which has been scheduled for July 4 in California, hence the sports are for him.

"As long as they keep within the law, and I believe they intend to do so, I shall not interfere with the bout, no matter what the church people may urge," said the governor a few days ago. It took some nerve for a governor to say a thing like that, but Governor Gillett has shown before that he has plenty of nerve when it comes to deciding a state question.

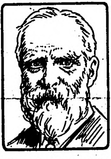
Little more than a year ago there was quite a muss out on the Pacific coast because the school authorities of San Francisco had barred some big Japanese boys from the schools attended by small American children.

Japan's ambassador reported the matter to his country and the affair reached Washington through diplomatic channels. The California legislature was in session and a bill was introduced which would have kept Japanese and Chinese children out of the schools. Some prominent members of the legislature were behind the measure and it looked for a while as if California might do something that would bring on a war with Japan.

Colonel Roosevelt was president and he got busy with Governor Gillett. The wires were kept hot for a few days and the governor did everything in his power to carry out the wishes of President Roosevelt. He was so successful that after it was all over Roosevelt wrote him a letter commending him for his work.

Governor Gillett was born in Viroqua, Wis., and educated in the schools of Sparta, in that state. He was admitted to the bar in 1881, was a state senator of California two years and served two terms in congress from the first California district.

ENVOY WHO WANTS TO RETIRE



Right Hon. James Bryce, O. M., ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary from Great Britain, according to a report received from London a few days ago has asked to be relieved from duty in Washington. The death of King Edward is said to have had a crushing effect on the ambassador and he fears he may not be able to stand the strain of work under the new regime.

Since Ambassador Bryce has been in this country he has made many friends. Few men are better fitted for such an important position. His recent visit to Kansas City gave an indication of the care he has always taken to be careful of what he has to say of affairs in this country.

When a newspaper reporter was introduced to the envoy, Mr. Bryce remarked pleasantly:

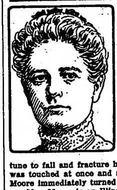
"An ambassador or a diplomat never talks to a newspaper reporter without cause for regret. Not that it is any fault of the reporter or the newspaper he represents, but that the diplomat should have talked at all."

The ambassador was on his way to Lawrence to address the students of the University of Kansas. He delivered the speech, which had been prepared with the greatest care, and there was nothing in it that could be construed as any breach of diplomatic etiquette.

After it was all over Lawrence reporters attempted to get Mr. Bryce to make some comment on the university. They wanted to know what he thought of it and how it compared with British universities.

Did Mr. Bryce make such comparisons? Hardly. To each and every question his only reply was, "It is very interesting."

HEADS WOMEN'S FEDERATION

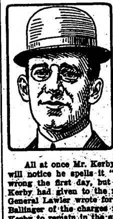


Mrs. Phillip N. Moore of St. Louis has been reelected president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. It has been the case of most women's organizations to consider one term enough for a president. Little jealousies have arisen in their clubs that led to bitter quarrels and a change of administration, but the ability and charm of Mrs. Moore have carried her past such things and she won with flying colors.

She had opposition, it is true, but in this great free republic it is the right of any citizen to run for president of the United States if he so wishes, consequently there was nothing to prevent any member of the federation seeking the presidency. This opposition dwindled away to almost nothing, when Mrs. Moore, a few days before the election at the convention in Cincinnati had the misfortune to fall and fracture her ankle. The womanly heart of all the delegates was touched at once and some of those who might have voted against Mrs. Moore immediately turned to her banner and cast their ballots for her.

Mrs. Moore is an Illinois woman. Her maiden name was Eva Perry and she lived in Rockford in 1897, when she married Mr. Moore, a consulting geologist and mining engineer, who has accumulated a large fortune through his connection with some western mines.

IN THE TAFT ANANIAS CLUB



Frederick M. Kerby enjoys the distinction of being the first member of the Taft Ananias club. When Theodore Roosevelt was president he kept adding to the membership of his club until the people forgot to count. He had all kinds of persons as members, railroad presidents, college heads, nature fakers, editors and some members of congress. There were others, but this is enough.

Kerby might have worked on and on for years as a stenographer in Washington without anybody outside of his own circle of friends knowing of his existence, had it not been for the Pinchot-Ballinger fight. Uncle Sam has several thousand stenographers working for him in Washington and Kerby hadn't done anything to distinguish himself until along came the said fight.

All at once Mr. Kerby got his name into the papers in black type. You will notice he spells it "Kerby," not "Kirby." Some of the papers got it wrong the first day, but they corrected it the next. Of course after Mr. Kerby had given to the newspapers the statement that Assistant Attorney General Lawler wrote for President Taft the letter which cleared Secretary Ballinger of the charges made by Glavis there wasn't much chance for Mr. Kerby to remain in the employ of your Uncle Samuel. The president came out and said it wasn't true, thus putting Mr. Kerby in the Ananias club.

Then Mr. Ballinger wrote a letter discharging Kerby and accusing him of treachery. Kerby replied that Ballinger hadn't shown himself a judge of ethics.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

"Bat" Nelson and "Uncle Joe" in Bout

WASHINGTON.—Battling Nelson, ex-lightweight champion of the world, and "Uncle Joe" Cannon, who is something of a scrapper himself, sparred a round in the speaker's private office recently. It wasn't such a tame go at that, although largely conversational.

Nelson and his manager appeared before the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce to oppose the bill introduced by Representative Walter I. Smith of Iowa to prohibit the exhibition of moving pictures of prize fights and the publication by newspapers of the details of pugilistic encounters. After Nelson had spoken his piece he left the committee room and was hurrying down the corridor toward the exit when Representative Wagner of Pennsylvania came chasing after him.

"Hey, Nelson," he cried, "the speaker wants to see you."

"You're on," said Nelson, and he made tracks for the speaker's office. He got a warm greeting. Uncle Joe shook his hands, felt his biceps and slapped him on the back. The examination was returned with interest.

"Say," said Nelson to Mr. Cannon, as he ran his hands over the speaker's arms and shoulders and sized up his height, "I thought you were a big man, but you're only a little fellow."

Some of the group surrounding the two informed the fighter that the speaker took his daily exercise and always kept himself fit.

"I knew he was there on the training," replied Nelson; "you can't fool me about telling when a boy is in shape."

"Uncle Joe" grinned and put up his hands in approved style. He made a few swift passes at the "Battler."

"Philadelphia Jack O'Brien showed me how to do this," he said as Nelson backed away laughingly.

"If you had begun boxing a few years ago, Mr. Cannon," said Nelson, "you would have made a better boxer than a speaker—and you certainly are some speaker."

"Why," cried Uncle Joe, "that's what I call a mighty pretty compliment."

Stood High as a Third Class Fiddler

THIS story has been floating around the house in Washington. Nobody offers to father it:

There was once a fiddler who was very precise in his statements. He wasn't much of a fiddler, and he knew it. It was not in his nature to claim talent which he did not possess. One night there was a dance. The committee couldn't get the regular music. So they appealed to this fiddler. He said he sure would play for them.

"Are you a first-class fiddler?" they asked him.

"No," he admitted.

"Are you a second-class fiddler?"

"Well, no, I'm not even a second-class fiddler."

"Well, for gracious sakes, what are you, then? Are you a fiddler at all?"

"I'm not a first-class fiddler," said the honest musician. "I'm not a second-class fiddler even. But I stand darned high in the third class!"

They took him on.

Walter Evans, correspondent of the Kansas City Star, knows probably more about Kansas politics than any man alive. He thinks Kansas is one of the greatest states in the Union.

"Speaking of fiddling," he said, "I knew four brothers once that went to Kansas and took up four adjacent quarter sections. Each built a mud house on a corner of each section, so that their homes were close together. Then they proceeded to plant all four sections with wheat. They didn't get a grain that year, because of the drouth.

"They were up against it hard when winter came. So two of the brothers went to Mexico and worked in the mines. The other two stayed behind. the miners sent them money to live on. Next spring the two brothers remaining again sowed wheat. They had a bumper crop, and the miners came home. Wheat was 'way up then, and the brothers made a barrel of money. Now they own land in Kansas till you can't rest. They don't live in mud houses any more.

"Talk about fiddling; one of these brothers, even after the bumper crop, would ride to a dance at night, play till morning and then ride home and go to work. He got a dollar and a half for his playing. He didn't stand very high in the third class, either."

Human in Glass Cage to Test Foods

I COULD DO THIS ALL MY LIFE

TO DETERMINE whether roast beef produces more energy in the human body than cabbage, whether baked beans in this respect surpass potatoes, and so on through a long list of foods, the department of agriculture is conducting a series of novel experiments in Washington. The instrumentality being employed is a machine known as a calorimeter and a human being who submits to the "torture" of being fed and sitting in a glass cage while the food energy is recorded.

Around the inside of the calorimeter, which is a glass, air-tight compartment about the size of a small steamer stateroom, runs a system of pipes filled with cold water. The temperature of the water is carefully noted, the heat generated by the body in the process of assimilating the food causing the water to become warmer.

Only one kind of food is given to the subject at a time. One experiment requires several hours, according to the time required to digest the food.

The experiments so far have been to determine the relative heat-producing energy of fatty and starchy foods. Several months will be spent in making the tests.

Longworth Disapproves of Imitations

MIMIC ME AGIN WILL YE?
OW! OUCH WOW!!

REPRESENTATIVE LONGWORTH is chairman of the committee which is investigating the Merchant Marine league of Cleveland, and the foreign shipping trust, when Olcott, the regular chairman, is absent. Longworth was in the chair recently and James L. Uhl of New York was the witness. Uhl was telling of an attempt he had made to trace a certain letter to its source. He had to visit foreign steamship agents. He gave imitations on the stand of how these agents talked. Longworth's face began to flush, because Longworth doesn't like exhibitions of this sort.

"Oh," Longworth murmured, "I think we have had enough of that."

The murmur was loud enough to reach the witness.

"I'll apologize," he said. "But when I was a boy I had a faculty for giving imitations, and my father was never able to break me of the habit."

Even Longworth smiled at the naivette of this reply.

Since the repeated victories in the by-elections to fill congressional vacancies Champ Clark has been the recipient of a flood of congratulatory letters and telegrams. The night the news of the election of James S. Havens was received Champ got the following: "Congratulations. Democratic victory on the way. Next year Speaker—president 1912. Hurrah for Champ Clark."

"I am quoting my old friend Tom Reed in answering them," said Clark. "Back in '96 some one wrote Reed to ask if he would run for the presidency that year:

"'Well,' answered Reed, 'they might go further and fare worse, and I think they will.'"

ADVANTAGES OF WINTER.

An old-fashioned winter has its advantages and disadvantages. If these were to be enumerated in parallel columns it is probable that the advantages would lead by a large majority. In a winter like the past one the ground is usually frozen to the depth of a few inches in November and thereafter the snowfall keeps a blanket over the earth which prevents the frost from creeping downward inch by inch until it reaches a depth of four or five feet. It keeps all plant life at the surface of the soil in a perfectly dormant state, but does not completely suspend the function of deep lying roots. A continual covering of ice and snow in the cities keeps the litter and filth of the street from being dried and finely powdered and carried about by every passing breeze. This is one of the most common sources of colds, influenza, grip, infections of the nose, and its labyrinthine sinuses and the throat, middle ear and respiratory passages in general. Such affections have been less general this year than in several preceding seasons. Steady cold, although very trying to the old and to people of subnormal vital energies, is in reality much better than alternating warm spells and zero pinches, for the latter conditions invite indiscretions in dress.

At this season of the year householders' thoughts turn naturally to lawns and back yards, and there is a general desire to have clean and ornamental surroundings. Unfortunately, in many instances the desire is not strong enough to produce results. A man who beautifies his front lawn is a public benefactor. He no doubt gets some satisfaction out of his effort and expense, but every passer enjoys the result of his effort, and the whole neighborhood is benefited. When the effort extends to the back yard the number of individuals benefited is not so great, but perhaps the enjoyment by the smaller number is more intense. No one enjoys a dirty back yard, and every person who sees one from a window forms an unfavorable opinion of the householder who permits an unsightly accumulation of misplaced matter in his environment. A clean or ornate front lawn is more common than a clean and ornate back yard, yet nothing will better repay effort than a trim back yard. It can be made to produce grass and flowers instead of tin cans, ash heaps and useless wood, and the removal of household debris is a sanitary precaution as well as an esthetic demonstration.

The wisdom of maintaining a derelict patrol along the Atlantic coast, and of sending a derelict destroyer after wrecks that are reported at sea, is indorsed by the fact that the revenue cutter Gresham has just towed into Provincetown, Mass., that capsized hull of a vessel that has been drifting about the seas for the past two years, a menace to sailing ships laden with valuable cargoes, and to steamers with heavy passenger lists.

A Chicago magistrate thinks that drunken men should not be arrested, but taken instead by policemen to their homes. Perhaps the next step in this way of doing things will be to give autoists the right to exact damages from people they run down, on the ground of the trouble and loss of time which such collisions with pedestrians entail.

Professor Laughlin proposes to establish a new aristocracy of the simple life. Every man can start an aristocracy of that sort on his own account, but the trouble is that it is caviar to the general, because in the nature of the case it cannot support a press agent.

King Albert, the new sovereign of the Belgians, is a progressive monarch. One of the ways in which this is indicated is his approval of the plan for assuring reforms in the Congo region and opening the door for commerce in that direction.

It's a good scheme to make each head of a household his own census maker, because the probabilities are that he can put down an approximate estimate of his wife's age without creating a painful scene.

Music is reported to make the humble hen lay more prolifically. A little investigation into the relative merits of Waguer or ragtime in the entertainment of the fowl might be of value.

Four poor children, the oldest 11 years of age, were arrested in Cleveland for stealing a doll from a store. Its owner must have thought a lot of that doll.

Two New York boys also have succeeded in turning double back somersaults. Surely the uplift of the stage is at hand!

Kaiser Wilhelm's sixth son is to join the navy. Wilhelm ought to have saved one for the airship fleet.

ROOSEVELT GIVES ROMANES LECTURE

Former President of United States at Oxford

LORD CURZON IN THE CHAIR

Sheldonian Theater Crowded With Distinguished People When American Talks on "Biological Analogies in History."

Oxford, England.—The Romanes lecture by Theodore Roosevelt, which was to have been delivered on May 18, but which was postponed on account of the death of King Edward, was given on June 7 by the distinguished American. The Sheldonian theater was filled to its capacity by notable persons and Oxford students and the lecture, which was on "Biological Analogies in History," was well received. Lord Curzon, chancellor of the university, presided.

In seeking to penetrate the causes of the mysteries that surround not only mankind but all life, both in the present and the past, said Mr. Roosevelt, we see strange analogies in the phenomena of life and death, of birth growth and change, between those physical groups of animal life which we designate as species, forms, races and the highly complex and composite entities which rise before our minds when we speak of nations and civilizations. It is this study, he asserted, that has given science its present-day prominence, and the historian of mankind must work in the scientific spirit and use the treasure-houses of science.

To illustrate, the lecturer took several instances of the development of new species and the extinction of species in the history of mammalian life, showing that in some cases the causes can be traced with considerable accuracy, and in other cases we cannot so much as hazard a guess as to why a given change occurred.

Analogies in Human History.

Continuing, Mr. Roosevelt said in part:

Now, as to all of these phenomena in the evolution of species, there are, if not homologies, at least certain analogies, in the history of human societies, in the history of the rise to prominence, of the development and change, of the temporary dominance, and death or transformation, of the groups of varying kind which form races or nations.

As in biology, so in human history, a new form may result from the specialization of a long-existing and hitherto very slowly-changing generalized or nonspecialized form; as, for instance, when a barbaric race from a variety of causes suddenly develops a more complex cultivation and civilization. That is what occurred, for instance, in western Europe during the centuries of the Teutonic and later the Scandinavian ethnic overflows from the north. All the modern countries of western Europe are descended from the states created by these northern invaders. When first created they could be called "new" or "young" states in the sense that part or all of the people composing them were descended from races that hitherto had not been civilized at all, and that therefore for the first time entered on the career of civilized communities. In the southern part of western Europe the new states thus formed consisted in bulk of the inhabitants already in the land under the Roman empire; and it was here that the new kingdoms first took shape. Through a reflex action their influence then extended back into the cold forests from which the invaders had come, and Germany and Scandinavia witnessed the rise of communities with essentially the same civilization as their southern neighbors; though in those communities, unlike the southern communities, there was no infusion of new blood, and in each case the new civilized nation which gradually developed was composed entirely of members of the same race which in the same region had for ages lived the life of a slowly changing barbarism. The same was true of the Slavs and the Slavonized Finns of eastern Europe, when an infiltration of Scandinavian leaders from the north and infiltration of Byzantine culture from the south joined to produce the changes which have gradually, out of the little Slav communities of the forest and the steppe, formed the mighty Russian empire of today.

"New" and "Young" Nations.

Again, the new form may represent merely a splitting off from a long-established, highly developed and specialized nation. In this case the nation is usually spoken of as a "young," and is correctly spoken of as a "new," nation; but the term should always be used with a clear sense of the difference between what is described in such case, and what is described by the same term in speaking of a civilized nation just developed from a barbarism. Carthage and Syracuse were new cities compared with Tyre and Corinth; but the Greek or Phoenician race was in every sense of the word as old in the new city as in the old city. So, nowadays, Victoria or Manitoba is a new community compared with England or Scotland; but the ancestral type of civilization and culture is as old in one case as in the other. I of course do not mean for a moment that great changes are not produced by the mere fact that the old civilized race is suddenly placed in surroundings where it has again to go through the work of taming the wilderness, a work finished many centuries before in the original home of the race; I merely mean that the ancestral history is the same in each case. We can rightly use the phrase "a new people" in speaking of Canadians or Australians, Americans or Afrikanders. But we use it in an entirely different sense from that in which we use it when speaking of such communities as those founded by the northmen and their descendants during that period of astonishing growth which saw the descendants of the Norse sea-thieves conquer and transform Normandy, Sicily, and the British islands; we use it in an entirely different sense from that in which we use it when speaking of the new states that grew up around Warsaw, Kief, Novgorod, and Moscow, as the wild savages of the steppes and the marshy forests struggled haltingly and stumblingly upward to become builders of cities and to form stable governments. The kingdoms of Charlemagne and Alfred were "new," compared with the empire on the Bosphorus; they were also in every way different; their lines of ancestral descent had nothing in common with those of the polyglot realm which paid tribute to the Caesars of Byzantium; their social problems and aftertime history were totally different. This is not true of those "new" nations which spring direct from old nations. Brazil, the Argentine, the United States, are all "new" nations, compared with the nations of Europe; but with whatever changes in detail, their civilization is nevertheless of the general European type, as shown in Portugal, Spain, and England. The differences between these "new" American and these "old" European nations are not as great as those which separate the "new" nations one from another and the "old" nations one from another. There are in each case very real differences between the new and the old nation—differences both for good and for evil; but in each case there is the same ancestral history to reckon with, the same type of civilization, with its attendant benefits and shortcomings; and, after the pioneer stages are passed, the problems to be solved, in spite of superficial differences, are in their essence the same; they are those that confront all civilized peoples, not those that confront peoples struggling from barbarism into civilization.

So, when we speak of the "death" of a tribe, a nation or a civilization, the term may be used for either one or two totally different processes; the analogy with what occurs in biological history being complete. Certain tribes of savages, the Tasmanians, for instance, and various little clans of American Indians, have within the last century or two completely died out; all of the individuals have perished, leaving no descendants, and the blood has disappeared. Certain other tribes of Indians have as tribes disappeared or are now disappearing; but their blood remains, being absorbed into the veins of the white intruders, or of the black men introduced by these white intruders; so that in reality they are merely being transformed into something absolutely different from what they were.

A like wide diversity in fact may be covered in the statement that a civilization has "died out."

Phenomena That Puzzle.

In dealing, not with groups of human beings in simple and primitive relations, but with highly complex, highly specialized, civilized, or semi-civilized societies, there is need of great caution in drawing analogies with what has occurred in the development of the animal world. Yet even in these cases it is curious to see how some of the phenomena in the growth and disappearance of these complex, artificial groups of human beings resemble what has happened in myriads of instances in the history of life on this planet.

Why do great artificial empires, whose citizens are knit by a bond of speech and culture much more than by a bond of blood, show periods of extraordinary growth, and again of sudden or lingering decay? In some cases we can answer readily enough; in other cases we cannot as yet even guess what the proper answer should be. If in any such case the centrifugal forces overcome the centripetal, the nation will of course fly to pieces, and the reason for its failure to become a dominant force is patent to every one. The minute that the spirit which finds its healthy development in local self-government, and in the antidote to the dangers of an extreme centralization, develops into mere particularism, into inability to combine effectively for achievement of a common end, then it is hopeless to expect great results. Poland and certain republics of the western hemisphere are the standard examples of failure of this kind; and the United States would have ranked with them, and its name would have become a byword of derision, if the forces of union had not triumphed in the civil war. So the growth of soft luxury after it has reached a certain point becomes a national danger patent to all. Again, it needs but little of the vision of a seer to foretell what must happen in any community if the average woman ceases to become the mother of a family of healthy children, if the average man loses the will and the power to work up to old age and to fight whenever the need arises. If the homely, commonplace virtues die out, if strength of character vanishes in graceful self-indulgence, if the virile qualities atrophy, then the nation has lost what no material prosperity can offset.

But there are plenty of other phenomena wholly or partially inexplicable. It is easy to see why Rome trended downward when great slave-tilled farms spread over what had once been a countryside of peasant proprietors, when greed and luxury and sensuality ate like acids into the fiber of the upper classes, while the mass of the citizens grew to depend, not upon their own exertions, but upon the state, for their pleasures and their very livelihood. But this does not explain why the forward movement stopped at different times, so far as different matters were concerned; at one time as regards literature, at another time as regards architecture, at another time as regards city building. We cannot even guess why the springs of one kind of energy dried up while there was yet no cessation of another kind.

Holland as an Example.

Take another and smaller instance, that of Holland. For a period covering a little more than the seventeenth century, Holland, like some of the Italian city states at an earlier period, stood on the dangerous heights of greatness beside nations so vastly her superior in territory and population as to make it inevitable that sooner or later she must fall from the glorious and perilous eminence to which she had been raised by her own indomitable soul. Her fall came; it could not have been indefinitely postponed; but it came far quicker than it needed to come, because of shortcomings on her part to which both Great Britain and the United States would be wise to pay heed. Her government was singularly ineffective, the decentralization being such as often to permit the separatist, the particularist, spirit of the provinces to rob the central authority of all efficiency. This was bad enough. But the fatal weakness was that so common in rich, peace-loving societies, where men hate to think of war as possible, and try to justify their own reluctance to face it either by high-sounding moral platitudes or else by a philosophy of short-sighted materialism. The Dutch were very wealthy. They grew to believe that they could hire others to do their fighting for them on land; and on sea, where they did their own fighting, and fought very well, they refused in time of peace to make ready fleets so efficient as either to insure the Dutch against the peace being broken or else to give them the victory when war came. To be opulent and unarmed is to secure ease in the present at the almost certain cost of disaster in the future.

It is therefore easy to see why Holland lost when she did her position among the powers; but it is far more difficult to explain why at the same time there should have come at least a partial loss of position in the world of art and letters. Some spark of divine fire burned itself out in the national soul. As the line of great statesmen, of great warriors, by land and sea, came to an end, so the line of the great Dutch painters ended. The loss of pre-eminence in the schools followed the loss of pre-eminence in camp and in council chamber.

In the little republic of Holland, as in the great empire of Rome, it was not death which came, but transformation. Both Holland and Italy teach us that races that fall may rise again.

Danger of Race Suicide.

There are questions which we of the great civilized nations are ever tempted to ask of the future. Is our time of growth drawing to an end? Are we as nations soon to come under the rule of that great law of death, which is itself but part of the great law of life? None can tell. Forces that we can see and other forces that are hidden or that can but dimly be apprehended are at work all around us, both for good and for evil. The growth in luxury, in love of ease, in taste for vapid and frivolous excitement, is both evident and unhealthy. The most ominous sign is the diminution in the birth-rate, in the rate of natural increase, now to a larger or lesser degree shared by most of the civilized nations of central and western Europe, of America and Australia; a diminution so great that if it continues for the next century at the rate which has obtained for the last 25 years, all the more highly civilized people will be stationary or else have begun to go backward in population, while many of them will have already gone very far backward.

There is much that should give us concern for the future. But there is much also which should give us hope. No man is more apt to be mistaken than the prophet of evil. I believe with all my heart that a great future remains for us; but whether it does or does not, our duty is not altered. However the battle may go, the soldier worthy of the name will with utmost vigor do his alloted task, and bear himself as valiantly in defeat as in victory. Come what will, we belong to peoples who have not yielded to the craven fear of being great. In the ages that have gone by, the great nations, the nations that have expanded and that have played a mighty part in the world, have in the end grown old and weakened and vanished; but so have the nations whose only thought was to avoid all danger, all effort, who would risk nothing, and who therefore gained nothing. In the end the same fate may overwhelm all alike; but the memory of the one type perishes with it while the other leaves its mark deep on the history of all the future of mankind.

A nation that seemingly dies may be born again; and even though in the physical sense it die utterly, it may yet hand down a history of heroic achievement, and for all time to come may profoundly influence the nations that arise in its place by the impress of what it has done. Best of all is it to do our part well, and at the same time to see our blood live young and vital in men and women fit to take up the task as we lay it down; for so shall our seed inherit the earth. But if this, which is best, is denied us, then at least it is ours to remember that if we choose we can be torch-bearers, as our fathers were before us. The torch has been handed on from nation to nation, from civilization to civilization throughout all recorded time, from the dim years before history dawned, down to the blazing splendor of this teeming century of ours. It is dropped from the hand of the coward and the sluggard, of the man wrapped in luxury or love of ease, the man whose soul was eaten away by self-indulgence; it has been kept alight only by those who were mighty of heart and cunning of hand. What they worked at, providing it was worth doing at all, was of no less matter than how they worked, whether in the realm of the mind or the realm of the body. If their work was good, if what they achieved was of substance, then high success was really theirs.

Strength With Morality.

In the first part of this lecture I drew certain analogies between what had occurred to forms of animal life through the procession of the ages on this planet, and what has occurred and is occurring to the great artificial civilizations which have gradually spread over the world's surface during the thousands of years that have elapsed since cities of temples and palaces first rose beside the Nile and the Euphrates, and the harbors of Minoan Crete bristled with the masts of the Aegean craft. But of course the parallel is true only in the roughest and most general way. Moreover, even between the civilizations of today and the civilizations of ancient times there are differences so profound that we must be cautious in drawing any conclusions for the present based on what has happened in the past. While freely admitting all of our follies and weaknesses of today, it is yet mere perversity to refuse to realize the incredible advance that has been made in ethical standards. I do not believe that there is the slightest necessary connection between any weakening of virile force and this advance in the moral standard, this growth of the sense of obligation to one's neighbor and of reluctance to do that neighbor wrong. We need have scant patience with that silly cynicism which insists that kindliness of character only accompanies weakness of character. On the contrary, just as in private life many of the men of strongest character are the very men of loftiest and most exalted morality, so I believe that in national life as the ages go by we shall find that the permanent national types will more and more tend towards those in which, while the intellect stands high, character stands higher; in which rugged strength and courage, rugged capacity to resist wrongful aggression by others, will go hand in hand with a lofty scorn of doing wrong to others. This is the type of Timoleon, of Hampden, of Washington and Lincoln. These were as good men, as disinterested and unselfish men, as ever served a state; and they were also as strong men as ever founded or saved a state. Surely such examples prove that there is nothing Utopian in our effort to combine justice and strength in the same nation. The really high civilizations must themselves supply the antidote to the self-indulgence and love of ease which they tend to produce.

Problems of Modern Nations.

Every modern civilized nation has many and terrible problems to solve within its own borders, problems that arise not merely from juxtaposition of poverty and riches, but especially from the self-consciousness of both poverty and riches. Each nation must deal with these matters in its own fashion, and yet the spirit in which the problem is approached must ever be fundamentally the same. It must be a spirit of broad humanity; of brotherly kindness; of acceptance of responsibility, one for each and each for all; and at the same time a spirit as remote as the poles from every form of weakness and sentimentality. As in war to pardon the coward is to do cruel wrong to the brave man whose life his cowardice jeopardizes, so in civil affairs it is revolting to every principle of justice to give to the lazy, the vicious, or even the feeble and dull-witted, a reward which is really the robbery of what braver, wiser, abler men have earned. The only effective way to help any man is to help him to help himself; and the worst lesson to teach him is that he can be permanently helped at the expense of some one else. True liberty shows itself to best advantage in protecting the rights of others, and especially of minorities. Privilege should not be tolerated because it is to the advantage of a minority, nor yet because it is to the advantage of a majority. No doctrinaire theories of vested rights or freedom of contract can stand in the way of our cutting out abuses from the body politic. Just a little can we afford to follow the doctrinaires of an impossible—and incidentally of a highly undesirable—social revolution which, in destroying individual rights (including property rights) and the family, would destroy the two chief agents in the advance of mankind, and the two chief reasons why either the advance or the preservation of mankind is worth while. It is an evil and a dreadful thing to be callous to sorrow and suffering, and blind to our duty to do all things possible for the betterment of social conditions. But it is an unspeakably foolish thing to strive for this betterment by means so destructive that they would leave no social conditions to better. In dealing with all these social problems, with the intimate relations of the family, with wealth in private use and business use, with labor, with poverty, the one prime necessity is to remember that, though hardness of heart is a great evil, it is no greater an evil than softness of head.

But in addition to these problems the most intimate and important of all which to a larger or less degree affect all the modern nations somewhat alike, we of the great nations that have expanded, that are now in complicated relations with one another and with alien races, have special problems and special duties of our own. You belong to a nation which possesses the greatest empire upon which the sun has ever shone. I belong to a nation which is trying, on a scale hitherto unexampled, to work out the problems of government for, of, and by the people, while at the same time doing the international duty of a great power. But there are certain problems which both of us have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British isles, in his various homes across the seas, and the American, both at home and abroad, are brought into contact with utterly alien peoples, some with a civilization more ancient than our own, others still in, or having but recently arisen from, the barbarism which our people left behind ages ago. The problems that arise are of wellnigh inconceivable difficulty. They cannot be solved by the foolish sentimentality of stay-at-home people, with little patent recipes, and those cut-and-dried theories of the political nursery which have such limited applicability amid the crash of elemental forces. Neither can they be solved by the raw brutality of the men who, whether at home or on the rough frontier of civilization, adopt might as the only standard of right in dealing with other men, and treat alien races only as subjects for exploitation.

No hard and fast rule can be drawn as applying to all alien races, because they differ from one another far more widely than some of them differ from us. But there are one or two rules which must not be forgotten. In the long run, there can be no justification for one race managing or controlling another unless the management and control are exercised in the interest and for the benefit of that other race. This is what our peoples have in the main done, and must continue in the future in even greater degree to do, in India, Egypt, and the Philippines alike. In the next place, as regards every race, everywhere, at home or abroad, we cannot afford to deviate from the great rule of righteousness which bids us treat each man on his worth as a man. He must not be sentimentally favored because he belongs to a given race; he must not be given immunity in wrong-doing, or permitted to cumber the ground, or given other privileges which would be denied to the vicious and unfit among themselves. On the other hand, where he acts in a way which would entitle him to respect and reward if he were of our own stock, he is just as much entitled to that respect and reward if he comes of another stock, even though that other stock produces a much smaller proportion of men of his type than does our own. This has nothing to do with social intermingling, with what is called social equality. It has to do merely with the question of doing to each man and each woman that elementary justice which will permit him or her to gain from life the reward which should always accompany thrift, sobriety, self-control, respect for the rights of others, and hard and intelligent work to a given end. To more than such just treatment no man is entitled, and less than such just treatment no man should receive.

Duty of Nation to Nation.

The other type of duty is the international duty, the duty owed by one nation to another. I hold that the laws of morality which should govern individuals in their dealings one with the other are just as binding concerning nations in their dealings one with the other. The application of the moral law must be different in the two cases, because in one case it has, and in the other it has not, the sanction of a civil law with force behind it. The individual can depend for his rights upon the courts, which themselves derive their force from the police power of the state. The nation can depend upon nothing of the kind; and therefore, as things are now, it is the highest duty of the most advanced and freest peoples to keep themselves in such a state of readiness as to forbid to any barbarism or despotism the hope of arresting the progress of the world by striking down the nations that lead in that progress. It would be foolish indeed to pay heed to the unwise persons who desire disarmament to be begun by the very peoples who, of all others, should not be left helpless before any possible foe. But we must reprobate quite as strongly both the leaders and the peoples who practise, or encourage or condone, aggression and iniquity by the strong at the expense of the weak. We should tolerate lawlessness and wickedness neither by the weak nor by the strong; and both weak and strong we should in return treat with scrupulous fairness. The foreign policy of a great and self-respecting country should be conducted on exactly the same plane of honor, of insistence upon one's own rights and of respect for the rights of others, as when a brave and honorable man is dealing with his fellows. Permit me to support this statement out of my own experience. For nearly eight years I was the head of a great nation and charged especially with the conduct of its foreign policy; and during those years I took no action with reference to any other people on the face of the earth that I would not have felt justified in taking as an individual in dealing with other individuals.

I believe that we of the great civilized nations of today have a right to feel that long careers of achievement lie before our several countries. To each of us is vouchsafed the honorable privilege of doing his part, however small, in that work. Let us strive hardily for success, even if by so doing we risk failure, spurning the poorer souls of small endeavor who know neither failure nor success. Let us hope that our own blood shall continue in the land, that our children and children's children to endless generations shall arise to take our places and play a mighty and dominant part in the world. But whether this be denied or granted by the years we shall not see, let at least the satisfaction be ours that we have carried onward the lighted torch in our own day and generation. If we do this, then, as our eyes close, and we go out into the darkness, and other hands grasp the torch, at least we can say that our part has been borne well and valiantly.

Arms and Legs.

According to the result of many measurements made at the Anthropological laboratory in London, the right arm in human beings is, in a majority of cases, longer than the left arm, while, on the contrary, the left leg is longer than the right leg. Sometimes, however, the relative proportions are exactly reversed, but very seldom does perfect equality exist between the two sides. The tendency of the right arm to exceed the left arm in strength is somewhat greater in men than in women, while equality of strength in the two arms occurs almost twice as frequently with women as with men.

Reasoning of Youthful Mind.

A schoolmistress whose hair was of the blackest hue, was one day giving a lesson on a coal mine to a class in Suffolk, England. To make the lesson interesting as possible she went on to say she had herself been in a coal mine. A little lad put up his hand, and when pointed to said: "Please, teacher, is that what made your hair so black?"

"Papa, sister's a liar!"

"Why, why! Jennie, you mustn't say such things."

Rather Personal.

FEED CHILDREN

On Properly Selected Food. It Pays Big Dividends.

If parents will give just a little intelligent thought to the feeding of their children the difference in the health of the little folks will pay, many times over, for the small trouble.

A mother writes saying: "Our children are all so much better and stronger than they ever were before we made a change in the character of the food. We have quit using potatoes three times a day with coffee and so much meat.

"Now we give the little folks some fruit, either fresh stewed, or canned, some Grape-Nuts with cream, occasionally some soft boiled eggs, and some Postum for breakfast and supper. Then for dinner they have some meat and vegetables.

"It would be hard to realize the change in the children, they have grown so sturdy and strong, and we attribute this change to the food elements that, I understand, exist in Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A short time ago my baby was teething and had a great deal of stomach and bowel trouble. Nothing seemed to agree with him until I tried Grape-Nuts softened and mixed with rich milk, and he improved rapidly and got sturdy and well."

ONE REASON FOR STATUES

Not Altogether Devoid of Common Sense Was Answer Given to Inquisitive Child.

A Washington dentist praised enthusiastically the respect paid to the memory of Horace Wells by the French government. It has erected recently a statue of him in the Place des Etats Unis, in Paris, and the unveiling ceremony in March was attended by distinguished scientists from all over the world.

"Professor Wells," said the dentist, "was born in Hartford in 1815. He was a pioneer in the use of nitrous oxide gas in dental operations to prevent pain, and for his discoveries in anaesthesia he may be regarded as a benefactor to mankind.

"Wells has been dead 50 years, and France is the first—a tardy first—to acknowledge the importance of his discovery, and raise a tribute to his almost forgotten memory. This case reminds me of a conversation between a little boy and his father.

"'Why are statues erected to famous men, father,' said the child.

"'So that they may become known, dear,' was the answer."

Farm School Letter

Don't Kill the Toad.

Prof. Washburn of the Minnesota division of Entomology at University Farm finds toads to be friends of the farmer. They feed entirely upon an incredible number of insects. The federal department of agriculture, investigating the toad, discovers the startling fact that in twenty-four hours the insect food consumed by one toad equals in quantity four times the capacity of its stomach, which is practically filled and emptied four times every twenty-four hours. One hundred fifty-nine stomachs examined by the department showed a content of 19 per cent of ants; 16 per cent of cut worms; 10 per cent of thousand legged worms; 9 per cent caterpillars; 8 per cent of ground beetles; 5 per cent of destructive weavles; 3 per cent of grasshoppers, together with crickets, spiders, sow bugs, potato bugs and a miscellaneous lot of other insects. Protect the toad. Teach the thoughtless boy friendliness to this helpless, harmless, useful animal.

The Pocket Gopher.

Bisulphide of carbon on a piece of burlap or oakum, thrown quickly down a pocket gopher's burrow, preferably when the soil is moist, Prof. Washburn, Minnesota entomologist, says has killed many pocket gophers in his experiment work. He uses half a pint of bisulphide at a burrow. The chemical costs at wholesale is about eight cents a pint. Its gas is very poisonous, heavier than air, penetrates the burrow, and causes death by suffocation. The openings must be completely closed with dirt to prevent air going in. Do not use matches or a light when using bisulphide. It is dangerously explosive. Resort to strychnine has sometimes been had. A little on a piece of potato, pushed far down the hole with a stick so that no scent of the hand is left in the earth, has killed many.

Fight Quack Grass Now.

Get to work now on the small patches of quack grass. Set them apart for special attention during the rest of the summer. Keep the underground stems from being dragged to other parts of the field. If the patches are two large to smother with tar paper dig up the grass, shake out the roots and under-ground stems carefully, and haul them from the field and burn. A five or six-tined fork will be found a valuable tool for this work. If dead the roots and stems may be plowed under to increase fertility. Look the patches over every week to catch any plants that may have been left or that may have developed. These patches may be planted to any cultivated crops. For management of large patches or fields of quack grass see Minnesota Press Bulletin No. 36.

Seed Corn Week, Sept. 19th-24th, 1910.

Are you really interested in having better seed corn for next season? Would you be willing to assist in boosting the reputation of our state along the line of production and particularly along the line of corn? Could you be counted on to co-operate with the extension division by saving your seed corn early this season and urging your neighbors to do the same?

We need to make this "seed corn week" a state-wide movement.

Reports received at the Minnesota Experiment Station at St. Anthony Park from Minnesota Farmers who raise large yields of corn and potatoes show that the cultivation of corn immediately after planting (when it may be done deeply) and kept up as long as possible in the season, gives the best yields and best quality of grain. Cultivate shallow, not more than one to two inches deep, after the roots begin to grow.

The Old Method of Cultivating corn was to go over the field with a drag when the corn was just coming up. This method is no longer recommended by the Minnesota department of agriculture. Modern methods at University Farm, St. Anthony Park, are the use of the cultivator and deep stirring of the earth as soon as planting is over, and shallow cultivation when the roots have started.

Bull Thistles, Common in Pastures, cannot always be killed by mowing. Mowing tends to prevent maturity of seed. Cutting off the thistles just below the surface of the ground, two or three times a year, will effectually eradicate them. Working the ground in rotation of grass, grain and corn is a very sure way of eradicating weeds.

Strawberries.—The Minnesota Experiment Station has had best results by cultivating the strawberries set out in the spring, and by picking off all blossoms that appear during the first year. Fruiting the first season weakens the plants. The Station keeps the runners in the row where they will take root and form new plants.

Kill the weeds in the corn and potatoes. Weeds take up moisture the crops need and prevent the circulation of air thus encouraging the spread of plant diseases. They shade the ground and keep the soil from absorbing heat—an important factor in corn growth.

Spraying of Dandelions.

For the past two years iron sulphate has been used at the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment Station for the eradication of dandelions in lawns. Fairly good success has resulted from these experiments. Although spraying the dandelions does not by any means mean absolute destruction of this pest, it at least kills many of the flowering stalks and keeps hundreds of dandelions from coming to seed. It also kills many of the younger plants. If one were to spray a lawn carefully for an entire season the result would possibly warrant the time and expense connected with the spraying. Iron sulphate at the rate of 1½ pounds to 1 gallon of water is the proper proportion to use on the lawns. The spray should be applied with a sprayer which gives a very fine, mist-like spray. Apply the solution about three days after the lawn is cut, on a day that is bright and warm. The grass will be somewhat blackened but little damage results. Some of the white clover, owing to its broad leaf is somewhat injured. The lawn should be sprayed about once a month. Care should be taken when spraying to keep the solution off of the cement walks as it discolors them.

Cut Worm Destruction.

The State Entomologist, Prof. F. L. Washburn, says that some relief may be had from cut worms by the use of poisoned baits, made and applied as follows: Make a bran mash, sweeten with molasses or brown sugar, and add enough Paris green to make it a decided green color. A big tablespoonful of this placed at intervals among the plants, just at nightfall, will attract the cut worms, and kill a large number. These baits should not be put too close to the plants for fear rain will wash the Paris green against the plants and injure them. Cut worms do not die immediately upon taking this poison, but it is sure death after a few hours. Traps, consisting of pieces of board, placed about the garden, may be used, under which the cut worms will be found in the morning. Some birds prey upon them, and various parasites and predaceous insects attack them. In the case of field crops, where it is possible, frequent cultivation will turn the worms up, enabling birds and other enemies to prey upon them.

Another Less Than a Dollar Dinner.

Four college girls of Miss Shepperd's senior class in domestic science gave the last of the class dinners, of the college year, recently, in the Domestic Science Building, at the Experiment Station, at St. Anthony Park. Six guests were present. Following is the menu: First course—Tomato soup, croutons; second, stuffed heart, potato puff, lima beans, Parker House rolls, mint ice; third, Waldorf salad, pastry sticks; fourth, Rhubarb pie, cream meringue, coffee, cream, sugar. The cost was 99½ cents, or a little over 16 cents for each person. In the college dining hall the meals cost each student at this season of the year 15 cents, but the actual cost of the food, eaten is about 8 cents.

Fodder Corn.—At the Minnesota Experiment Station it is thought that fodder corn may be planted this year up to the 10th or 15th of June. It will yield several more tons per acre than hay. Harrow the field smooth, sow the corn in drills three feet to three feet eight inches apart and the kernels from one to two inches apart in the row. Fodder corn may be harrowed until it is two or three inches high, but harrowing this must not be construed as suggesting the harrowing of field corn. Such harrowing is regarded at the Station as bad practice. Cultivate the fodder corn every week through the growing season.

The Minnesota Experiment Station does not recommend the killing of an animal for the purpose of human food within twenty-four hours after feeding. When an animal is on full feed it is impossible to thoroughly drain the veins. Food in the stomach rapidly decomposes after the animal is killed, and the gases generated often flavor the meat disagreeably. Water, however, may be given up to the time of slaughter. It keeps the temperature normal and helps to wash the effete matter out of the system. A nicely colored carcass results.

The Division of Botany and Plant Pathology has just prepared a novel weed seed collection of twenty-four seeds, including seeds of quack grass, Canada thistle, mustard, etc. The collection is now on sale. Price 50c to farmers of this state, and 75c to non-residents. Send orders to Cashier, Minnesota Experiment Station, St. Paul, Minn.

The Experiment station at University Farm has never been able to discover a way of telling, before placing in an incubator or under a hen, whether an egg will hatch or if it will produce a rooster or pullet.

In setting hens, or in incubating artificially, the Minnesota Experiment station has found best results by selecting eggs of a uniform size, with smooth shell and as perfectly formed as possible.

CONVENTION OPENS

BOOSTERS PUT SHOULDERS TO THE WHEEL OF PROGRESS AT CROOKSTON MEETING.

OVER 1,000 DELEGATES PRESENT

General Productiveness of Northern Part of State Is Given Impetus—a Demand for Reapportionment.

Crookston, Minn. — At least one thousand enthusiastic boosters of northern Minnesota crowded the convention when the first session of the Crookston convention of the Northern Minnesota Development association began, and every man meant business.

Senator Stevens' declaration that the Republican state convention would incorporate in its platform a demand for reapportionment if the 30 counties of northern Minnesota made only reasonable demands, was everywhere commented upon. It was taken generally as marking a definite step onward, and it intensified the feeling of optimism the delegates carried into the convention hall.

The "get together" smoker, at which Senator Stevens' promise was made, was an optimism breeder in itself. There were more than 200 delegates in attendance and the keynote of the convention was struc kby the very first speaker, Al H. Jester of Bemidji, a former Minneapolis man, praised the booster and denounced the knocker. Representative L. W. Bills of Park Rapids, County Attorney Boyle of Cook and Senator Stevens talked for northern Minnesota. The three larger cities of the state were represented by Mac Martin of Minneapolis, Col. J. H. Davidson of St. Paul and Charles Mitchell of Duluth.

Minneapolis as a Buyer.

Martin emphasized the fact that Minneapolis wanted to buy from Crookston, rather than sell, and the spirit of the Minneapolis idea met with instant appreciation. Besides the Duluth and St. Paul delegations, in number at least. Minneapolis is making an unenviable showing.

Two hundred St. Paul representatives arrived. Against these busy crowds is matched an official delegation from Minneapolis numbering six persons—Richard Kilgore, C. B. McCall, Mac Martin, Frank L. Thresher, H. I. Dafoe and F. K. Fowler. Two or three commercial travelers and the newspaper men from Minneapolis were pressed into service and the Mill City delegation, by spreading gorgeous banners and making lots of noise, is trying to attract the attention that is due the city.

H. J. Maxfield, secretary of the Northern Minnesota Development association, presided at the first session of the convention, which began promptly at 10 o'clock. The session was opened by prayer delivered by Rev. E. W. Akers of Crookston, and he was followed by Mayor Allan J. McKinnon of Crookston and Charles J. Conger, president of the Polk County Development association, who welcomed the delegates to the city and county.

These addresses were followed by the appointment of committees.

HORSES DIE IN FIRE.

Twenty-Nine Animals Cremated In Early Blaze.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Dolly, the hoodoo horse of C. A. Keller, who runs a livery barn at 1428 Washington avenue north, was cremated with twenty-eight other horses in a fire that broke out about midnight and destroyed the barn before the fire department could arrive.

The loss is estimated by Mr. Keller at $15,000. Keller says there was little attempt to rescue the horses, the frame structure being a mass of flames before the arrival of engine company No. 14, the first to respond. Besides the horses, a hearse, several buggies and other vehicles were destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown. It was discovered by passers-by.

Dolly is the horse that was taken out a week ago by Charles Haley. Haley fell out of the buggy and received injuries from which he died. In the stable they had began to call Dolly the hoodoo horse.

ST. PAUL MERCHANT CALLED.

George R. Finch, Head of Big Dry Goods Firm Is Dead.

St. Paul. —George R. Finch, president of the wholesale dry goods house of Finch, Van Slyck & McConville, St. Paul, died at his home, 245 Summit avenue, from an attack of valvular heart trouble. Mr. Finch was born in Mount Vernon, O., Sept. 24, 1839, and was 71 years old. He had been connected with the present corporation and with its predecessor for forty-eight years.

SHOT BY HIRED MAN HE OUSTS.

Little Chance for Recovery of Farmer Living Near Dolliver, Minn.

Fairmont, Minnesota. — A shooting affray occurred on a farm near Dolliver Saturday. A farmer named McCloone had trouble with his hired man and discharged him. The young fellow returned with a revolver and, it is alleged, fired one shot at McCloone, it taking effect in his chin and lodging in the back of his head at the base of the brain. There is little chance for his recovery.

COUNTY OPTION FOES.

Special Convention of German-American Alliance of State to Be Held.

St. Paul.—An attack on county option is being planned by the directors of the German-American Alliance of Minnesota, which will hold a convention in St. Paul tomorrow for the purpose of discussing important political questions now before the people of Minnesota.

The alliance is composed of 157 societies scattered over thirty-eight counties of the state and has a voting strength of 27,000.

Each society will send one delegate and it is probable that about 175 German-Americans will be in attendance.

The convention is a special one and will meet in Mozart hall.

Julius Moersch, president, Louis F. Schintz, C. B. Schmidt, C. F. Bretdirt and Judge Hugo O. Hanft are the St. Paul members of the executive committee, which has a membership of fifteen.

"We are meeting for the purpose of discussing important political questions," said Mr. Moersch last night.

"County option is the principal one of these and the executive committee is unanimous in favor of having the alliance go on record as opposed to county option."

TIMOTHY MURPHY IS GUILTY.

Man Who Absconded With $1,250 Is Convicted.

St. Paul. — Captain Timothy Murphy, recently of the Volunteers of America, who claimed that he was kidnapped and robbed of $1,250 belonging to the organization on March 17 last, was found guilty, by a jury, of grand larceny in the first degree. The offense carries with it a punishment of one to ten years in the penitentiary.

The money Murphy is alleged to have stolen was collected during Tag day, the funds being raised to build a girls' rescue home.

Murphy disappeared and several days later returned, claiming that he had been confined in a cave by robbers who took the money.

St. Paul. — Seven years at hard labor in the state prison at Stillwater was the sentence pronounced by Judge Hallam in District Court on Timothy Murphy, former captain in the Volunteers of America, as a punishment for having embezzeled $1,250 March 21 last. The sum represented the major part of the fund collected by Volunteer workers on Tag day, March 17 last.

STOCK YARDS IN RUINS.

Chicago Great Western's Loss Estimated at $50,000.

Rochester, Minnesota. — Fire at 12:45 p. m. destroyed the stockyard buildings and yards of the Chicago Great Western railway.

Several boxcars were also destroyed and the loss is estimated at $50,000. The amount of the insurance is not known here.

Italian laborers, while cooking their dinner, started the fire. Nine hogs and two head of cattle burned to death.

MINNEAPOLITAN A SMUGGLER?

H. R. Lyons Is Held Charged With Concealing Jewelry.

New York, N. Y. — H. R. Lyon, who is said to be the president and vice president of several banks and corporations in Minneapolis, was held after an examination before Acting Surveyor George J. Smyth in the customs house on the charge of smuggling two pearl necklaces, a brooch and gold watch, and was sent to Hoboken in custody of an inspector to be araigned before United States Commissioner Russ.

HINCKLEY ENLARGES SCHOOLS.

Decides to Erect Eight-Room School House for New Courses.

Hinckley.—At a largely attended school election in Hinckley bonds were voted 183 to 106, to build an eight-room schoolhouse. The move was made necessary by increased attendance and to furnish room for a normal department and an agricultural and manual training department, Hinckley being one of ten of these schools in the state under the Putnam act.

GIBBONS BOUND OVER.

Slayer Is Arraigned at Hastings; Waives Reading of Complaint.

Hastings, Minnesota. — Patrick J. Gibbons, who murdered his wife and Rev. E. J. Walsh in South St. Paul Sunday evening, was arraigned before Police Justice A. F. Joneson at the courthouse. He pleaded not guilty and waived further hearing and was committed without bail to the next term of the district court, which convenes in November.

BUY WATER SUPPLY.

Stillwater.—At a special election in Stillwater the proposition to bond the city for $145,000 to buy the Stillwater Water company was passed by a large majority. The vote was 724 to 62. The total cast was very light. The city will assume control of the water company July 1.

The franchise of the water company expired April 30 and the city council failed to renew it.

KNOWN THE WORLD OVER

A Horse Lover.

James R. Keene, who is noted no less as a horseman than as a financier, said at a luncheon at his Cedarhurst residence:

"My love of horses has been a great comfort to me all my life. I have always kept my horses in their place, though. I haven't allowed them to interfere with my business.

"Some men carry their love of horses altogether too far. Such a one was a young father who stood, with his fair wife, before the crib of their first born.

"'Isn't he wonderful?' the young mother cried. 'Did you ever see anything like him at twenty-six months?'

"'Maternal love is all very well,' the father retorted, impatiently, 'but please don't try to compare it with a two-year-old thoroughbred.'"

The Business Instinct.

An English farmer, taking his little son with him, was going to the polling station to give his vote. On the way he met a friend on the same errand, and the two entered into conversation. After an excited and heated argument about the budget they came to blows. The poor lad was much frightened, and, seeing that his father was getting the worst of it, suddenly called out to him:

"Hit him in the watch, father; that'll cost him something!"

Question of Precedent.

"What makes you doubt that all men are born equal?"

"The absolute confidence of every parent that his baby is superior to any other in existence."

The candidacy of Albert Kaiser for state treasurer should meet with favor here. He is a resident of this senatorial district and it is likely that his county, Clear water, will be in this district for years. It is good politics and neighborly to stand by home men, especially when they are as well qualified as Kaiser. —Norman County Index.

We are pleased to note that there is likely to be a considerable falling off in the strength of the Socialist party in this town and a turning back into the good old Republican party. We shall be pleased to publish the names of the members of the Socialist Club, who will vote in our Republican caucus, this year. We gladly welcome their return to the fold, as a vote in the republican caucus means a pledge to support the republican ticket at the election.

Over at Elk River the farmers got to selling their milk and cream to a centralizer, who paid a good price until the creamery was compelled to shut down, says the Delano Eagle. No sooner had the padlock been put on the creamery door than the centralizer cut the price down several notches. Then a howl went up and several farmers proceeded to ship to another centralizer, but found they were up against a combination that was hard to beat. Now they are making an effort to get their creamery started again. —Thief River Falls News.

The Changes Of Time.

The issuing of Gov. Eberhart's proclamation calling a vote on the question of the division of Red Lake County placed us in a sort of reminiscent mood and we think of the time that the bill for the division of counties passed in the 1893 legislature. J. T. Knight of Red Lake Falls, and ye editor were members of the 3rd house of the legislature that winter, from the 1st of January to the 5th of March. Arthur Toupin, the present Register of the U. S. Land Office, was a pretty regular visitor to St. Paul, as was J. P. Johnson, of McIntosh.

What changes time does make! At that time one of the Thief River Falls papers contained a cartoon, representing Mr. Knight and ye editor, as making frantic efforts to get over a fence, chased by a bull-dog and an old woman with a broom, representing old Polk County. Under the cartoon read: "Get out of here with your county division schemes." Well the bill passed and to-day we find Thief River Falls using that same law in the division of Red Lake County. Again we say, "What changes time does make!"

At this time we wish to mention the fallacy of having a member, who has no pull or influence in the legislature, introduce a bill that is to be a general law. J. D. Knutson, of McIntosh, was our representative in the legislature and he was elected on the issue of county division, but Mr. Knutson did not introduce that bill for us, by a long shot. It was introduced by Hon. Wilson, a republican from Red Wing, Minn. Mr. Knutson could as well opposed the bill as supported it, for it would have become a law just the same.

Now if the lobbyist, who went down from Thief River Falls, two years ago, to have a general law passed for the removal of county seats, had gotten a member of the legislature interested in their bill, like A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, or some other member, who had a little influence, to introduce it; the bill would have passed and we would not be facing the problem of county division, to day. But when Hon A. L. Hanson introduced the bill, it was dead right then; and we knew it just as well then, sitting on our type stool at Sunbeam, as Thief River Falls did, after they had spent hundreds of dollars to find out.

Work For Yourselves.

It looks like bad management to us, to see the owner of a quarter section of fertile land in eastern Red Lake County going out to work by the day. There is no crop raised here that does not bring big returns. If a man prefers stock, there is plenty of pasture for them in summer and fine hay meadow for cutting hay for winter, and if you don't like stock, raise chickens. Mr. Ely, of Erie, told us a short time ago, that he had an income of as much as $90.00 per month from poultry raising alone, and at that time he had forty hens setting and two incubators running. Look at that for a business and an income, then guess at the earnings of the owner of land, who is working out by the day. Stop and consider these things, gentlemen. When you work for yourself on your own farm, give your work the same careful attention, that compulsion makes you give when you are working for others, and then notice the difference in your income.

Mark Twain said, "If you are good for anything, stay at home and work your way through the world. If you are not good for anything, go away from home and you will have to work."

The County Option Issue.

Mr. Seaborn Wright of Georgia, in his address before the county option convention in St. Paul, declared "County option is the stepping stone to prohibition. Secure county option and prohibition will surely follow.

This then makes the issue and declares the purpose of the Anti-Saloon League. State-wide prohibition is the ultimate end and aim of this organization, County option is merely the stepping stone.

The issue having thus been declared, the question that confronts us is, do the people of this state want to vote away the revenue now derived from the regulation of the liquor traffic? Do they want to vote out the regulated saloon and vote in the blind pig and bootlegger? Do they want to vote for the same conditions that prevail in Georgia, where after the revenue derived from the sale of liquor had been voted out, the number of "blind pigers," as shown by the report of the Collector of Internal Revenue, has increased to over 3000? Do they want to vote to establish the conditions that prevail in Maine where prohibition has become a by-law and a shame? Do they want to vote for conditions such as prevail in Oklahoma, where sixty thousand people have recently signed protesting the iniquity of this humbug called "prohibition?"

The question in the last analysis is simply this: Shall the sale of liquor be carried on lawfully or unlawfully? Shall we have the licensed, bearing a share of the burdens of taxation, or shall we have the outlaw and bootlegger, paying no taxes or licenses whatever.

Diamonds Under Water.

An imitation diamond is never so brilliant as a genuine stone. If your eye is not experienced enough to detect the difference, a very simple test is to place the stone under water. The imitation stone is practically extinguished, while a genuine diamond sparkles even under water and is distinctly visible. When possible, place a genuine stone beside the possible imitation under water, and the contrast will be apparent to the least experienced eyes.

Popular Jokes.

The most popular joke which has been published in any language in the history of the world is stated to be that which appeared in an obscure corner of the Punch almanac for 1845. It read, "Advice to persons about to marry—Don't!" It would be interesting to know who was its author. Another, founded on a similar subject, was the "Advice to persons who have 'fallen in love'—Fall out!" One of the most brilliant things that ever appeared in our contemporary was the brief dialogue between an inquiring child and his impatient parent: "What is mind?" "No matter." "What is matter?" "Never mind."—Westminster Gazette.

At last accounts, the body of the little Henry girl, who was drowned in Red Lake River some weeks ago, had not been recovered. This makes the loss doubly hard to bear for the grief stricken parents.

We have just completed the probating of the Ole Overum estate for Mrs. Overum, this week. Some delay was caused by the sudden death of Judge Swanson, which necessitated the republication of one notice, but now it is all closed up satisfactorily to Mrs. Overum.

The editor of the level towns has issued a notice to the settlers that they cannot prove up unless their notice is published in the paper nearest their land. We would suggest that he notifies Carl Hoven, of Kratka, for the first man, but Carl is O. K. as we are no kickers.

Jessie Labree, of Thief River Falls, was transacting business at Highlanding, yesterday and talking a little county division. We came very near trading horses with him, but his horse was on one side of the river and ours on the other, so we had to give it up.

WILEY POINTS TO COFFEE FRAUDS

Says Millions Are Stolen From Public Each Year.

CHEAP SUBSTITUTES HARMFUL

According to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, not 15 per cent of the coffee sold in the United States is of the quality guaranteed. Millions each year, says the doctor, are being stolen from the American people by the adulterators and misbranders who are selling their fraudulent products in the guise of the genuine article.

"One of the chief coffee frauds is in the classification of coffee," says Dr Wiley. "Nearly all coffee in the United States is sold as either Mocha or Java, while, as a matter of fact, fully 85 per cent of all American coffee imports are from Brazil. There is very little real Mocha or Java brought here now, for the Brazilian coffee has driven it from the market not only because of quality, but because it lies closer to hand. The American people are using a billion pounds of coffee a year at present, and the majority of it is the long berry Santos, which seems to have the demand behind it.

Ground Coffee at Fault.

"The great trouble with the coffee business is the deceit practiced in the preparation of so called ground coffee. The makers of these blends are in many instances grossly deceiving the public, for they are using the very cheapest grades of coffee berry—something they can purchase for from 8 to 4 cents per pound—and this, in addition to the husks, scrapings, dustings and broken bits, is ground up together and placed in cans with a fancy label and sold at from 35 to 40 cents a pound as a highly superior special brand with a lot more buncombe of the same sort. The facts of the case are just as I have said, and the curious feature of the illicit traffic is that first class Brazilian coffee is so cheap that it is a wonder that any one could find it worth while to adulterate it at all.

"In Europe there are some 1,000 factories that are turning out hundreds of millions of pounds of imitation coffee made from pits of olives, pulverized shells of nuts and some cereal husks all mixed together with molasses as a binder, pressed into molds and roasted. The resultant bean is sold as coffee. Since the enactment of the pure food law in this country there are not, I believe, any factories of that sort, but we have to exercise constant vigilance to keep those European frauds out. As a matter of fact, no one is really safe in buying ground or roasted coffee, for, while it is not permitted to import broken beans or siftings, somehow they do get into bags and—and they are not thrown away.

Coffee Absolutely Harmless.

"As to the statement so frequently and speciously made that coffee is injurious, that is largely exaggeration. Coffee taken to excess will do harm, so will milk or any other substance. There are veritable coffee and tea drunkards, and because these suffer from the abuse of nutritious foods must we class these foods as pernicious and dangerous? The business of trying to sell a cereal mixture by picturing the awful effects supposed to follow the use of coffee is all tommyrot. No one who knows anything of food values would want to start in the first place, and I personally have no patience with the charlatans who are disposing of cereal mixture at 8 or 9 cents a pound as a substitute for coffee. It is nothing less than a plain lie to claim that it is a substitute, for it positively has none of the essential principles of coffee, and to say it has on the label is plain misbranding. It is claimed that for a cent two cups of excellent genuine coffee can be made from the Brazilian berry, and this, being so, would seem to make the cereal imitation very dear indeed."

GOVERNMENT AID TO TRUSTS.

How the Conservation of Coal Lands Is Playing Into the Hands of the Coal Barons.

Any inquiry into the increased cost of living may not improbably disclose something akin to a government trust running along with the private trusts to corner the necessities of life, says a writer in the Alaska-Yukon Magazine. It is beginning to appear that as fast as the government unnecessarily ties up, corners and sequesters certain classes of natural resources it increases the monopoly of similar resources and thereby tends to increase the cost to the consumer of every pound of nails, every pound of coal and every foot of lumber.

The theory of the geological survey in the withdrawing of coal lands is that by so doing more of the coal in the mines now being worked will be saved. And yet the estimates of this same geological survey show that coal measures in the United States contain coal enough to last the 90,000,000 of this country for 2,722 years without drawing upon the fabulously rich coal deposits of Alaska. The geological survey has recently reported that during the past year 7,675,000 acres of coal lands were withdrawn, and the form of withdrawal affecting 9,000,000 additional acres was altered in a manner to increase the sale price over 500 per cent. On 3,136,000 acres of coal land the government sale price is now $191,490,000, which last year could have been purchased at $62,477,000. No one accuses the wicked coal barons of having a hand in this, nor is it known that they are smiling behind their hands, but when we are berating them for coal famines and the high price of coal few stop to think of the price that the people are paying for thus conserving these coal lands.

Naming Our Animals.

When we started the publication of THE SUNBEAM on a homestead, we also began to make use of some of the fine meadow and pasture land by keeping some stock, and the first thing that bothered us was to give the stock proper names, but we always waited until the name suggested its self. We bought our first cow of a man by the name of Christianson, so we called her "Christe." Her first calf seemed to never be satisfied with his pasture but wanted to travel all the time, so we called him "Gulliver." The next one had a fine star in his forehead, and that was his name. The next one came very near perishing in a snow drift, but we thawed him out and named him "Rescue," but the last one was the worst, and for a long time we could not think of a name for him, but when we turned him out this spring and he commenced to run and bawl and try to suck every other animal on the farm, he reminded us of a fellow that we saw in the last legislature, and we named him "Opsahl". If Christies next calf is a male, with a big head, and a small amount of brains, we have decided to name him Hon. Hanson. Oh, yes! We have a pig that seems inclined to gobble up everything in sight and we have named him "John Eastman King."

No More Free Adds.

We note, that the Minnesota State Fair is not geting their usual amount of free advertising in the Minnesota newspapers. Why? Because their propositions sent out to the newspapers this year were an insult to the intelligence, and past generosity of the newspapers of this state, to the Minnesota State Agricultural Society, and we for one promptly fired their proposition back to them, with the information that we would not consider it. When we see any of their "hogwash" published in our exchanges we always think that the publisher of that paper must be so hard up to earn $12.00 that he has lost all respect for himself, and the fraternity.

The Exclusiveness of Caste.

An English officer who some years ago was wounded in a battle in India and left lying all night among the native dead and wounded tells this story: "Next morning we spied a man and an old woman who came to us with a basket and a pot of water, and to every wounded man she gave a piece of jowree bread from the basket and a drink from her water pot. To us she gave the same, and I thanked heaven and her. But the Soobahdar was a high caste Rajput, and, as this woman was a Chumar, or of the lowest caste, he would receive neither water nor bread from her. I tried to persuade him to take it, that he might live, but he said that in our state, with but a few hours more to linger, what was a little more or less suffering to us—why should he give up his fate for such an object? No; he preferred to die unpolluted."

Dinehart Dead.

Clarence C. Dinehart, State Treasurer, died at St. Paul, June 8th, from the affects of an operation for appendicitis. He was the republican candidate for Congress from the second district.

He was serving his second term as state treasurer of Minnesota. Although only 33 years old at the time of his death, he was considered one of the most eminent politicians of this state.

Laziness travels so slowly that poverty soon overtakes him.—Franklin.

In Westminster Abbey.
